THE

HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD

OF

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

In the United States of America.

BEING

THE ORGAN OF THE BOARDS OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS, EDUCATION, FOREIGN MISSIONS, PUBLICATION, AND CHURCH EXTENSION.

VOL. XII.—1861.

Philadelphia:
PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF PUBLICATION, 821 CHESTNUT STREET.

TERMS.

The Home and Foreign Record is issued monthly in newspaper form at Fifty Cents a year for a single copy, and in pamphlet form at One Dollar. Fifty copies or more to one address, at Twenty-five Cents a year; and all churches of less than fifty families, at the same price, provided not less than twenty copies to one address are ordered. Payment in advance.

Address—"Peter Walker, 821 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia."

Postage.—In Pennsylvania, three cents per annum, and in all other States six cents, paid in advance at the office of delivery.

Packages of the Home and Foreign Record are delivered free of charge in New York, Baltimore, Louisville, Cincinnati, Wheeling, and Pittsburg.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The following action was taken at the General Assembly held in Cincinnati, in 1850, in regard to the "Home and Foreign Record."

Resolved, As the action of the last General Assembly has resulted in the establishment of the "Home and Foreign Record," that paper is hereby recommended, and the ministers and churches are urged to exert themselves to place it in every family, as the organ, indirectly, of the church, on many important subjects.

The Assembly held in Philadelphia, 1853,

Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors to endeavour to increase the circulation of the "Home and Foreign Record," the organ of the Boards of the church, in order that our churches may be better acquainted with their respective plans and operations, and be induced to contribute more liberally towards their support.

The Assembly held at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1855,

Resolved, That our ministers and elders be earnestly exhorted to secure a wider circulation to the "Home and Foreign Record," now published at so reduced a price as to make it accessible to the poorest members of our church.

The Assembly held at New York, in 1856,

Resolved, That while the Assembly finds so much cause for gratitude and encouragement in the prosperity and usefulness of this Board, and so much to commend in the energy and economy with which its affairs have been conducted, it cannot forbear to give utterance to the painful feelings which are caused by the fact that there are still very many churches which have not, as yet, contributed anything to the Colporteur funds of the Board, and that there are still so many families in our church who do not take either the "Home and Foreign Record," or "The Sabbath-School Visitor." The Assembly reiterates its earnest exhortations to our Ministers and Ruling Elders to endeavour to secure a more general circulation of these papers among the members of our church.

The Assembly held at Lexington, Kentucky, in 1857,

Resolved, That while the Assembly is highly gratified at the increasing patronage extended from every part of the church to the "Home and Foreign Record," and the "Sabbath-School Visitor," yet it regrets to learn that there is still a large proportion of its families and members who do not receive these periodicals. The Assembly would therefore earnestly recommend its ministers and sessions to use all practicable means to extend the circulation of these important papers in their respective vicinities.—Minutes, p. 25.

Moreover, on the first Sunday evening of every month, or on other occasions, and from time to time, let the people hear from their minister a detailed account of our various Foreign Missions in succession, with a description of the religious condition of the people, and the beginning and progress of the church's work among them. That to this end our ministers take pains themselves carefully to read the "Home and Foreign Record," and the "Foreign Missionary," so far as to know what is being done by our missionaries; and that they also further the circulation, and encourage the reading of these publications in their congregations. P. 21.

And the Assembly held at Indianapolis, Indiana, in 1859,

Resolved, That the Assembly would especially commend the "Home and Foreign Record" to a more general patronage throughout the church; trusting that in its diligent perusal, members of the communion might catch more of the spirit of missions and of Christian benevolence so richly pervading its columns. They also recommend the "Sabbath-School Visitor" as a most excellent publication to be circulated through our Sabbath-schools, and among the children of our charge.—Minutes, p. 545.

A SEASONABLE ADDRESS.

We insert in the Home and Foreign Record the following address of the Synod of Chicago to the churches under their care, because we consider it timely, and well adapted to awaken an interest and to call forth the prayers and benevolence of all our churches in every section of our country. Will the pastors allow us respectfully to suggest that it be read by them to their people, if any suitable opportunity should occur. We will only add, that the liabilities of the Board of Domestic Missions are unusually large, and that the treasury is at present exhausted. In view of these facts, and the extraordinary financial condition of the country, we trust that every true friend of the cause will feel the necessity of doing what he can to aid the Board in carrying forward the important work confided to its care.

The Committee to whom the several papers were referred in regard to the matter of Contributions, through our several Boards, to the cause and work of God, on the part of our churches, offer the following minute for adoption, as an address to the churches:

The Synod of Chicago desire to address an earnest and faithful word to the officers and members of the several congregations under our care, in the name of the Lord Jesus, by whose authority we are met and acting as a court of his house. It relates to the matters of your work for him, in the bounds of your own congregation, of this Synod, and your organic connection with the aggressive movements of the church over this country and throughout the world.

We desire to bring briefly and distinctly before you the principles on which rests the duty of giving to the general work of converting men to God, every one according to his ability, and according to his sense of obligation and gratitude, and in appreciation of the gift of life to his own soul.

We beg solemnly to remind you that the ordinance of giving to the good work of God is not one of human authority, nor of mere expediency, nor of merely benevolent feeling, but an institute of worship for the cultivation of Christian graces. As an act of worship, it is paid to God through Jesus Christ, and for the glory of his great name; that it is therefore as truly a duty and a privilege in the case of every human being who bears the name of Jesus Christ, as prayer or praise, or commemorating his dying love.

Further, the money given for this work must be these consecrated offerings of God's people in worship and faithful love, in order that they may be made effectual in promoting the spiritual good of men. It is only the vital power of the piety and faith of God's children, operating in this way, and followed by the prayers of the hearts that offer in love, and by the watchful labour of the church, that can be of any avail in spreading the gospel of salvation.

We ask you, then, dear friends, to look at what you have been doing in this matter, in the light of God's love to you, and the Saviour's sacrifices for you, and then come and lay upon his altar, for the good of the souls that are perishing, what you think you would give if you felt his eye upon you, and were telling him, in significant acts, how you feel towards him, and towards your brother, to whose imperiled soul he points, as he reminds you—Freely ye have received, freely give. Surely you cannot mock him by saying you cannot give, when he asks you only to give as you can, and as you love. Surely you cannot mock him by offering him what has cost you nothing, what is no expression of gratitude, nor manifestation of love.

Further, you have been receiving, from the exercise of these very graces in other Christian hearts, very large amounts, year by year, for the promotion of your own home work. We are constrained to say, that we have not been stirring ourselves up to do more for ourselves, and thereby allow these streams of consecrated bounty to flow on to others, more in need than we, and have not bestirred ourselves to swell these streams, that we too may have a share in the blessing coming from those that are ready to perish.

We desire further to remind you of the way God has been pleased to pour his bounties into your bosom, filling your every garner with plenty, after teaching you, by years of withholding, how absolutely it all comes from him. Have you no heart for thank-offerings? Have you no expressions of confidence in him for the future? And have you no hand to stretch out, filled with what he has put in it, to those portions of our church and country, on which he has laid his hand, as he did on you, a year ago?

We ask you, then, dear friends, to attend promptly, and henceforth regularly, to this, which we feel to be the call of God, coming from his word, and sanctioned by his adorable providence; and take measures to put your every hand to every work of the church, whereby having blessed you, she asks you to join hands with her in blessing others. Do not content yourselves with putting forward your own private schemes and business with the extraordinary bounties of the year, without a corresponding advance in all your offerings for the work of God.

To this end, we direct that this our word of exhortation be publicly read in all the churches under our spiritual guardianship; and that all ministers and church sessions take immediate and effectual measures to have the views and principles of it practically carried out; while every one, old and young, rich and poor, shall be brought to share in the blessedness of doing like Christ, for Christ's sake.

A HIGHLY INTERESTING REPORT.

S——, Minnesota, November 30, 1860.

Dear Brethren—As three months of my labours as an itinerant in the Presbytery of Saint Paul, have transpired, I now send you my report. The duties required of me are:

First. By the Board. To do two things, viz. To visit the mission churches, and urge upon them to take collections for the Board; to do more for their stated supply, or pastor, and ask less from the Board. Also, to explore the country in search of new fields of labour.

Secondly. By the Presbytery of Saint Paul. To secure the donation of church property, in town lots, in our growing towns. These are to be deeded to me in trust, for the first Old-school Presbyterian church that shall be organized in the place.

I have attended to all these duties, so far as I have been able, and have wholly devoted my time and energies to them. In my visits to the mission churches, I have urged them to take up a collection for the Board, as a matter of vital importance to their prosperity. The manner of taking the collection I left to themselves. As we are seeking to introduce a plan of systematic beneficence, I think it is not best to interfere with this. I urged upon them, that before making application to the Board for assistance, they should do all in their power to raise their minister's salary themselves; that it was desirable that they should become self-sustaining as soon as possible, so that the Board might be enabled to help other places. I insisted on the duty of giving, as an act of worship; that they should afford every person who attended upon the means of grace with them, an opportunity to give, however small the donation might be; and that what they promised to their minister, they should promptly pay.

I hope I have been able to awaken considerable interest on these subjects in some of our churches. I have been kindly received in all the churches I have visited; and my plain talks on these subjects have been listened to with interest, and received, as I hope they were delivered, in a spirit of kindness. Although the immediate results may not be very manifest, yet I have no doubt but in the end they will be good.

My time has not permitted me to visit all the churches, and at the same time visit these parts where we were aware of openings for missionary labour. That you may have a definite idea of our churches, I will state my impression of them.

Churches visited.

1st. Saint Anthony. This church is in the midst of building a house of worship. They hope to complete it and have it paid for during the winter. This is a working little church, led by a working, able, and faithful minister, who was lately installed pastor for half his time. You may rely upon Saint Anthony soon becoming self-sustaining.

2d. Prescott. The day I visited this church, the weather was very unfavourable, and consequently there were but few out. A considerable number of the members of this church are farmers in good circumstances, and ought to be able to do a good deal for their minister. I fear they have not been as prompt in this matter as they ought to have been. I expect to visit them again. I intend making an arrangement with the brethren, to go occasionally for me to some destitute region, while I spend a Sabbath in their churches. This will afford me an opportunity to become familiar with their churches, and to ascertain what they are doing. Brother Thayer is an earnest, self-sacrificing man, well received in his church and the community generally.

3d. Vermillion. This is one of brother Pratt's churches. Its members are principally farmers, but have been a good deal embarrassed with debt for their lands, and opening their farms. They will soon be over this, and will then have the ability to do a good deal for the gospel. I secured from them the promise of five acres of ground for the site of a parsonage.

4th. Forest. This is brother Pratt's other church, and is situate in what is called the Big Woods. Its members are all in very moderate circumstances; for it requires a great deal of time to open a farm in the timber lands. They are a good people; and though poor, the church may be regarded as a prosperous one. Brother Pratt's faithfulness and diligence are well spoken of in his congregations. I should be glad to have been able to do something more definite in this visitation. If I could see the churches just before they make their efforts to raise the salary of their minister, and they take up their collection at that time for the Board, more would doubtless be accomplished. I could then urge upon them a settlement for the past year with their minister, which is often neglected.

Missionary explorations.

As to the subject of exploring, I have laboured in it with all my might. There are several things I kept in view in this matter. I have sought to hunt up our people who are scattered abroad over this land; have preached to them; encouraged them to faithfulness in the cause of the Redeemer; and have tried to enlist their energies in building up our beloved church in their community.

I have tried to make my visits in the families where I stopped, pastoral visits, and have preached wherever I was able to collect together a congregation. On entering a village, I immediately circulate an appointment for preaching that night. For this purpose I have posters prepared, which I can fill up in a few minutes. I generally have congregations numbering more than twenty-five on week-day evenings, and my Sabbath congregations are always large. I have tried to preach the plain gospel truths, that the seed scattered may be the good seed. At the close of my sermon, I usually tell my business, and inquire for Presbyterians; and if I hear of any, I visit them the next day at their homes.

I have travelled eight hundred and fifty miles, besides the distance from house to house, in calling upon different families; and have preached thirty-six times. I have found some of our people in affliction; and it has been my privilege to speak to them of the precious consolations of the gospel. One aged grandmother told me, that in one month she had buried four grandchildren, during the past summer; three of them in early childhood, the fourth a promising youth of twelve years, who died triumphing in Jesus. So triumphant was his death, that an infidel, standing by his bed, was led to exclaim, "I will go home now, and burn Tom Paine. A religion that can enable a boy to die so, must be true!" I have found others who had not seen a minister of their own denomination for four years; and they could scarcely express their joy at meeting me. Among others, I have met former members of Drs. Spotswood's, Boardman's, Sprague's, Krebs', and Rockwell's churches.

I will mention here a few of the most important points I have visited, where we ought to have men and churches.

1st. Alexandria. This is the county-seat of Douglas county. By the travelled road, it is one hundred and seventy miles from Saint Paul—is the half-way point between the Mississippi and Red rivers. It is in the midst of one of the most beautiful regions in Minnesota—a region beautified by lakes, forests, and prairies, intermixed in delightful proportions. A few members of Dr. Spotswood's church have settled there. They brought with them a library, donated by our Board, and at once established a Sabbath-school, in which they teach the Catechism. We have seven members in that neighbourhood, and must have a man for the place. We want a pioneer man, who is willing to come to Minnesota for the glory of God and the salvation of souls, and to endure hardships as a good soldier of Christ. Such an one would meet with a hearty welcome from the people of Alexandria, and could be very useful to our church in that region. There is a vast scope of country, extending from the Minnesota river to the British possessions, as beautiful and fertile as can be found in Minnesota, and which is being filled up with great rapidity. The climate of that region is as mild as any portion of the state. It is the highest portion of the level lands of North America. The water from about Alexandria runs into the Mississippi; but a little beyond, the streams run into the Red river of the North, and thence into Hudson's Bay.

I secured the donation of church sites, of considerable prospective value, in Breckinridge, Georgetown, and Alexandria, for future organizations of our denomination. These are all destined to be places of considerable importance in that region. I regard it as vastly important, that wherever we have a nucleus for a church in that new region, we should seek to preoccupy the ground; and to do this, we must be in a hurry, for other denominations are ever on the alert. The denomination which is first in any field, has vastly the advantage of all others.

2d. Okaman. This point is in Waseca county, about twenty miles from Saint Peter. After sermon on Sabbath morning, I requested all who were Presbyterians by education, to remain, and quite a large number did so. I inquired for the names of families, and ascertained that there were at least twelve in the community who preferred the Presbyterian church. I at once proceeded to organize a church. Seven members entered the organization, and as many more will probably unite soon. They elected two ruling elders, who were ordained on Monday evening, in the presence of as many as could be crowded into the room. This is a good field, and they are anxious to get a minister.

3d. Another place where a minister is wanted is Prairieville. This is in brother Chapin's field; but he is very anxious to give it up, as it is too far away for him to attend to. It is in a beautiful farming country.

There are other points, though not so important as these, which ought to be occupied by us. But to speak of them in detail, would make this report too long.

Importance of carrying on the work.

I am well convinced of the great importance of our church pushing forward, with all possible speed, our enterprises; that we ought to become aggressive, and seek to establish our posts everywhere. It depends on our church, to a very great extent, to maintain in Minnesota the distinctive doctrines of Calvinism. The Congregationalists in this territory form most of her organizations on a union basis, making prominent only those doctrines upon which all evangelical denominations agree, and concealing the distinctive doctrines of our Confession of Faith. Some of their ministers are Calvinistic, but the great mass of them are not so. The same is true of the Baptist denomination. The more educated portion of them are Calvinists; yet the great mass of their ministers are uneducated, and are Arminian. If the great distinctive doctrines of grace are to be maintained in this land, it devolves upon our church, to a very great extent, to maintain them. I wish I could make the whole church see and feel this as I have done, since I have been travelling; then I am sure the men and means would be furnished for occupying every important point in this great state.

Yours, fraternally, J. C. C.

A SOLEMN AND TENDER SCENE.

W—— S——, Florida, October 30, 1860.

My Dear Brethren—It is again time for me to send up a quarterly report of my labours. It is, I trust, with sincere gratitude to God that I record his goodness in so richly blessing my humble endeavours for the spread of his gospel. If you remember, in my last report I spoke of a new field that had been opened to me in Lowndes county, Georgia, forty-five miles from home. Since then I have preached there occasionally, and at one time held a meeting of several days, and on Sabbath administered the Lord's supper to some hungering souls, who had not once enjoyed this privilege for twenty-five years. Eleven persons united on examination and by certificate with our Hamilton county church, and there was manifest evidence that the Spirit was at work in the hearts of many of that large congregation, who, with upturned, eager, and tearful faces, listened to the wonderous story of the cross. One aged servant of Christ, who, for twenty-three years before his removal from Carolina, had been an Elder in the church, and now, for the first time in twenty-five years, had enjoyed Presbyterian preaching, and who from extreme old age was hard of hearing, left his seat, and tottering forward, stood by my side in the sacred desk in order to hear more distinctly, and when the last hymn was being sung, his voice rang out above all the rest—a thing which had never been known before. O it was "good to be there!" Soon after that I held a protracted meeting at Midway Station, during which nine of the most promising young people of the community were admitted by examination into the church, and several others are still under serious impressions—inquiring the way and entreating an interest in the prayers of God's people. O my brethren, can you not prevail on some labourer in the Lord's vineyard to come and occupy with me, or rather, relieve me of a part of this most interesting and important work. My labours are so arduous, my field so extended, and the health of my wife so precarious, that it is with fear and trembling that I leave her for these long expeditions; and still, I cannot disappoint my people, when their anxiety for preaching is so great. We have many trials and hardships to encounter, and many more blessings to be grateful for. Since my last report, my dear wife lay at the very verge of the grave for weeks, with disease of the heart, but the Lord in great mercy heard my prayers, and has raised her up once more to us. She has indeed been a help-meet to me this year, and has made already by her own endeavours more than my salary will amount to. Continue to pray for us, dear brethren, that the Lord will be with us, and bless my poor efforts for the spread of his kingdom.

Yours in Christ, A. E. C.

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

Beloved young men, bear with us in addressing you again on the subject of preparation for your holy calling. Impressed with the vast interests which cluster around you, as the future ambassadors of Christ in one of the noblest churches on earth, we cannot refrain from bringing to your attention, through this medium, anything which bears upon your improvement, or that may promote your equipment for the great and glorious work which the remaining decades of this century shall open up to you. Your attention has been already called to the su'ject of delivery, and, in general terms, speaking, as distinguished from reading, was commended. This advice, however, is too general to be of much practical service. It is one thing to speak, and quite another thing to speak well. It is one thing to have a mouth, and voice, and hands, and eyes, and quite another thing to employ all these effectively in the delivery of a sermon. In one word, it is one thing to have faculties, and another thing to cultivate them. The importance of the latter is well set forth in the following speech of Dr. Guthrie's, delivered at a meeting held lately in the hall of the New College, Edinburgh, the object of which was to impress upon the students the necessity of devoting some attention to the study of the art of Elocution in their professional studies.

Dr. Guthrie said, he was sorry to see so few students present—not that he was going to say anything special or worth remembering—but because it indicated to him that they were not at all impressed with the importance of this subject. He himself had very different ideas, and when he was a student he walked for three winters from Buccleuch street to Greenside to attend an elocution teacher. They might say that he was a poor specimen of the result; but, notwithstanding, he mentioned the fact. He believed that, however light the shot might be, it would be the better of a good discharge of powder. Preaching was a very difficult thing. The matter they preached was of such vital importance, both for this world and the next, that they should use every means which they possibly could reach to preach with the greatest possible benefit. Some of them might perhaps think that it was an easy thing to write sermons, but sermons that were very lazily written were very little worth reading. The very best matter ought to be given in the best possible manner as regarded delivery. Some perhaps might think that did not need anything of that kind—some would say that it would be quite enough if they presented the naked truth—the unadorned truth. Would they tell him anything that God had not adorned? Would they show him a flower or a shell that He had not adorned? There was no man who had got a pair of eyes on the outside of his head, and understanding in the inside of it, but, if he would go abroad in nature, would find that God, in everything he had made, gratified the tastes that he had implanted in man. It was a most interesting fact that the lily, the primrose, the rose, and the jessamine, would all have subserved the great purposes of their being without any of those rich, varied, and beautiful colours with which God has adorned them. If they took a proper view of this subject, they would use every means that God had given them for setting the truth before the people in an interesting, attractive, and telling style. They had tastes, but they required to be cultivated. Look at the sublimities of those heavens, and yet there were men who scarcely ever raised their eyes or elevated their thoughts to them from one year's end to the other. He remembered once pointing out to a woman one of the loveliest scenes he ever saw—a glen with a green sward on the river side, and the mountain glowing in the setting sun—but her reply was, "Aye, it's a fine place for bleaching claes." They must, therefore, endeavour to cultivate and meet the taste which God had put into the human mind. One of the greatest difficulties with which a preacher need to contend was the familiarity of the people with the great truths which he announced; and unless they took the difficulty into account, and endeavoured to overcome it by an attractive style of preaching, they would not do their duty. They might fancy that they did not need those aids and assistances which Cicero, and Demosthenes, and Chatham, and all these men thought they needed. He did not want them to be players, but he wanted them to be as attentive to elocution as the players; and he might here remark how much the aid of good and easy speaking was studied in the construction of theatres, for he had spoken three times behind the foot lights with more comfort than he had ever done in his life. He remembered a friend of his, a learned man, who boasted that he would never be influenced by mere rhetoric or acting. He went to the theatre, and the play was the "Heart of Mid-Lothian," with Mrs. Siddons acting the part of Jeanie Deans, when she was pleading for the life of her sister Effie. He (Dr. Guthrie) was told that this learned man, a philosopher and scholar, when a friend beside him looked round, was seen blubbering like a child. If this was the case in such circumstances, and if such the power of rhetoric, should they not be accomplished in that art, and consecrate it to the Lord Jesus Christ. They need not tell him that they might speak well without labour and trouble. Did they think that Jenny Lind, who warbled like a Swedish nightingale, came out of her mother's womb and began singing? No; it was the result of enormous labour. This was true of the art of speaking as well as of the art of singing, as well as of any other art. God gave them the elements; but, as Sir Joshua Reynolds said, in his admirable "Lectures on Painting," which he would recommend them all to read, "God gives success to man but as the reward of labour." Dr. Candlish had said, with perfect truth, that the only parties in the world who could dispense with elocution were children and savages. He had often admired the grace with which children spoke; and he remembered of seeing a woman in the High Street, who had received what he would advise none of them to receive—a glass of whiskey. The whiskey was in, and the passion was out, and she was a savage; but she was an orator such as he had scarcely ever seen the equal of; and he remembered saying to some of his brethren beside him, "Now, if you could speak like that, you would tell upon the world." Dr. Guthrie then proceeded to give some instances of the effect of bad elocution. He remembered hearing a lay-preacher in England, who preached remarkably well, but he had some strong English provincialisms which fairly turned him (Dr. Guthrie) at last. He was discoursing upon the words "heirs of grace," and, like many people in England, he left the H out where it should be, and put it where it ought not to be. He was preaching with great power, and suddenly exclaimed, "Noah was the hair." Only think of talking of the patriarch as an "hair." Not long ago, he was listening to an admirable lecture upon the "physiology of the ear," from a learned and well-informed man; but it was extraordinary to hear him saying, "Now, ladies and gentlemen, observe that the 'hair' is the medium through which the sounds reach the 'hear.'" He meant to say, that the air was the medium through which the sound reached the ear. He then referred to the subject of gesticulation, and said that, when he first began to preach, he felt his arms as a sort of incumbrance. They must unlearn all this awkwardness, and learn what was easy and natural. He alluded to the case of Whitefield. A discourse from an ordinary preacher was not very interesting the first time; if repeated a second time, it was wearisome; the third time it would be an awful bore; and the fourth time, it would be intolerable. But a man heard Whitefield preach the same discourse seventeen times; but such was the perfection of that man's oratory, and so perfectly natural was it, that the man liked it the seventeenth time far better than the first time. A man's manner had far more to do with his success in life than most people supposed. A good manner in society, a good manner in business, and a good manner in their profession, was of immense consequence. He set the greatest value on learning, and it was impossible that they could have too much of it; but unless a man was able to deliver himself well of what he had got to say, it went almost for nothing. The Free Church stood upon her principles; but they might depend upon it, that if the Free Church had one foot on her principles, she had another on her preaching. All classes of society, from the lowest to the highest, manifested a great difference in their education; and if their church was to hold its position—if the pulpit was to retain its influence—it must rise along with society.

What Dr. Guthrie says of the Free Church is true of our own. She must stand on her principles and preaching.

THE VOICE OF GOD UTTERED IN NATIONAL CHASTISEMENTS.

The calls which God makes upon his people for special service and special sacrifice are sometimes given through afflictive providences, whereby he seems to diminish their ability to perform the service, or render the sacrifice required. When he called Abraham to serve him, he called him to abandon his home and kindred. In calling his apostles to the special service of the apostleship, the Saviour called them to a special sacrifice, even the surrender of their earthly all. They left all, and followed him. In the former clause, we have the sacrifice; in both, the service. The servants of Christ, whether apostles or disciples, whether ministers or private members, are to follow Christ, only on the condition that they deny themselves, take up their cross, and follow him. There is service in the sacrifice, and the sacrifice is in order to further and more efficient and signal service.

This principle God sometimes carries out upon a large scale. He sometimes does upon the grand theatre of national affliction, what he does within the circumscribed limits of individual and family chastisement. He does what a good husbandman does in his vineyard. He prunes off a redundant vegetation, that the branch may bear more fruit. He commands the clouds that they rain no rain upon it, and gives order to the heavens to withhold the dew. Or, summoning to his service the bee, or the locust, or the tiniest microscopic insect, he commissions them against the objects of his displeasure. Again, he encompasses his goings with clouds, and from the impenetrable darkness of his pavilion, he perplexes the counsels of those who sit at the helm of state, and by turning the wisdom of the wise into foolishness, and overturning the thrones of ancient dynasties, and shaking the pillars which support national constitutions and federal compacts, he asserts his authority upon the footstool as the KING of kings, and LORD of lords.

The voice of all such providences is unequivocal. In them, and by them, God would arrest men in their phrenzied rush after other gods. He would remind them that there is a Ruler in the heavens, whose laws reach, in their obligations, to the sons of men, whether in their individual or their national capacity. He would have them learn that his claims cannot be ignored with impunity by any man, or by any organization of men. He would admonish them of past offences and incumbent duties. He would call upon them to bring sacrifices to the altar of his service, and to put away from them those altars of mammon, before which they have sacrificed the firstlings of their flocks, on which they have burned the fat of fed beasts. He would call men to offer sacrifice to the only living and true God, by withholding from them the means of sacrificing to idols.

What then is the counsel of wisdom, when the trumpet peals of God's providential voice are ringing, as they now are, in the ears of the church, through his dealings with our beloved country? Is it that the church become more frugal of her offerings before the throne of her Lord and King? Is it that where she gave her thousands, she should now give her hundreds? Ah, no! God forbid that such interpretation should be put upon the present dispensation of his sore displeasure. If he has afflicted for the parsimony of the thousands, what may we expect when the liberality of the church is shrivelled up to the mammon-like dimensions of the hundreds or the tens? "Bring forth the tithes, and lay them at my feet," is the voice of that providence whereby God is this day shaking the foundations of this republic. If we would avert the ruin, if we would advance the best interests of our country, if we would promote the glory of God in the advancement of the kingdom of his Son; if we would secure the light of an offended Father's countenance, let us, as a church, bring forth our best offerings and lay them upon the altar of his service. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." * * * "And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of Hosts." Let the church and the nation hear these words. Retrenchment and parsimony in the service of God, invite a curse; liberality towards His house, invites the Divine blessing.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

ADDITIONAL CLASSES IN THE FACULTIES OF ARTS.

At a meeting of the Free Synod of Lothian, held on the 6th of November, 1860, Dr. Begg moved the adoption of the following overture:

"It is humbly overtured by the Free Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, that the General Assembly shall consider whether it is not desirable and practicable to arrange that in all the colleges of Scotland, a full curriculum in arts shall be conducted at morning and evening classes, so that young men may take degrees in arts, and be prepared for entering the theological classes, without abandoning their secular occupations."

He wished to explain the drift of this overture. They all felt that a great practical obstacle connected with the maintenance of unendowed churches, was the difficulty of getting a suitable class of efficient, well-trained ministers. He did not intend by this overture to interfere at all with the existing machinery for the purpose of raising a well-educated race of ministers of the word, but he wished to open up, if possible, or at least to press upon the General Assembly, the question whether we could open up, through the means to which he had referred, a way for well-educated men entering the ministry, without requiring them, at twelve or fourteen years of age, to commit themselves to becoming ministers, in such a way that they had great difficulty in retracing their steps. For an eight years' course, all who looked forward to the ministry might be expected to begin at twelve or fourteen years of age, the result of which was, that they abandoned other occupations, and devoted themselves during the first four years to the course of arts and to the study of preliminary branches, and then four years more to the study of theology. It seemed to him that it would be extremely desirable, whilst continuing that system, to endeavour to arrange it so that the first four years might be carried on by young men, who, at the end of that time, might make their election whether they should enter into the theological hall or not. They would make that election with far more deliberation, and with a better ripened judgment, at the end of that period than at the beginning of it. And if they had a large class of young men educated in the curriculum of arts, the country, instead of losing, would gain prodigiously by the result. Then, at the end of their theological course, if any of these young men did not prove suitable as ministers, instead of being, as many preachers were at present, incapable of doing any other work, and thus left in a helpless position, they would thus by these preliminary exercises have something to fall back upon, if they were found unqualified for the office of the ministry. In connection with this, it was significant to mark some of the recent changes or projected changes in the Universities. For example, he found that in London University there were arrangements made for the very object he had in view, and they were acting in a most successful way. In that college there were thirty-three professors teaching from six in the evening till nine; four professors of Latin, four of Greek, four of French, and so on. By the aid of these classes, young men could at the same time carry on their labours, and make themselves eligible for degrees in arts, in precisely the same way as if they had attended during the day. One banking-house alone sent forty or fifty young men; and the number of young men studying in connection with these classes had risen from one hundred and sixty-five in 1857–8, to five hundred and forty-nine in 1859–60. What would prevent the same thing to be done here? Their own University was admirably situated for this purpose. There were a great many class-rooms supplied at the expense of the public, which were shut after five o'clock, whereas all these class-rooms might be used from six to nine o'clock; and if the present professors were found to have their hands full, there was no reason why additional professors might not be supplied for the purpose of teaching those classes.

At Glasgow there was a most admirable opportunity of accomplishing the same object; but the opportunity might be entirely lost in connection with certain projected arrangements, unless public opinion was immediately raised upon the subject. At the east end of Glasgow the present buildings stood, some of them as old as before the period of the Reformation, and around them thirty-six acres of ground in the densest part of Glasgow, and it was proposed to sell the whole of that property, and let the ground be covered over with the houses, and the whole of these class-rooms converted into whatever purposes the purchaser might think proper. The question seemed to him to be, whether there should be a college in the west end of Glasgow. The wealthy men of that city were amply able to provide a college for the west end of Glasgow, and they should be encouraged to devote their money to that important object. At the same time, there was no reason why the present college buildings, with that great opening in the east end, should not be made available for the young men of that city—most active and vigorous young men—to accommodate them in the evening. In Aberdeen the two colleges had been united; whereas, by the plan he had suggested, the young men of that city might have been enabled at Marischal College to go through a full curriculum of arts. By this means, the churches might get a large accession of students of theology. He cordially concurred with many of the plans recently proposed for the improvement of their Universities; but he thought it was of great importance that the national mind should be turned decidedly in the direction of making their old Universities more available for the purpose of a universally higher education of the people. He looked at the matter in a practical point of view, and he wished the church to have a permanent supply of first-class ministers—ministers who should be men of business habits, and accustomed to the world, and who would manage their Deacons' Courts as well as men thoroughly devoted to the work of the ministry. He concluded by moving the adoption of the overture.

After some discussion, this overture was adopted, and will come before the next General Assembly of the Free Church.

CHILDREN.

It is a mistake to think that children love the parents less who maintain a proper authority over them. On the contrary, they respect them more. It is a cruel and unnatural selfishness that indulges children in a foolish and hurtful way. Parents are guides and counsellors to their children. As a guide in a foreign land, they undertake to pilot them safely through the shoals and quicksands of inexperience. If the guide allows his followers all the liberty they please; if, because they dislike the constraint of the narrow path of society, he allows them to stray into holes and precipices that destroy them, to slake their thirst in brooks that poison them, to loiter in woods full of wild beasts or deadly herbs, can he be called a sure guide? And it is the same with our children. They are as yet only in the preface, or, as it were, in the first chapter of the book of life. We have nearly finished it, or are far advanced. We must open the pages for these younger minds. If children see that their parents do not find fault without reason; that they do not punish because personal offence is taken, but because the thing in itself is wrong—if they see that, while they are resolutely but affectionately refused what is not good for them, there is a willingness to oblige them in all innocent matters—they will soon appreciate such conduct.

If no attention is paid to their rational wishes; if no allowance is made for youthful spirit; if they are dealt with in a hard and unsympathizing manner, the proud spirit will rebel, and the meek spirit be broken. Our stopping to amuse them, our condescending to make ourselves one in their plays and pleasures, at suitable times, will lead them to know that it is not because we will not, but because we cannot attend to them, that at other times we refuse to do so. A pert or improper way of speaking ought not to be allowed, Clever children are very apt to be pert; and if too much admired for it, and laughed at, become eccentric and disagreeable. It is often very difficult to check our own amusement, but their future welfare should be regarded more than our present entertainment. It should never be forgotten that they are tender plants committed to our fostering care—that every thoughtless word, or careless neglect, may destroy a germ of immortality—"that foolishness is bound up in the heart of a child"—and that we must ever, like watchful husbandmen, be on our guard against it. It is indeed little that we can do in our own strength. But if we are conscientious performers of our part—if we earnestly commend them in faith and prayer to the fostering care of their Father in Heaven—to the tender love of Him, the Angel of whose presence goes before them, and who carries the lambs in his bosom—we may then go on our way rejoicing, for he will never leave nor forsake those who trust in him.

ADVANTAGES OF COLLEGE LIFE.

But what is the precise object of collegiate education? What the mission to which, especially in this our own land, and in the nineteenth century, colleges should feel themselves called?

The time has passed when men must resort to the halls of universities in order to get knowledge. With a teeming press, abounding libraries, improved schools, and habits of self-culture, much can be learned everywhere; and in special seminaries devoted to art, science, or letters, more perhaps of a given subject can be gained than in college. But where, except within the walls of a good college, can young men, imbued with a taste, some for one branch of a liberal culture, some for another—be so brought together, that their several views and tastes shall be enlarged, and a comprehensive, catholic spirit of scholarship be engendered?—a spirit that pursues enthusiastically its own chosen path, yet respects and appreciates those who may travel by other roads?

Where else can we keep alive a reverence for the learning of the past, combined with a taste for the science and literature of the present—so that the old and new learning, as they have been sometimes called, shall not be at war—so that the speculative and elegant culture of early days shall not come into violent and fatal collision with the positive and practical science of our own time?

Where else can we fuse, and as it were, crystalize into one great and beautiful whole, a love for letters, a reverence for theology, a wise interest in philosophy, a devoted zeal for advancing and beneficent physical science? And then again, through what other agency can we train and educate men with whom, as they move forth, ardent but unfriended spirits that are generously and laboriously toiling, in solitude, after the blessings of knowledge and self-culture, can measure themselves—men who will form a high standard, short of which no studious, thoughtful, aspiring mind will be willing to fall?

So with moral and social culture. We can make energetic, practical men elsewhere—elsewhere we can infuse public spirit, and a fervid Christian philanthropy. But where, except in seminaries devoted to a high general cultivation, can we avoid the danger of making partial, one-sided, or bigoted actors in the great work of social and religious progress. Where else can we teach the young, that lesson so often forgotten, that it is not the exclusive privilege of any one agency to exalt and bless the world. That in order to the strength, stability, and improvement of our times, we need the united aid of good laws, upheld by good morals; of enlarged and wide-spread education, of prevailing temperance, of a refined and elegant culture, of free and universal industry—the whole to be crowned and hallowed, animated and informed by the living light of Christ's gospel.

It is in colleges, too, that we gather the sons of the affluent and indigent, as members of the same republic of letters—aspirants after the same intellectual distinctions; the one being subjected to salutary hardships and restraints, the other admitted to inestimable privileges. Here, also, we organize a society so mixed in character, so diversified in tastes, so various in the destination of its members, that it affords a miniature world, in which the young man, before entering the dusty and stormy arena of life, trains and invigorates his powers—learns modesty by measuring himself against superiors; self-reliance by being thrown off from the support of parents and tutors; and a decent regard to the opinions, as well as a due conformity to the practice of others. And, to conclude, here we deal with the great problems of humanity, as expounded by history and philosophy; here we learn, by study, the extent of our own ignorance, the difficulties which invest even the most plausible opinions in social and political science, and the forbearance with which we should look on those who may not have reached the same conclusions, or espoused the same party.—Presbyterian Advocate.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America the sum of ——— dollars to and for the uses of the said Board of Education.

[When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.]

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Eighty dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the Academical course; One Hundred Dollars in the Collegiate course; and One Hundred and Twenty Dollars in the Theological course.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
December 12th, 1860.

Recent Intelligence.

CHINA.

A communication from Mr. Culbertson, of the 16th August, published in the present number of the Record, gives a detailed and interesting account of the attack made by the rebels on Shanghai, and of their repulse. Our missionary brethren deprecate very much any active interference with the insurgents by the allies, though they think it very probable there will be, on account of their undisguised opposition to the Roman Catholics. At Ningpo, where our letters are dated to the 31st August, all was quiet, and our missionary brethren were feeling comparatively secure, notwithstanding there was neither men-of-war nor European soldiers to protect the foreign residents. A very encouraging account is given of the religious state of feeling, both at Ningpo and Sanpoh. At the latter place, six persons had recently been received to the communion of the church on a profession of faith; and at the latter, four of the pupils of the female school had just been received to the church; and Mr. Rankin adds, that more than one-half of the pupils of the school were showing a tender interest in relation to their salvation. God is thus carrying on the good work, and building up his kingdom, while the nation is involved in war.

SIAM.

We have a single letter from Siam, of the 31st August. The mission families were well at that time. Dr. and Mrs. House were at Pitchaburi on a missionary tour. Mr. Wilson had also been there for the improvement of his health. He was on the point of making another tour into the country, for the purpose of distributing books and tracts, and making known by personal conversation the unsearchable riches of Christ.

JAPAN.

We have a letter from Mr. Nevius, of the 7th August, and another from Dr. Hepburn, of the 21st of the same. The latter contains much general information about the country, which is laid before our readers in the present number of the Record. Mr. Nevius finds the climate of Japan favourable to the health both of his wife and himself, but is still undecided as to his duty to remain there, or to return to China, when peace shall have been restored. Both families were well, and all were engaged in the study of the language.

INDIA.

Our latest dates are Mynpurie, September 29th; Futtehgurh, October 3d; and from Saharanpur, October 1st. The letter from Mynpurie mentions the hopeful conversion of a young man, who has been baptized and received to the communion of the church at that place. Our letter from Saharanpur speaks of the continued ill-health both of Mr. Morrison and Mr. Barnes. The former is expecting to return to this country, as affording the only hope of recovery. Mr. Barnes, it is feared, may also have to adopt the same course. This would leave the mission stations with which they are respectively connected, very feeble, and calls loudly for a reinforcement of missionary labourers. Our readers will find an interesting communication from Gopee Nath Nundy, in this number of the Record.

AFRICA.

We have letters from Monrovia to October 17th; Sinou, October 11th; and one from Miss Latta of October 8, at Cape Palmas, on her way to Corisco. The letter from Monrovia mentions the landing of 700 recaptured Congoes from the bark Cora, making between two and three thousand that have been landed there in the course of a few months past, with the expectation that more will be brought there soon. The Rev. Messrs. Amos have commenced their mission station at Niffau, a large native town on the coast, half-way between Sinou and Cape Palmas. One of the brothers was there, at the date of our letter, completing the necessary buildings, whilst the other had gone to Sinou to remove their families and effects to the new station. They were encouraged at the prospects of the mission. Between sixty and seventy pupils were received into the school immediately upon its opening, and the number might be doubled if they were able to teach them. Many of them, no doubt, will fall off when the novelty of the thing has passed away. Miss Latta writes in good spirits from Cape Palmas, and hopes to be at Corisco in two or three weeks. We have had no late letters from Corisco, but learn by one from the Gaboon, of September 22, that the missionaries were all in good health at that place.

SOUTH AMERICA.

We have a single letter from Rio Janeiro, of October 11. The members of the mission were in good health, and all were engaged in the study of the language. Their English service was continued with good attendance, and without molestation from any source. Mr. Simonton expects to devote a few hours daily to teaching, as a means of usefulness, and had procured the necessary license.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

We have letters from the Creek mission of the 24th of November; from the Seminole of the 3d of November; Chickasaw, November 20th: and a number from the different branches of the Choctaw mission, the latest to the 30th of November. The Seminole mission has had its trials of late. Unprincipled white men have not hesitated to stir up unkind feelings in the minds of the Indians towards their missionaries, and the principal chief, who has been an active member of the church for several years past, has been induced to withdraw from their communion and connect himself with a Baptist church recently organized in that part of the country. Mr. Lilley mentions the happy death of a female member of the church a few weeks since. Mr. Byington, writing from his station at Stockbridge, mentions that two persons at a recent meeting had been received into the communion of the church, two infants had been baptized, and a large number of persons had evinced a deep concern about their salvation. The female boarding-school at that place, after some unavoidable delay, had gone into active operation. A letter from Mr. Andrew Porter, of the 12th of November, speaks encouragingly of the missionary work at Bear river—the attendance upon religious meetings and at the school being better than usual.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

It will be borne in mind by our readers that the General Assembly, at their meeting in Rochester last Spring, recommended to the churches under their care to observe the second week in January, 1861, commencing on Monday of that week, as a season of prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all flesh; and at the same time invited all others who love the Lord Jesus, to unite with them in that observance. A number of other Christian bodies, both in this country and in Europe, have made known their intention to comply with this invitation of the General Assembly, so that there is a prospect that it will become a season of prayer among the people of God in all parts of the world, and can scarcely fail, therefore, to draw down rich and copious showers of Divine grace upon this parched and sin-ruined world. The circumstances of our own beloved country, at this present moment, as well as the unsettled condition of many portions of the great heathen world, the perils and dangers to which our missionary brethren are exposed in countries where war is raging, and other considerations of a similar character, will impart special importance to the occasion, and we trust the people of God everywhere will unite in its observance. The observance of a similar occasion last year has been followed by many and very precious tokens of the Divine favour, as the great body of our foreign missionaries testify, and as we have been permitted to see with our own eyes; and we have reason to hope for still richer blessings in answer to the prayers that will be offered up on the proposed occasion. The times and manner of observing this season of prayer must of course be left to each church or to such associations of churches as may unite in the observance. It is desirable, however, that the people of God should come together for united prayer at least once each day during the week; and all should look forward to it with interest, and pray that it may be accompanied and followed by a great out-pouring of the Holy Spirit upon all the ends of the earth.

INDIA—FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

A LETTER OF THE REV. GOPEE NATH NUNDY.

Admissions to the church at Futtehpore.

Futtehpore, October 2, 1860.

My Dear Friend—I am happy to inform you that the Lord has very graciously again gladdened our hearts and blessed our labours; to his great name be all the praise.

On the 16th of last month—Sabbath morning—five precious souls from heathenism and Mohammedanism have been gained and added to our small flock by baptism. The history of their conversion being very peculiar, I take the liberty, though it is a long one, to insert in full, as it will no doubt be interesting to you and to the friends of the cause of our blessed Redeemer. 1. Hegun khan—his baptismal name is Khachin Museh—a respectable Mohammedan of about sixty years of age. He is a resident of this place, and has been a very bigoted follower of the false prophet. As his house is in the town, he heard the gospel preached almost every day, and though at first, he says, he had a very great abhorrence to hear the Christian religion, yet gradually he became accustomed, and began to take interest. At last, when he was convinced of the truth of it, he made us acquainted with it, and at once removed into the mission premises, where he received shelter. His wife and only daughter of about ten or eleven years of age, and lots of other relatives who are still Musulmans, and live in the town, began first to persuade him, with all entreaties, to give up his new faith, but finding him firm, they began to persecute him. I am glad to inform you that all their ill treatment he has borne with Christian fortitude. His relatives, seeing that personal persecution had no effect, thought best to trouble his family, and stopped their taking water out of the same well. I then thought it high time for me to interfere, knowing how greatly those two poor creatures must have suffered. I sent word to them that if they did not immediately allow water to be carried for them out of the same well, I would write to the Magistrate and get them all severely punished. This had the desired effect, and I heard nothing more about it. The poor man is not allowed to enter the house or see his family, but I trust before long she and her daughter will come out and follow his example.

2. Burma—his baptismal name is John. He was a Hindu of Chirtry caste, and an inhabitant of a village called Ghogepore, about fourteen miles from Futtehpore. We had a vernacular school there before the mutiny, and there he first heard the gospel news. The good seed once sown, very seldom dies out without taking root, and though it may appear in our eyes as a hopeless case, yet in God's appointed time, it springs forth and brings fruits to his glory. John heard the gospel truths, and ever since he has been thinking, but could not come to any decisive conclusion until lately, when he came over to us and made us acquainted with the state of his mind. I gave him shelter, and put him under Christian instruction. His father, not knowing where he had gone, came searching for him at Futtehpore, and the people told him that he was in the mission premises. The old man seeing him, burst into tears, and appealed to him with all his parental affection, but in vain. John was very firm, and said that he was ready to leave off everything but Christ, whom he had found to be his Saviour. I asked the old man to remain a few days with his son, to which he readily consented. He attended the Bible-class with the inquirers every evening, and I am happy to say that he has returned home with some good and favourable impressions, leaving his son with us, and promising to return with the rest of his family.

3. Tarrachoud—his Christian name is Muschi Doss. He too was a Hindu, of Brohannen caste. He is brother to Josie Doss, who was baptized about ten months ago. He went to Bukenshuhur and brought his family, composed of his wife and daughter; an account of their conversion has been already forwarded to you in my letter dated June, and which I trust has safely reached you. Josie Doss then went back and brought his brother Muschi Doss, who after remaining with us some time and receiving Christian instructions, was received into the church by baptism.

4. Kallu—his Christian name is Kumur Musch—a Mohammedan. He was an inhabitant of Cawnpore. He was brought for trial as a rebel, before the special Commissioner. He was one of the ten men whose conversion took place while kept under trial, and whom I often visited in the prison. He was acquitted, and sent back to the Cawnpore magistrate through the police, where he was set free. He then returned to us; and being put under instruction for a reasonable time, was publicly baptized.

5. Ujudya—his Christian name is Orovoodoss—a Hindu of Lodho caste. He was an inhabitant of Mohubo-Zellat Humerpore. He too was a rebel, and was under trial, but acquitted. He was also sent to the magistrate of Humerpore, where he was set free. He returned to us for further instruction on the subject of religion; and after giving sufficient proof of his conversion, he was publicly received into the church.

The good seed, once sown, I am convinced will never go void. It will take root; and in God's appointed time, bring forth fruit in abundance to his glory, in spite of all human obstacles. Of the ten rebel prisoners, about whom I wrote in one of my former letters, and who were under my instructions, eight of them have already been honourably acquitted and sent home through the police to their respective magistrates, where they were set free. Two of them have already received the seal of baptism—one, and his wife, are under Christian instruction—whom I hope to notice, in my next letters, as members of the church. The rest, I have every hope, will either return to me, or go to the nearest missionaries.

I have every belief in the sincerity of these men; for when I consider what they were—a set of bigotted Hindus and Mohammedans, rebels and ruffians—and what they are now—mild, affable, willing to be instructed, kind-hearted, and ready to submit to any persecution—I cannot help saying, that Christianity has taken root in their hearts, and that the meek and lowly Jesus reigns over them. May it be so; and the glory is to be given unto Him who is blessed over all. Amen.

Now I must conclude, and hope to write you again soon.

With my Christian regards to you and all the friends, I remain yours, very truly,

GOPEE NATH NUNDY.

CHINA—SHANGHAI MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. M. S. CULBERTSON.

The approach and repulse of the Insurgents at Shanghai.

Shanghai, Sept. 3, 1860.—At the time the last mail left, we were expecting the arrival of the Rebels every day. They have now come and gone again, leaving us in peace and quiet. We have been preserved by our Heavenly Father from all harm during the disquietude and alarms which have prevailed, and we would gratefully acknowledge his protecting care which has been extended over us. Not only have we been preserved from injury ourselves, but our property also has been spared, and the mission houses at the south gate have passed through these dangers without any material injury, though we had at one time every reason to apprehend that they would all be burnt.

In order to give you a clearer idea of the events that have just passed over us, I will quote from my journal the occurrences of each day, as noted down at the time.

Monday, August 13.—For some time past we have had many rumours of the intention of the Rebels to attack Shanghai. The "Chung wang—Faithful King," who is in command at Su-chau, has declared to several different persons from Shanghai, that they must have possession of this city, so as to secure the revenues from the Custom-house. On Saturday last, these rumours assumed a more definite and tangible shape. An English gentleman who had just returned from Su-chau, where he had been for trading purposes, reported that the expeditionary force intended for the capture of Shanghai, had actually been set in motion. He had himself seen them embark on board their boats, and estimated their number at twelve thousand, at the lowest calculation.

This information has produced a good deal of excitement here. The English and French have placed troops in the city, each gate having a small guard; and they are resolved to attempt the defence not only of the Foreign settlement, but of the Chinese city also. For this object they can command but fifteen hundred men, and they are scattered in small detachments over a front of five or six miles. Should the Rebels make a determined attack, pierce through this line, and enter the foreign settlement, they would at once be joined by hundreds of men, who would be glad of the opportunity of plunder, and no man can foresee the result. All depends on the courage or cowardice of the Rebels.

In view of these circumstances, the residents of that part of the settlement situated on the north side of the Su-chau creek, held a public meeting this afternoon at the American Consulate, for the purpose of taking measures for guarding against the consequences of a sudden alarm. This part of the settlement is occupied chiefly by Americans, and most of them are missionaries. The United States Steamer Hartford having gone north with the gunboat Saginaw, this neighbourhood is now left quite unprotected. The Saginaw is now here, but is under orders to return to the north as soon as the mail-steamer arrives. A Committee was appointed at this meeting to superintend such measures as may be necessary to give the alarm at the moment of the approach of danger, whether from the Rebels or the Chinese of the neighbourhood. A night patrol was at once organized. The French frigate "Forte," just out of dock, being near at hand, an arrangement was made with the officer in command, through the French minister, M. Bombalon, to send a boat on shore for the ladies and children, the moment the alarm signal should be given. They have been very courteous in this matter, but we would have preferred being under the protection of the "stars and stripes." There is no English man-of-war here, except one small steam gunboat.

Tuesday, 14th.—This morning early, I rode out to the South gate to consult with the brethren there in reference to the measures to be pursued for their own safety, and the protection of mission property. The houses there are not only so isolated as to be left unprotected, but they are also at the very point most likely to be first attacked. They are, moreover, so near the city wall, that in the event of an attack, they would be placed between the fires of the contending parties. It was thought best, therefore, for the ladies to retire at once within the foreign settlement, where several friends had kindly offered to receive them. Mr Gayley, being very unwell, it was thought best that he should also leave. Mr. Mills and Mr. Farnham determined to remain in their houses as long as they could with safety do so, sending away the valuables to a safer place.

While consulting in reference to these arrangements, one of the Chinese teachers came in, bringing word, that during the night a proclamation from the Rebels had been posted up in various places in the suburb and settlement. They had been torn down very soon by the police, but the purport of it was that they were coming to Shanghai at once, and expected that the people would submit at once to their rule. Those who should submit would not be molested, but all who should offer resistance would be exterminated. No mention was made of foreigners. This proclamation is taken as a sure indication of their purpose to visit Shanghai, and we were at once satisfied that no time was to be lost in making the necessary arrangements for our safety. It is known that the Insurgents are in the neighbourhood of Sung-kiang in large force, only about thirty miles distant.

Thursday, 16*th*.—The excitement about the rebels is increasing. Reports are continually reaching us of their approach, and we know not what moment they may be upon us. The foreign authorities cannot send out scouts with safety, and have to depend upon information procured through the Chinese. From them little can be learned that can be fully relied on, and we are, therefore, in suspense. This evening it was reported that they were within five miles of the city, but this seems to be incorrect. Most of the families in this neighbourhood have secured places of refuge on board ships for the ladies and children, and some have gone on board already. I have sent off a few boxes of clothing and valuables.

Friday, 17*th*.—About noon to-day had a great commotion among the people, and on going out found the police driving all the boats out from the Su-chau creek into the river. Was told the Rebels were expected in the afternoon. In the morning the report was that they had gone off toward Hang-chau. Calling on the English Consul, I learned that the alarm was caused by the retirement of part of the English force from their remotest station to a point nearer to the settlement. He also informed me that an English gentleman had just come in from the Rebel camp, and reported that he had been very kindly treated, and had had an interview with the chief, in which he said he had just received orders from Su-chau to march at once upon Shanghai. They professed friendly feelings towards foreigners. Their only object is to get possession of the Chinese city. Their number is estimated at from twenty to thirty thousand.

This evening a meeting of the missionaries in this neighbourhood, (called Hong-keo,) was held for special prayer, in view of the imminent danger which seems to threaten us. Two gunboats have arrived, bringing a reinforcement of two hundred men from Chusan.

Saturday, 18*th*.—Heard this morning that the rebels entered the village of Zah-ka-wei last night, and murdered a Jesuit missionary, and a number of the boys in his school. This place is about ten miles from the city, and the Romanists have a small mission station there. In the afternoon, the Rebels actually reached Shanghai. Just after dinner, Mr. Mills and Mr. Farnham, at the south gate, suddenly found themselves surrounded by long-haired rebels. Mrs. Farnham was also there, having gone over for a short visit. The Rebels, however, were very polite, and an officer wrote a notification to be posted on the front door, warning his soldiers that they are not to enter any foreign house on pain of death. They were fired upon by the guards at the gates, as soon as they were recognized.

This afternoon I moved my family on board the ship Pursuit, Captain Sanford, who kindly gave up his own state-room for their accommodation. Most of the other ladies in our neighbourhood also took refuge in other ships. In our present uncertainty as to the intentions or the capabilities of the rebels, or the feelings of the people around us in case the rebels should meet with any success, renders this a very necessary precaution. Should we wait until the necessity of moving has actually occurred, we should not be able to get boats to get off to the ships.

Sabbath 19*th*.—This has been an unquiet Sabbath. I was out half the night on patrol. The French have set fire to the eastern suburb, and it is still burning. That part near the south gate had been nearly deserted some time ago, but the part now burning is near the foreign settlement, where the Chinese felt comparatively safe, and removed very little of their property. Here a large proportion of the warerooms for the wholesale trade are situated, and the destruction of property must be immense. Nor can it be urged in defence of this act that it was, as yet, necessary. The rebels did indeed occupy a portion of it for a short time, but not in any great force. The French this forenoon rushed into this suburb, where some of the rebels were supposed to be concealed, and showed no mercy to any one they found there. Two men at least, who had remained in their house, and were quietly enjoying their opium pipes, were ruthlessly murdered in cold blood. The French soldiers burst open the door and rushed in, and the poor fellows fell on their knees begging for mercy, but they were first bayoneted and then shot. I have this account from an English gentleman who was in the house and saw the whole himself, and his account is confirmed by several others who soon after saw the bodies. It is said they murdered women and children, but this may be an exaggeration. The English also have burnt the southern and western suburbs, but they were of little pecuniary value, and in a situation more exposed to attack. Still it is a pity to see poor people burnt out of their homes without an absolute necessity.

Hearing in the morning that our houses at the south gate had been burnt, Mr. Farnham and myself, in company with our friend, Mr. Olyphant, started to go and see them. As the eastern suburb was in flames, and several bodies of insurgents were threatening the west gate, we could only reach them by passing through the city. The city gates, however, we found closed, and the only reply we received from the French guards, in answer to our request for admission was, "c'est impossible." I then went to a high lookout, at an English outpost between the north and west gates, from which I could see that the houses were still standing, though the suburb near them was in flames.

From this position three bodies of insurgents can be seen—or rather the flags which mark their position. They have remained stationary during the day, except that occasionally small parties would approach within gunshot, apparently to reconnoitre.

Monday, September 20*th*.—On Saturday two gunboats were sent up the river with a communication warning the rebels that Shanghai was held by the Allies. They have returned, reporting that no boats were to be found within thirty miles of Shanghai. To-day they have been throwing shells over the city into the bivouacs of the rebels. Some of them fell into the midst of them, causing a precipitate change of quarters. Many must have been killed. Not a few too, have been picked off by the long range rifles; and thus the work of death and destruction is going on around us. The fire has been raging in the eastern suburb all last night, and to-day the dense column of smoke shows that the flames are still doing their work. And not the flames only, but plunderers are at work. During the night, parties of men might be seen in the burning suburb carrying off all sorts of valuables. Whole cargoes of sugar, it is said, were thus saved. Not Chinese only, but foreigners engaged in this work—both soldiers and citizens. Some foreigners were observed placing a pistol at the head of a Chinese coolie, with an order to carry a load of plunder to the water's edge. Then a boatman was compelled, by the same means, to receive the spoil, and carry it to the point designated by its owner. In the country around us the smoke of burning villages indicates that the rebels are carrying on a similar work among the people within their reach.

Tuesday, September 21*st*.—This morning all seemed quiet, and I brought my family home. But in the afternoon it was reported that a large body of rebels had crossed the creek, apparently with a view of making an attack on this part of the settlement. My family, therefore, went off on shipboard again. I rode out to the English outpost to ascertain the correctness of the report, and found there was a party on our side of the creek, but occupying a position some five or six miles distant.

I was not much alarmed by this information, being satisfied that they wish to avoid a collision with foreigners. There is room, however, for a doubt on this point, for they have been much provoked by attacks made on them within the last few weeks by large bodies of foreigners, hired for the purpose by the Tau-tai. One of these bands of vagabonds was headed by Colonel Ward of Nicaragua fillibuster notoriety. He sustained a terrible defeat and was himself severely wounded.

To-day I had a conversation with the Rev. Mr. Holmes of the Baptist mission, who has just returned from a visit to Nanking. He is not at all favourably impressed with the chiefs. Our hopes in reference to the personal character of the Tien-Wang are disappointed. His pride, and his arrogant assumptions, are insufferable. In some of his communications, he couples his own name with those of the Heavenly Father and the Heavenly Elder Brother, Jesus, in a way which indicates that he regards himself as not much inferior to them. The tendency to depart further from the truth instead of drawing nearer to it, has always been a ground of fear in reference to the ultimate character of this movement, and though disappointed, we cannot be surprised. Nevertheless, whatever may become of this insurrection, it has struck a blow at the idolatry and superstition of China, the effects of which will not soon cease to be felt. Although I have always hoped, and still hope, for good from the religious truth circulated by the rebels, and especially from the circulation of the Bible among them, I have always felt that infinite wisdom alone could decide whether their political success would be a blessing or a curse to China. God has purposes to accomplish by them, and those purposes will be accomplished.

Friday, September 24*th*.—On Wednesday last a communication was sent to the rebels by the allied commanders, warning them that the city of Shanghai was in the possession and under the protection of foreigners. A reply was received yesterday stating that they had no quarrel with foreigners, and wished to cultivate friendly relations. They came to Shanghai, they said, at the invitation of foreigners, and did not anticipate such a reception as they met with. They intimate that they have it in their power to stop the channels of foreign trade, and if treated in this manner they may exercise that power. This morning they have retreated towards Sung-Kiang. They told the people they would return in three days, but this, no doubt, is mere bravado. Thus we are again left in peace.

September 3*d*.—We have received from the North the news of the fall of the Ta-ku forts. The attack was made at 5 o'clock on the morning of the 21st of August, and the principal fort was taken by storm by half-past 8 o'clock. The other forts then surrendered unconditionally. The troops were permitted to march out unarmed, leaving all the material of war to the victors. The ambassadors have proceeded to Tien-tsing where negotiations were going on.

What the result of all these complications will be, no human wisdom can foresee. The foreign powers will very soon be compelled to decide upon some course of policy toward the rebels. The French are evidently anxious to attack and exterminate them, and the English may be induced to follow their lead. It requires no great amount of wisdom to see the folly of such a course. Whatever contempt may be felt for the insurgents, they are a power in China, and though driven from Su-chau and Nanking, the rebellion will be sure to break out in some new quarter the moment the foreign troops are well on their way home. Our hope is in God. He will bring order out of all this confusion, and will cause the wrath of man to praise him.

FOURTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE FEMALE BOARDING-SCHOOL.

Ningpo, September, 1860.

The present number of pupils in the school is thirty-one, including the two monitors. Five have left us during the year, and been married; two have been dismissed, and one has died. One new pupil has been received from the Level Bridge day-school.

The instruction of the pupils by the Chinese teacher and the two Christian monitors, has been mainly under the supervision of Mr. and Mrs. Lee, who have also taken part in this work. The superintendent has been obliged, on account of other pressing duties, to confine his labours in the school chiefly to imparting religious instruction. The Scriptures of the Old and New Testament have, as in former years, together with the Catechism and different Christian books, occupied most of the time of the pupils. They have also studied arithmetic, and paid more attention than usual to penmanship and composition. A portion of each day is given to sewing and embroidery, in which, as well as in the domestic arrangements, Mrs. Lee has shown a lively interest; and in all these various occupations the pupils have made manifest progress. The experience of the two years has shown the propriety of the arrangements by which much responsibility is placed upon our esteemed native brother and his wife. The intelligent piety and refinement of them both cannot fail to have a happy effect upon the young people with whom they are brought in daily contact.

The religious condition of the school has never seemed more promising than at present. During the year, five have been received to church-membership; so that now the two matrons and one-third of the pupils are professors of religion. And of the remainder it is a highly interesting fact, that nearly all have recently, of their own accord, and some of them repeatedly, come to the superintendent, to converse about their spiritual interests. They every morning enjoy the privilege of an exposition of Scripture and prayer, and the monitors conduct family worship in the evening. Mrs. Rankin has, on each Friday afternoon, conducted a prayer-meeting with them and other Chinese females; and they observe the monthly concert, and have various other social meetings among themselves. Probably every pupil in the school is more or less in the practice of secret prayer.

One event that has been blessed of God to the awakening of more interest among our pupils, was the death of Sue-ing on the 17th of July last. During the hot season, a large proportion of the girls were attacked successively by typhus fever, which was then very prevalent. Through God's great mercy, however, all recovered except Sue-ing, who, after a few days' illness, was called away, we cannot doubt, to a better home. Her age was about nineteen, and she had been receiving instruction a number of years, either from Miss Aldersey or from us. For a long time her deportment has been exemplary; but it was not till last October that she made a profession of her faith and was baptized. From that time onward she manifestly developed in Christian character, and proved among her associates one of the most consistent. Her sick-bed was marked by much patience, as well as by a love for the Scriptures, and faithful efforts for the good of others; and even in moments of delirium, the words of her lips showed that her heart was in heaven. The fatal termination of her illness was sudden to us all; but she was evidently apprehensive of the result, and gave distinct testimony of her faith in Christ, and her willingness to depart.

This is the first death that has occurred in the school for a period of nine years, and it was deeply felt by her schoolmates, who all loved and respected her; and some of whom, from that time, have had their interest increased in spiritual things. A young sister of Sue-ing, who was afterwards very sick, has since her recovery shown a degree of tenderness; and an older married sister, who came from a distance to attend her funeral, has since remained with us, and is now in a hopeful state of mind.

The last annual report referred to the Christian girls who have left the school. During the year, two other members of the church, whose time had expired, have been married. One of them, Kwe-yuing, was baptized last October, and is now residing at a village not far from Ningpo, where she has the respect of her husband's family and of the neighbours. The other, Ah-yiu, one of the blind pupils, was baptized last April, and married in May to a respectable farmer residing near the station at Bao-ko-tah. The neighbours testify to her faithful walk and conversation, and some of them have been favourably disposed to Christianity, by what they have seen and heard of her. The remaining blind pupil, Tse-yuing, (who for many years has been supported by the Sabbath-school of the First Presbyterian church of Jersey City,) is in a hopeful state of mind, and has applied for baptism. Upon Miss Aldersey leaving Ningpo, these two blind girls, who had previously resided with her under Ellen Gutzlaff's instruction, were transferred to our immediate care. Of the whole number of pupils from the beginning, who have been members of the two female boarding-schools, twenty-six are now in good and regular standing in the church. Three others have died in the faith. The two matrons of the school have also been baptized.

The prospects of the school are now highly encouraging. The number of pupils has been gradually reduced from sixty or more, when the schools were united, so that now they are more easily managed, and they are all comfortably accommodated in the school buildings. Two or three intractable pupils we have been obliged to dismiss within the last two years, and others have left us and been married, so that there is now a satisfactory homogeneousness among them. We are also beginning to to receive the children of Christian parents, or promising pupils from the day-schools, who have already enjoyed the privilege of Christian instruction, and who will be saved the great evil, incident to pupils received at an earlier day, of being married to ignorant heathen. Not only may we hope that good wives and mothers may be trained up in this school, but we greatly desire to qualify some to be teachers in female day-schools, which must sooner or later greatly multiply, and then day-schools, in turn, will become nurseries for the boarding-school. Thus before long this institution may be profitably enlarged, and we hope will greatly extend its influence for good.

P. S. Since the above was written, another breach has been made in the school, and one of the younger pupils, named Pao-tsia has been suddenly removed. She was seized with congestive fever, which is a very rare complaint here, on Saturday the 22d inst., and before daybreak on the following Wednesday, death had seized its victim. The morning before, she replied to questions proposed most fully and satisfactorily, showing that Christ was all her hope and all her desire. She had frequently come for religious conversation—sometimes bringing others with her—and had also applied for baptism. Her conduct was consistent, and among the younger pupils she was unusually devout. Had she lived, she would probably have been soon received into the communion of the church; and in her death we have every reason to hope that she has gone to that blessed Jesus, whose name was so often on her lips. May God greatly sanctify this renewed trial to all her schoolmates!

H. V. Rankin, Superintendent.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

A LETTER OF THE REV. A. W. LOOMIS.

San Francisco, October 30, 1860.

My Dear Sir—Since I last wrote, our Synod met at Stockton, and as I had an opportunity, I visited the Chinamen who were there. After Synod adjourned, we took the stage and went up into the country, into the mountains, both for recreation and to look after our people. We went as far as the Big Trees, and there we could walk in the snow, which had not all disappeared; it had fallen a day or two before to the depth of six or eight inches; farther on it fell so deep as to stop the travel for a while.

The Trees are in Calaveras county, near its southern boundary, and not far from the Stanislaw river. They are amongst fine scenery, and have a fine bracing air. We spent a Sabbath there, and held a religious service which was attended by the family who keep the house, by the workmen there, and by some labourers from a saw-mill and ranch in the neighbourhood.

The lady at the house has no female society nearer than Murphy's, fifteen miles below, and probably none on the other side nearer than Washoe. Murphy's is a brisk little village or camp, as they still call it. Heavy mining operations are carried on there, and so there are mining works almost everywhere amongst the mountains and hills. It is amazing to behold what amount of labour has been expended in this country. The whole surface of the ground dug over, and thrown up in heaps, as in the surface-mining—the gulshes all torn up and washed over two or three times—hills washed down by hydraulic pipes—wells sunk—tunnels run into the mountains, and holes dug every way, and search made for the yellow dust through the heart and at the roots of the hills—quartz crushed to force it to surrender its treasures.

Just at Murphy's there were no Chinamen, and none within walking distance, but we left a bundle of books with the Methodist minister to distribute. He rides about and preaches in several places where there are many Chinamen. The stage left Murphy's at three o'clock, and came tumbling down the hills too rapidly for comfort. Had it been day-light instead, we would have seen little villages scattered along the road, and mining operations on every hand. By seven o'clock we were set down at San Andreas. We found a busy mountain town, new, and rather rough; no distant views, for hills rise on every side, and the valleys crook around by very short turns. One street in the village is entirely occupied by Chinese stores, and shops, and boarding-houses. They appeared to be enjoying themselves tolerably well. We fell in with a few whom we had seen in San Francisco.

After going from house to house, talking a little, and distributing books, conversing with Chinamen who were in from the mines to hear the news, and purchase supplies, and after ascertaining the localities occupied by Chinese miners, we returned to the hotel for a fresh supply of tracts, and started down a ravine, though the sun was hot, and there was no cooling breeze. A walk of three miles brought us to their shanties where we began our work. We could do but little else than explain our errand, leave a book or two, ask a few questions, and go on to the next house, or the next settlement. At first the people were shy or sulky, thinking me a tax-gatherer, or something else as bad; but when they learned their mistake, they were apparently quite glad to see me, pressing me to take something—food, or tea, or pipe, or segars, or to tarry till meal time. How we would like to be able to spend days or weeks—yes, and months in such work; and there are such valleys, and such settlements, or camps, of Chinamen in various places in this State. With a horse and buggy, or a horse and saddle-bags, one might travel from the beginning to the end of the year, and all the time be sowing the seed, as we ought, beside all waters.

We distributed portions of Scripture and tracts. Without doubt, some of them will be read; and we have a right to hope, and the privilege to pray, that they may not be read in vain. The poor people, here, far from home and amongst strangers, and those strangers people that despise, and in many cases ill-treat them, are glad to meet one that shows sympathy, and speaks kindly. They work hard, and for very small pay. We met some digging and carrying their dirt in buckets. As we went down, the people were scattered about at their various places of work; some of the cabins were deserted, at others there were one or two engaged in preparing dinner. As we returned, many of the companies were enjoying themselves over their noon-day meal, some at long tables in their shanties, others seated on the ground under trees or booths. On the road we met men going to or returning from town, mostly on foot. Now and then a horse is owned by them. One man I met taking home his purchases in a wheelbarrow.

In the afternoon, having returned to the village, I went out again to see the people, and improve opportunities of sending books in other directions about the country. One pleasant-faced young man rode up on his mustang pony, who had come in from a camp ten miles distant; he dodged about from shop to shop gathering little articles of medicine, or provisions, and the letters that had arrived from below. I added two or three books to his collection, and seeing that he was pleased, and put them up carefully in his bundle, I increased the donation, giving one of each kind. Why may we not hope that those books will do somebody some good, and have some agency in bringing on that day when the idols shall be utterly abolished, and the Lord alone shall be exalted?

One conversation very much interested me, and I hope it will be of lasting interest to all who were engaged in it. In the same establishment where I met the young man to whom I gave the books to carry to the country, three or four young men gathered around me with questions about the doctrines of Jesus. I sat down and began answering them. They then invited me into a back-room, but I preferred to sit in the front apartment, which was all open on the street, thinking that others would come around and listen, and in this way we could reach more ears and economize our breath. But the young men urged me to go to the back-room, so as to be undisturbed, though the principal motive, was doubtless similar to that which brought Nicodemus to Christ by night; therefore we followed them, and there we sat hearing and answering questions for perhaps an hour. The subjects of conversation ranged from the creation to the judgment-day, but principally centred around the character and work of Christ, and man's interest in him. Are there not many who will pray for those young men, that they may yet, like Nicodemus, be able to say, "Master, we know that thou art a teacher come from God."

In the evening I went out again and spent some time in conversation; each time I met with new faces of miners who had come in to get provisions, or to spend the evening in town. It was sad to see the gambling shops and other places of sin; but in such things Chinamen are not alone, we are sorry to have to say. We saw many Indians, some very rough and scantily dressed; others who have learned to work and earn money were better dressed. They make good servants for a while, but they soon get tired and leave that they may spend their wages, and enjoy the luxury of freedom and idleness with eating and drinking. On the road we passed some who had kindled little fires in the grass where they were cooking worms. On one of the hills a teamster's ox lay dead in the road, and by night nothing was left on the spot but the horns; the Indians had cut up and carried the whole away to their huts. When we meet the wild, unclothed, unwashed, uncombed savages in the woods, showing their teeth, shaking their black and bushy locks, violently gesticulating and emitting sounds such as we never heard before, it requires some little effort of the mind to understand and acknowledge that they are human beings, from the same stock with ourselves; and when we think of civilizing such creatures; further, when we think about their being prepared for the society of angels, the work seems almost impossible—and so it would be impossible for man. The Spirit can instruct, enlighten and sanctify even such as they.

Our work at home is just about the same as reported on former occasions—about the same attendance at the meetings. I am able to do more in conversation with the people at their shops, and their questions often open the way; but there is a scornful feeling in the hearts of most of the Chinese towards the religion of Jesus, and they fear to have their countrymen think that they would be so weak as to go to a Christian church. I sometimes hear one asking another if he ever goes to the chapel. "O no," he will answer, "I never go there." Thus they prevent one another from entering the kingdom of heaven, and they encourage each other in vice.

I have mentioned that the Chinese day school, taught in the basement of this house, was discontinued on the last of August, and that an evening school was commenced on the first of September. Last evening again the San Francisco Board of Education resolved to assume the expenses of the same as an evening school, though it did not pass without opposition. Objection was made by some of the members to having anything religious introduced into the school in any way.

With kindest regards I remain

Yours affectionately, A. W. Loomis.

JAPAN.

A LETTER FROM DR. HEPBURN, OF AUGUST 21, 1860.

The climate of the country.

We are now nearing the close of our hot weather, and while it is all fresh, I write to say something about it. Our hot weather did not commence until after the 4th of July; indeed, the 4th was so cool that we found a brazier of coals in our parlour quite comfortable. From about the 10th of July, when the rainy season closed, we have had pretty constant hot and dry weather.

The average of heat indicated by the thermometer for the month of July was, at sunrise, 75°, at 2 o'clock, P. M., 82°; and at 9 o'clock, P. M., 78°. The highest point the mercury touched was 92°; lowest 63°. The heat has been more steady, uniform, and oppressive than in New York; although the mercury has not been so high as I have often seen it there. The average heat of this month will be a little higher than that of July. I have not seen the thermometer at any time higher than 92°. We have had very few showers of rain since the middle of July, and very little thunder and lightning—none in comparison with the thunder storms of the United States. There has been generally a slight breeze to temper the air. The temperature of the summer here is much more pleasant and tolerable than that of the same latitude at home. Through the summer we have had some two or three heavy gales from the south. It has thus far been very healthy amongst foreigners, both at Yokohama and at this place, contrary to my fears. There are considerably over a hundred foreigners living at these places, yet there has not been a single death amongst them, and not, that I know of, a case of fever or any sickness but what was the result of imprudence. This, considering that we have so much swampy and wet land about us, in the shape of paddy fields is remarkable. Our hot weather is beginning perceptibly to diminish. We have now cool nights, delightful for sleeping, when the mercury sinks down to 69°.

Vegetable products.

I told you, in my last, something about the crops of this region. I have still a little more to say on this subject. I observed that all their kitchen vegetables, and, indeed, most of their other productions, were not planted until towards the end of June and 1st of July, a little before the close of the rainy season; all these crops are put in at home, as early as possible, when the spring opens. But the rains here prevent it. Some of our friends here, going by home experience, planted their garden-seeds quite early, and had the mortification of seeing most of them a failure.

In passing along the fields now, I see a great variety of crops growing, such as rice, cotton, upland rice, millet, beans of several varieties, sweet potatoes, taro, tobacco, broom-corn, indian-corn, onions, turnips, buckwheat, and some others peculiar to Japan, the English names of which I do not know. I mention indian-corn, but it is not largely grown—only in very small patches near the house of the farmer, perhaps to be eaten while green.

Fruits.

We have a much greater variety of fruits than in China, but greatly inferior in variety and excellence to those of the United States. We have had apricots and two or three varieties of plum. We now have peaches, pears, watermelons, muskmelons, cucumbers, and pumpkins. By and by we shall have oranges, grapes, and persimmons. The enumeration of these fruits makes a very good appearance on paper, but we have been much disappointed in them. The plums looked large, but they were always brought to us hard and unripe, and not fit to eat. We seldom succeeded in getting a ripe plum or peach. To our inquiries why they plucked them so early—before they were ripe—they replied that it was to forestall the boys and thievish people, who would not let them ripen on the trees. The watermelons and muskmelons are pretty good, but much inferior to home fruit. I have also seen one small variety of apple; they were small—about an inch in diameter—and had the taste of an apple, but that was all; they would scarcely be eaten at home, where we have so much better kinds. The climate is doubtless favourable to raising good fruit, but there seems to be but little care or attention paid to it. The grapes are the only fruit that seems to rival that at home.

Birds and Insects.

I have been struck by the remarkable want of singing birds here. I do not remember to have heard one. In the spring, there was one which had something the appearance of our robin, but without its notes. Even this soon disappeared. The crow, the sparrow, and the hawk, are the most common, and they have no music; we have missed our home-birds very much; even the little sparrows have disappeared very much during the summer. The crow is the only one which seems to stay by us; his caw is the first thing we hear in the morning and the last in the evening. But the want of singing birds is abundantly supplied, so far as mere noise is concerned, by the insects. We have a great variety of singing insects—some of them with notes so varied and loud that at first I mistook them for those of a bird. It is, however, not pleasant music, being too constant and too monotonous. These insects all sing in the day-time, being more lively as the day grows hotter, and are silent at night—so unlike our summer nights at home, which the katydids and the crickets enliven with their pleasant notes. So far as I can judge, I think that the variety and abundance of insects in Japan is perhaps greater than that of most other countries.

Natural Scenery.

To be sure, I am not able to say much about Japan, having seen only a very small part of it. I have no doubt there is a great variety of beautiful scenery—of mountains and valleys—of lakes and rushing streams—of forests and farms—but I have seen nothing yet that surpasses, or indeed equals, the beauty and grandeur of multitudes of places in our own highly-favoured land. Everything here seems to be done up in miniature—it is pretty, but not grand. There is a great deal of sameness, too, about it, which tires. The hand of man has done much to beautify, and has made the cultivated country look like a beautiful garden—terraced and planted in small patches of different productions, and of various hues of green—but it wants extent and vastness. Still it is a fine country, and all it wants is the gospel, with its elevating influence, to make it one of the finest on the globe. The time is not far off when it shall begin to feel its influence—indeed it is already begun—but only on a few minds, where the light is struggling with gross darkness.

We are all well, and busy as possible at the language. Remember us affectionately to Mrs. Wilson and all our friends at the Mission House.

Yours truly, J. C. Hepburn.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Letters relating to the Missions, or other operations of the Board, may be addressed to Walter Lowrie, Esq., the Rev. John C. Lowrie, or the Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, Secretaries, Mission House, 23 Centre Street, New York.

Letters relating to the pecuniary affairs of the Board, or containing remittances of money, may be sent to William Rankin, Jr. Esq., Treasurer—same address.

The Foreign Missionary—Two editions of this publication are printed. The Pamphlet Edition contains 32 pages, and is published monthly, at 50 cents a year for each copy. It is sent free, when desired, to donors of ten dollars and upwards, and to ministers.

The Newspaper Edition contains a selected portion of the contents of the pamphlet edition. A copy is sent free of charge, except for postage, to the children of each family in every Sunday School making regular contributions to the Treasury of the Board.

Address for either edition, "The Foreign Missionary," Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLICATION ROOMS.

No. 821 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, donations of books and tracts, the appointment of Colporteurs, the editorial department of the Record and Sabbath school Visitor, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to the Rev. William E. Schenck, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 821 Chestnut street.

All communications, reports, remittances of money, and orders from Colporteurs, to be addressed to Mr. Winthrop Sargent, Superintendent of Colportage.

Orders for books, other than from Colporteurs, and letters relating to the business of the Depository, to be addressed to Mr. Joseph P. Engles, Publishing Agent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. Engles, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to James Dunlap, Esq., Treasurer.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED.

While the unspeakably great interests of the country are engaging the earnest attention of all citizens, we must again appeal to God's people not to forget the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom as represented in the work of this Board of the church.

As our readers were informed in the last number of the Record, the Colportage Fund of the Board of Publication is not only exhausted, but largely overdrawn. The Board has for the last month felt compelled to decline all offers of colportage service, and to issue no new commissions. It has to this time striven to keep in their fields of labour the large band of colporteurs already at work, but unless liberal contributions are speedily forwarded from the churches, it will be compelled very soon, to allow them one after another, as their commissions expire, to retire from their important and blessed work.

We earnestly beseech those Christian brethren and churches which have the power to aid us, to send their remittances, large or small, to our Treasurer, at the earliest day possible.

W. E. Schenck, Cor. Sec.

CALVIN'S CORRESPONDENCE.

The following is taken from a recent Methodist paper:

"We are happily not without most pleasant evidences of the real unity of the friends of Christ. Dr. Merle D'Aubigné lately wrote to one of his friends in Zurich, expressing a strong wish to possess Calvin's Letters, collected by Dr. Jules Bonnet, and published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication in Philadelphia, and requesting that his friend would purchase the work and forward it to him with the bill. The order having been transmitted, a parcel was speedily received by express, accompanied by the following note from the Publishing Agent of the Board.

"Dear Sir—I have forwarded to you to-day by express two copies of Calvin's Correspondence—one for Dr. Merle, the other for the library of your society—which I hope will be acceptable. Only three volumes have been published; the fourth and last is now in the stereotyper's hands, and shall be furnished as above. Yours, truly,

Joseph P. Engles, Pub. Agent.

THE SYNOD OF ARKANSAS.

The Board has for several years been blessed with the active and useful services of Mr. W. R. Carpenter, as one of its colporteurs. His field of labour has been among the wide destitutions in Arkansas, where there is an inviting and most important field for such efforts to do good. At the last meeting of the Synod of Arkansas, Mr. Carpenter was present, and made an interesting report of his labours during the past year, whereupon the Synod adopted the following paper:

Whereas, The work of colportage is one of vast and increasing importance in our State, and whereas W. R. Carpenter has prosecuted that work with diligence and fidelity for the last two years, therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we commend him to the confidence and Christian liberality of all our people, and would respectfully ask the Board to continue him in this field.

Resolved, 2. That we urgently request all of our churches to contribute liberally to the Board of Publication.

THE WORK OF THIS BOARD.

The following remarks are extracted from the North Carolina Presbyterian, where they appear as the report of a portion of an address made by the Rev. W. E. Schenck, D. D, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication, to the Synod of North Carolina, at its late meeting.

It is but little more than twenty years since this work of the Board was in this form commenced. The first year, with many anxieties and fears, those who had the work in hand, issued a tract by the late venerated Dr. Samuel Miller of Princeton. Since that time the work has steadily expanded. Over 9,000,000 copies of books and tracts have been published by the Board, considerably more than enough, could they be equally diffused, to place a copy in every home in our wide-spread land. The benefits this religious literature is accomplishing are various and great. We can only glance at a few of them.

1. Above all, it is saving souls. There are many persons—many pious persons—perhaps some ministers—ready to suppose that if they desire works in direct support of denominational peculiarities of government or doctrine, they can get them better from the Board than elsewhere. But if they need some work to bear directly on the salvation of the soul, they can procure it better from some one of the union and so-called Evangelical societies. We claim that the literature of the Board of Publication is quite as Evangelical as that issued from any other source. It contains fully and distinctly all the great fundamental and elementary doctrines of the scheme of salvation by the cross of Christ. True, it adds to these and intermingles with them, just as the Bible does, those other doctrines of divine grace commonly called Calvinistic. Are saving truths made less saving because intermingled with these? Is your precious Bible less a book of salvation because those doctrines are intermingled there? Is not all Scripture given by inspiration of God, and "profitable" to its readers? Are the sermons which you as Presbyterian ministers preach, less saving in their character if they set forth in due proportion the high mysteries of Divine and sovereign grace? You will not, cannot admit this. Now just so, and so only, these doctrines are set forth and intermingled in the literature of this Board.

2. It is dispelling the prejudices which in many individuals and communities have existed in reference to the history, government, and doctrines of the Presbyterian church. Wherever proclaimed, from the times of Paul and Augustine down to the present day, these doctrines have been felt to be at the same time God-exalting and man-humbling doctrines. Consequently they are disliked by the carnal heart, which is not subject to God's law, when faithfully exhibited and expounded, neither can be till renewed by grace. Add to this, that multitudes of professedly Christian people, true and false, misapprehend, misstate, and even caricature these precious doctrines, and you will not wonder that in many places they are regarded with alarm, with detestation, and even with abhorrence. Until grace does it, we cannot fully remove these feelings natural to the carnal heart by any explanations or arguments. But we can even there show that they are in accordance with God's word, and thus bind the conscience either to receive the doctrines or reject the Bible. An Arminian minister bought a copy of the Confession of of Faith and lent it to a lawyer in his congregation, supposing that the reading of it was all that was necessary to convert him thoroughly to Arminianism. The lawyer read the book carefully and returned it with the reply, "The Confession is not half so hard to believe as the proof-texts. If they are in the Bible, the Confession is in accordance with it." These books and tracts have, in numberless instances, removed prejudices and prepared the way for preaching by Presbyterian ministers.

3. They are elevating the style and standard of preaching throughout our whole denomination. The time was when Presbyterian ministers were charged with being afraid to preach the Calvinistic portions of their faith. Now it is quite different, and in every part of the land you may have these doctrines held forth, defended and illustrated, with clearness, fidelity, and boldness. One reason is, that the ministers have generally upon their book shelves the issues of this Board, which give them ample materials for exposition, illustration, and defence.

4. Again, it is calling forth the authorship of the church. At first, the Board chiefly republished the works of former days, containing good strong meat, admirably adapted to benefit those who would read them carefully and prayerfully, but not in all cases exactly adapted to the American taste. Now we are intermingling with these a large infusion of works from native authors, which are read with avidity by the people at large, and many of which will go down to future generations as monuments of the piety, and zeal, and learning of the present day. In thus stimulating the ministry, this Board is conferring an inestimable benefit upon the church and the land.

5. The Board is doing a great work for the children of the church. It has furnished half a million copies and more of the Shorter Catechism, and has aided in producing a greater readiness in the minds of ministers, parents, and teachers, to instruct the children in this noble compend of Bible truth. It is publishing for the children a "Sabbath-school Visitor," of which about 75,000 copies are issued every month, and which is well adapted to instruct as well as to entertain the young. It is introducing by its "Scheme," prepared for that purpose, the plan of Systematic Benevolence into the Sabbath schools, and training the rising generation to give liberally and methodically to the cause of Christ. It likewise furnishes an admirable Sabbath-school Library, comprising now over 250 volumes of choice and instructive religious reading, to which new volumes are added every month. The Board of Publication is now earnestly endeavouring to bless the rising generation.

6. It is doing all this with immense pecuniary advantage to the church. Its issues, in the opinion of all careful calculators and sound judges, compare favourably as to cheapness, with those issued from any publishing-house in the land. We know that the contrary is often said, but we make the above assertion after careful examination and with ample proof at hand. On our Assembly's Hymn Book alone, comparing the present prices with those before the establishment of this Board, there has been saved to the church by the Board over $200,000. Adding the saving on the Confession of Faith, and other standard works now on our Catalogue, the gross amount of saving to the church, if fully stated, would tax your faith almost beyond belief. And in addition to all this, the Board now gives back, in the shape of discounts allowed to ministers, theological students, Sabbath-schools and others, an annual sum of over $20,000.

A little over ten years ago, the General Assembly became fully convinced that in order to make this religious literature in the highest degree useful, it must adopt a system by which it would be carried to the houses of the people, especially in the more destitute and needy portions of the country. In the first year, a few theological students were employed. During the last year, over 200 Colporteurs were in the field, traversing 34 states, territories, and British provinces. They sold about 125,000 volumes, gave away 15,000 volumes, distributed over 2,000,000 pages of tracts; and as nearly as we can calculate, carried a message of salvation to over 1,000,000 souls.

The "Plantation Sermons" continue to be more and more widely used throughout the South, for the instruction of the blacks upon the plantations; and a second volume has just been published by the Board. Among the French Canadians of Northern Illinois, commonly known as Father Chiniquy's people, colporteurs of the Board are doing a great and good work. The Board has just issued a variety of French books and tracts, with a special reference to their necessities. The Board has likewise just sent out a District Superintendent of Colportage to the Pacific, to make an effort for a more extensive use of colportage in California, Oregon, and Washington territory. These latter efforts will very certainly be uncommonly expensive, and we earnestly beseech pastors to do all in their power to help sustain the Board in its good work, by early and enlarged contributions. Our Colportage Fund is now very largely overdrawn, and we shall greatly need the help of all lovers of Christ's cause during the coming months. * * *

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. Life Pictures from the Bible; or, Illustrations of Scripture character. By Le Roy J. Halsey, D. D., Author of "Literary Attractions of the Bible," &c. 12mo. Pp. 460. Price $1.00. Postage 20 cents.

The Bible is an unfailing mine of truth, and Dr. Halsey has evidently been earnest and indefatigable in digging there for hid treasures. Having been greatly enriched himself, he produces and exhibits these treasures in this noble volume, for the benefit of his readers. The book is one of the most valuable and most interesting ever published by the Board, and will not fail to be extensively read, and, by God's blessing, to be extensively useful. Nor will it fail to add greatly to the high reputation which Dr. Halsey won by his former publication, "The Literary Attractions of the Bible." In order to give our readers a clearer view of the aim and plan of the book, we quote from the author's preface.

"The object of this volume is to commend the book of God to the favourable attention of all those, both parents and teachers, who are charged with the education of youth, and especially to the attention of the young themselves, as a book of permanent historic and biographic interest; and as such, furnishing the richest storehouse of example, and the surest guide in the formation of character. It cannot be, that a book which deals so much in illustrations of life and character, as the Bible, should be devoid of interest to the young, or fail to furnish them with important aid in the development of their own characters, and the regulation of their own lives.

"But to do this, these characters must be known, studied, and appreciated. It is manifest, that they are not known, studied, or appreciated, as they ought to be, even by our best educated youth. A large portion of the historical and biographical Scriptures is, in fact, seldom read, and of course little known.

"And yet God certainly had a purpose in making history and biography the broad basis of all Scripture. Is it not manifest, that, by putting so large a portion of his word into this narrative form, he thereby sought to attract and interest the youthful mind. If so, it is well to profit by the indication. It is wise to follow, in our own instructions the divine pattern thus set us. Religion never speaks more gracefully, than when she speaks by example. It is chiefly through the living voice of example that she speaks to the young in all the Scriptures. To inculcate Bible truths, through Bible characters, whether from the pulpit, the press, or the teacher's chair, is to adopt the Bible's own method of instruction. And, certainly, it is one which experience proves to be the most effective, as it is the most pleasing.

"Believing that there is an attractive power, as well as rich stores of instruction, in all the sacred biographies, even when presented singly, the writer of these pages has thought that he could not do a better service for the young Bible reader, and indeed for parents, teachers, and all others who have at heart the education of our youth, than by classifying, arranging in groups, and so presenting at one view, as large a number of these Scripture portraits, as could thus be brought together without making too cumbrous a volume. By selecting and grouping together such prominent characters as would be most likely to interest the young, and by clothing them somewhat in our modern style of thought and phraseology, he has hoped that the narrative portions of the Bible might be presented, if not in a new, at any rate, in an attractive and useful light. But while freely comparing ancient with modern characters, and often discussing the former in the most familiar current language of our times—deeming that the only way to make antiquity fully intelligible to the young is to modernize it—the writer has studiously avoided everything that might offend the taste of the scholar on the one hand, or the piety of the devout Christian on the other.

"He has not sought to make these ancient characters attractive at the expense of the truth. He has not aimed to embellish them by any attempt at pen-painting. With this divine method ever before him—a method which leaves the deeds of the life to tell the story of the character—he has not sought to eulogize, but simply to set forth Scripture characters as they are in the book itself; giving them only that development which their recorded deeds would justify, or that prominence which their virtues demand. Not one jot or tittle of scriptural truth has been anywhere knowingly sacrificed for the sake of making any scene the more impressive, or any character the more attractive; but the single aim from first to last has been, to let the Bible speak, and utter its voice of wisdom through its own real personages. Of course only a part of this great cloud of witnesses could here be brought into view; but that part has been selected which seemed to speak with a voice of special interest to the young. The writer can only hope that those who may recognize the voice of truth in these pages, may wish to hear that voice again, and be induced to follow it to those living oracles where God himself speaks."

II. The Gospel Ministry; In a Series of Letters from a Father to his Sons. By the Rev. William S. White, D. D., Lexington, Virginia. 16mo. pp. 204.

All who know the author of this excellent little work, will expect to find it abounding in fatherly, affectionate, pious, and judicious counsels; nor will they be at all disappointed. The book will benefit both the head and the heart of every theological student, or young minister of the gospel, who will take the trouble to read it. Its advice is not theoretical, but practical—given by one who has had a long, useful, and unusually successful experience in the pastoral office.

We heartily wish that some friend of Christ's cause, who has money to give for the advancement of that cause, would pay for enough copies to enable the Board to put one in the hands of each student in all our Theological Seminaries.

III. Children's Packet, No. 4; containing, in a paper wrapper, seven small children's books. Price 12 cents.

IV. Children's Packet, No. 5.

A package of four little books for children, somewhat larger than those in No. 4. The names of these books are—1. Little Willy; 2. Samuel W. Kilpin; 3. Ruth Clark; 4. Another Lily.

V. Le Village dans les Montagnes. Pp. 24.

VI. La Bible est au-dessus de tout prix. Par le Rev. Edward Payson. Pp. 16.

These are excellent tracts, with which, in their English dress, the most of our readers are familiar. They are now issued by the Board in the French language.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.

No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

A MOVE IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

A friend has sent us a neatly printed circular made up of extracts from the minutes and statistics of Genesee River Presbytery. From it we learn that the Presbytery, at its meeting September 25th, 1860, appointed standing committees to superintend contributions from the churches in behalf of the General Assembly's Boards, and adopted the following resolutions, viz.

Resolved 1. That, in order to give unity to the action of these brethren, and prevent any collision as to the time of taking collections, they be organized as a General Committee on the Boards of the Church, and that the Rev. F. DeW. Ward be the chairman.

Resolved 2. That it be the duty of the committee on each Board, by correspondence or personal visitation, to see that a collection be taken annually in each church of Presbytery for the Board he represents; and that he report at each spring meeting of the Presbytery, the churches which have taken collections; and where none have been taken, report the reasons assigned for such omission by the session.

Resolved 3. That the Stated Clerk be directed to acquaint each Board with this action of Presbytery, and to give to each the name of the committee appointed to supervise its interests; also that he furnish each committee with a copy of this action.

Resolved 4. That the Committee be enjoined by Presbytery to urge the churches to aim at a yearly increase in their contributions, in view of the annually increasing liabilities of the Boards, consequent on their steadily widening fields of labour.

Resolved 5. That hereafter, no aid shall be recommended by the Presbytery or its committee to any church until the session of the applying church have, in their application, certified that every member of the congregation has been requested to aid in the support of the ordinances.

We hail this as a move in the right direction. It is our earnest conviction, that the Boards of the church will never be able to meet the worthy calls upon them, until each Presbytery efficiently superintends the work of systematic benevolence in its own bounds. We trust our brethren of Genesee River Presbytery will so carry out their model plan as to commend it to others. A few years of hearty working under such a system ought to show marvellous results. A valuable feature in the circular is a list of all the Ruling Elders in the Presbytery with the post office address of each.

PROVIDENTIAL PRESERVATION.

An excellent minister at Henderson, Texas, writes thus, in August last: "The appropriation of the Board of Church Extension, just at this time, will be the means of saving our church. We have been wonderfully afflicted in this section this season. All our crops, both corn and cotton, are destroyed with drought. In addition to this, there has been an organized plot to burn and devastate all this country. A number of towns and a vast amount of property have been destroyed—among the rest our town of Henderson. All the business portion of the town is destroyed, with about $250,000 worth of property. The flames came to the very walls of our church, but by a wonderful providence it was preserved unhurt. Some say the wind changed and blew the flames away. The fire together with the drought has prostrated us, and in these circumstances, you can scarcely conceive of the advantage and the cheering influence of your appropriation. So soon as the condition of the country will justify it, we expect to take up collections in all our churches for the Board. The Lord aid you in your good work."

GEO. H. VAN GELDER,
Treasurer Trustees of General Assembly,
Office, No. 820 Walnut Street.

Philadelphia, December 14th, 1860.

FORM OF BEQUEST FOR DISABLED MINISTERS OR FAMILIES OF DECEASED MINISTERS.

I give and bequeath to my executors hereinafter named ——— dollars, in trust, nevertheless, that they shall within ——— months after my decease, pay the same to George H. Van Gelder, Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, or to his successor for the time being in said office, for the use of such disabled ministers, and their families, as the said, The Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America shall or may designate.

NOTA.—This form will do for a pecuniary bequest. If stocks, or land, or other property is given, the phraseology should be modified to suit the case.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST

TO ANY OF THE

BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

OUR FISCAL YEAR ENDS MARCH 1st.

As this is the last number of the Record which will be issued before the close of our financial year, we desire to call the special attention of our readers to the importance of forwarding their contributions without delay. The fiscal year of the Board of Domestic Missions closes with the last day of February, so that all contributions intended to be included in our report of this year, must be received by the first of March.

We avail ourselves of the present occasion to urge upon all the patrons of the Board the importance of promptly and liberally contributing to the Treasury of the Board, which so greatly needs replenishing. Our funds are not only exhausted, but the Board has been compelled to incur a considerable debt. We have not only already been greatly embarrassed in our missionary operations, from the want of adequate funds, but must be much more so, unless speedily relieved by the benevolence of the friends of the cause.

NOTICE.—SPECIAL REPORT.

The form of a Special Report will soon be forwarded to all our missionaries. If any of these circulars should miscarry, the brethren can avail themselves of the form which we publish in the present number of the Home and Foreign Record.

We earnestly request the brethren to be prompt and punctual in filling up this form, and returning it to our office. It is very desirable that reports should be received from ALL our missionaries in time to incorporate in the Annual Report to the General Assembly the statistical information they desire. Reports received after the 20th of March cannot be included in our Annual Statistical Table. We would again earnestly request ALL to be prompt in this important matter.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS,
No. 910 Arch Street,
Philadelphia, February 1861.

Rev. and Dear Brother—The period is again approaching when we shall be called upon to render to the General Assembly a report of the operations of the Board of Domestic Missions throughout the year; and as the results of the labours of our brethren in the missionary field must, necessarily, occupy a prominent place in that report, we forward to you the annexed form of a Special Report, which contains the various items on which the General Assembly desires information. Will you be so good, therefore, as not only to give us some information on each item introduced, but also make that information as full and as accurate as may be in your power? We would ask it as a special favour, that you pay particular regard to statistical information; and should you be in possession of any interesting facts connected with your missionary work, that you would insert them under the head of "General Remarks." Your report, will, of course, include the amount of labour performed, under the appointment of the Board, from the first of March, 1860, or if appointed since that time, from the date of your commission.

As it will require some time to reduce into one the numerous reports furnished by our missionaries, we earnestly request you, after filling up the blanks and completing your annexed Special Report up to the first of March, 1861, or to the end of your commission, if it should close sooner, to return it immediately after date in an envelope to the Secretaries of the Board at Philadelphia. Your punctuality in this matter will greatly oblige us.

Sincerely and affectionately yours,

G. W. MUSGRAVE, R. HAPPERSETT, } Corr. Secretaries.

☞You will please not introduce into your Special Report any other business than that which properly belongs to it. Otherwise, in the press of engagements in the office, it may be overlooked. And should your quarter's salary be due at the time that you are forwarding your Special Report, do not expect payment on that report; but make a separate report for the quarter, and you will not be omitted in the regular payments of the office.

FORM OF SPECIAL REPORT.

☞NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS (IN FULL.)

P. S.—Are you in want of Clothing? If so, what family have you? Be particular to give height, age, sex, and general size of each member. Name any article of which you are in special need. We rarely have boxes of clothing on hand, and the ladies generally prefer to make up clothing with reference to particular families. As soon as we receive the information requested above, we will furnish it to the Ladies' Sewing Societies, who will prepare the clothing as soon as practicable. Give plain and full directions how boxes shall be marked and sent.

REPORT FROM PIKE'S PEAK.

Denver, K. T., November 29, 1860.

Rev. Drs. Musgrave and Happersett:

Dear Brethren—I am prepared to give you an account of my labours and explorations in this far-off country, with some suggestions as to its supply with missionaries. If the resources of the Board will admit, at least as many as three ministers should be sent into it, and the next General Assembly requested to form them into a Presbytery. There is ample room for more than three, but that number is required. A Presbytery organized here is desirable, because the distance is so great to the meetings of Highland Presbytery, or any that may be formed out of it. Ministers and sessions cannot be represented in Presbyteries in Eastern Kansas, nor can they have the oversight of them. Leavenworth and Lawrence, by the road now travelled, are seven hundred miles from Denver. The nearest church to this point is Selina, on the Smoky Hill, and it is more than four hundred miles off. A Presbytery on the ground could best superintend the propagation of the gospel in this region. It probably would be seldom represented in the Synod to which it would be attached; but it could supervise the work here, and be represented in the General Assembly.

One minister is needed to devote his whole time to Denver, one should be stationed in the Gregory diggings, and another at Tarryall. The places in the first-named are Gregory Point, Mountain and Central cities, Navada and Eureka Gulches, Gamble's or Gold-dirt Gulch, Quartz Valley, Missouri City, Lake Gulch, Bostonburgh, Russel's, Leavenworth, Graham's and Illinois Gulches. These districts are densely populated and large improvements have been made. There are Presbyterians scattered through them, all of whom desire a missionary. The New-school have a minister at Central City, but he is engaged in secular business to support himself. In the other districts there is room for a missionary of our church without interfering with him. He preaches only once on the Sabbath. In this section of the mining country it is said there were, during the last season, more than twenty thousand people. Many have gone to the States, but a large number will remain through the winter, and it is confidently believed that next season the population will be greatly increased. The amount of money invested in these districts is immense; the details would swell this report beyond ordinary limits. Reference to one Gulch will give you an idea of it. In Navada are more than forty quartz mills, and a large town has sprung up. These improvements were made principally during the past season. The quartz leads in the mountains each side of this gulch are very rich, and are believed to be inexhaustible; and the leads in Eureka are equally productive.

Across the range from Russel's Gulch are the Clear Creek and Fall River mines. Much work is done in this district and much capital is invested: new discoveries are being constantly made. In these valleys are a number of people, Presbyterian by education and sympathy. An energetic Old-school Elder will soon put up a quartz mill at Spanish Bar. The name of the town is Idaho. A missionary should be sent into this district, or it might be committed to the care of the one stationed in Navada and Russel's Gulches. The places named above are all in the mountains, from forty to fifty miles from Denver.

The Tarryall diggings lie to the south of Denver seventy-five miles. In this immediate neighbourhood are California and Georgia Gulches. These mines are considered very rich. Over the range west of Tarryall are the mines on Blue River, which are very productive. In this country, large silver mines have recently been discovered. The towns here are Hamilton in the South Fork near Tarryall; and on the Blue, Breckenridge and Bloomington. These are all small places, but the population in the mines last summer was large, and will be greatly increased next season. A missionary could be employed in these districts, and the Presbyterians who have investments there would be glad to have one.

The other section of the gold region is called Boulder, and is in Nebraska Territory. Boulder City is on a creek of that name, at the foot of the mountains, twenty-five miles north of Denver. The mines are twelve miles west, the principal of which is called Gold Hill. These mines have not been very productive, consequently many left them and went to those farther south. The Rev. John Steele, of Newton, Iowa, spent last summer there, but has gone back not to return. There are some women in Boulder City, and some people at Quartz Hill, belonging to our church, who would be pleased to have Presbyterian preaching. Their number may be increased next year. Golden City and Golden Gate are at the base of the mountains where the road from Denver to Gregory enters them—three miles apart. These are growing towns. If a minister is sent to Boulder, he could preach a part of his time at these points.

There is a district of country on the Arkansas River rapidly settling with a farming and grazing population, where it is desirable that a Presbyterian missionary should be located at as early a day as practicable. The towns are, Pueblo on the Arkansas, at the crossing of the great Santa Fe trail near the mouth of the Fountaine Qui Bouille; Canon City, forty miles above, on the Arkansas, and Colorado on the Fountaine Qui Bouille, where it issues from the mountains. One of the proprietors of Pueblo is a member of the Rev. Mr. Pitzer's church at Leavenworth. A missionary placed at Pueblo or Canon City, could supply all the settlements in that section. It will ultimately be densely populated, and it is important that it be early occupied by a Presbyterian missionary. Five ministers are needed to meet the demands of this country upon our church. Three without failure ought to be sent into it between this and the 1st of April. Will they be sent? Are there the men in our church who have the piety and calibre of intellect, willing, for the Master's sake, to deny themselves, and undertake the work? Men who love Jesus, and the souls of men, willing to preach; and who can resist the temptation to speculate in gold claims, quartz leads, and ranches. I would suggest that those commissioned be young men with some experience in preaching, and acquaintance with western life, or who can soon make these acquisitions. The importance of their being men of intellectual ability, is evinced by the fact that those to whom they will be called to minister are very shrewd. Three-fourths of my congregation in Denver are men, and nine out of ten could make a good political speech; some of them are adepts at the business. All over the mountains I met with men of similar character—lawyers, doctors, graduates of colleges, legislators and ex-congressmen—very sharp men. The question was frequently asked me, by those belonging to no particular denomination, "Why don't the Presbyterian church send missionaries into the gold mines?" and the reason asigned was, that the gospel is feebly represented by those of other churches.

The work of the missionary in this country is hard, particularly in the mountains. He ought to have a good Mexican mule, and Mexican spurs, to make him go. The only other mode of travel is by stage, or on foot. The stage is too expensive, and going afoot rather fatiguing for comfort, as I have found by experience. The mountains are very high and steep. The atmosphere is so thin that it is difficult to breathe fast enough to meet the demands of nature. All the breathing apparatus a man has is brought into requisition. If you had seen me climbing up the mountains, and winding through the gulches on foot, with my saddle-bags on my shoulder, puffing and blowing, you would have concluded that hunting the scattered sheep of the house of Israel is rather hard labour.

I organized in Denver, a church and a Board of Trustees, the first week in September. We had no place of meeting we could control. After itinerating around town some time with our meetings, the Trustees procured a room, as we supposed for the winter; but it changed owners, and after seating it, and making a pulpit, we had to relinquish it. They then rented another, larger and more comfortable, and transferred our seats and pulpit to it, but it will not contain our congregation. The number of communicants is small; the congregation is respectable. Many of the Presbyterians have returned to the States. Near thirty left, who would have united with the church had they remained permanently in the country, and two have gone back since the organization Some of these will return in the spring. There are others in the community, whose union with the church depends upon the question whether they continue here. Our meetings have already affected the public morals favourably; and the numbers that attend religious worship are greatly increased. Our congregation is large, and all the others have increased in hearers. It is evident we have essentially benefitted them.

The congregation need a church-building greatly. If they had one that would hold five hundred people, I believe every seat could be rented very soon. This would do something toward raising the minister's salary. The Trustees met a few nights ago, to discuss the project of building; but decided it was inexpedient to attempt it this winter, because of the tightness of money matters. The town Company appropriated four lots to the church, but, like many other such donations in Kansas, they are in the wrong place. They may be turned in as part pay for a building on some other lot. The C. O. C. and P. P. Express Co. offer us a site in a more central part of the city, on condition a church is erected on it. This proposition will be accepted, I think, in the spring.

It will be difficult to build up permanent congregations in this country for two reasons; viz.—the instability of the population, and the scarcity of money. Both these difficulties, however, may be removed as the resources of the country are developed.

It has been almost impossible for me to have religious meetings during the week; hence my labours in the pulpit have principally been confined to the Sabbath. I have preached regularly twice every Sunday during the quarter, and, when in town, met the Bible class in connection with the Sunday-school.

Very truly,

A. T. Rankin.

REPORT FROM NEW JERSEY.

A——, N. J. October 3d, 1860.

Dear Brethren—Another year of pleasant labour in the Master's vineyard has closed, and though I have little of striking incident to report, yet there has been a steady onward movement in our affairs as a congregation.

It is not quite a year since I was ordained to the work of the ministry, and installed pastor of this church. At that time our membership consisted of eighteen persons. Since that time, there have been added by certificate from other churches six, and on profession of faith thirty-eight, making our present number sixty-two. We have additions at every communion season during the year, and are expecting two or three to present themselves before the session this week.

I have baptized ten children, attended eight funerals, and performed one marriage ceremony. There has been but one death among the members of the church since its organization, more than two years ago.

There are now in our midst several prominent members of our congregation and influential men in the community, who seem to be almost persuaded to be Christians, and I have been hoping for some time past, that the Holy Spirit would bring them to a decision on the Lord's side. In his power is all hope for them, as well as for many others around us, for whose salvation I earnestly long, and fervently pray. O that he would come down and bring souls to Christ as he has done in days past!

Our Sabbath-school flourishes, our weekly prayer-meetings are pretty well attended, and our Sabbath congregations are increasing. Our benevolent contributions, though small, are regular and slowly increasing in amount.

We are not without our trials, and sometimes I am almost disheartened; but on the whole, God has greatly blessed us, and we rejoice in his goodness, give him all the glory, and hope for the still further and richer displays of his grace.

Yours truly, J. S. S.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

PROVIDENTIAL CALL FOR LABOURERS.

Under the Mosaic dispensation the vineyard of the Lord was of very limited dimensions. That dispensation had a most appropriate symbol in the land which God gave to the chosen people. The geographical boundaries of Canaan were the exact counterpart of that hedge of ceremonial ordinances whereby Israel was separated from all other nations that dwelt on the earth. There were, it is true, in "the middle wall of partition," which shut in the Jews and shut out the Gentiles, a door of entrance, by which those who were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel might enter and become partakers of the blessings of Israel's heritage. That door was, however, very strait, and few, very few, of the perishing nations became fellow-citizens with the saints, and members of the household of God. The vineyard, even in the days of Israel's glory, was but small.

This must be regarded as a most significant and suggestive fact, when taken in connection with the number of labourers appointed to work in this vineyard. The ratio of the ministry to the people of Israel was very large, no less than one whole tribe being set apart to the service of God. One tribe out of thirteen! Why if a man were to set up this ratio as the standard, under the New Testament, he would be looked upon as a visionary enthusiast. We have, it is true, no clear utterance warranting the conclusion that the proportion which Levi bore to Israel was typical of the proportion which the ministry of reconciliation should bear to the membership of the church under the New Testament; but it is certainly a fact worthy of great consideration, in any discussion on any question having reference to the number of labourers which the Christian church ought to send forth into the great harvest-field. The field now—under this dispensation—the field committed to the church by her ascending Lord, is not Palestine, but the world—a world hitherto bolted and barred against her, but now opened by the hand that hath signed and sealed her commission to enter and possess it. If the number of labourers may not be determined by Old Testament proportions, it may be inferred from New Testament providences. If we may not argue from the number of labourers given of old, we may argue from the number required now.

Look abroad, then, ye beloved youth of the church of Christ, upon that field from which you are to draw your conclusions as to the obligations now resting upon the body of believers, and the share of those obligations which belongs to you personally and individually. It is confessedly a wide field. "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." "The field is the world." "Even as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." "All power in heaven and earth is given unto me, go ye, therefore into all world, and preach the gospel to every creature" "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." O what a field, viewed even in its geographical extension! But people it with the more than twelve hundred millions of souls who stand upon it in one wide, waving, whitening harvest, and then look out upon it. Look at it, with its degraded tribes, on whom the curse of a broken covenant has been resting for ages, and on whom it still rests with accumulating woes, for which earth has no balm. Again, look at it as the Lamb breaks over it the seals of the book of the kingdom, and unrolls and reads, in the ears of its quaking nations, the purposes of Jehovah. Look at it, as from behind the drawn bars of former providential restraints, the white, and red, and black, and pale horses, go forth on their respective missions. Look at it as its dynasties and thrones are shaken and overthrown by Him who outlives all dynasties, and is higher and mightier than all thrones. Look at it, with its present doors of access, with the key to all its hitherto unapproachable dark places, in the hands of Christian nations. Look at this field, as this tempest-tossed race sinks beneath its bosom, to drink the wrath of the Lamb, where there is weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, and then say what is the duty of the church. If the number of labourers is to be determined by the magnitude and condition of the harvest-field, what an array of reapers is required, when that field is the world, and the harvest its population of perishing sinners! O, how is it, that those who profess themselves to be partakers of the salvation that is in Christ Jesus, that those who confess the slain Lamb as their King, and know that his salvation is the remedy for human woe, can look unmoved on such a field as this? What man, what church, can look upon it and say, 'I have done my duty in relation to its teeming millions?' Verily there is guilt on our Christian churches, guilt on our Christian families, guilt, great guilt, on our Christian youth. Who can survey the field, with here and there a weary, toiling, worn reaper, and not conclude that there is a debt of duty to the church's Head, and a debt of love to a lost world, which the church has not yet roused herself to pay? Is it not time that the slumbers of the Middle Ages were broken? Is it not time that the windows were thrown open to let in the light, when the Sun of Righteousness is ascending with wings of health and gladness toward his own millennial throne? Is it not time, when the gates of brass which shut in the nations are broken, and the two-leaved gates of Babylon unbarred, that the gates of the New Jerusalem—the twelve pearly gates—the gates that face the four corners of the earth, should be flung wide open, that the fulness of the Gentiles and the glory of their kings may come in as trophies of redeeming grace?

It is a glorious thing to be a Christian young man in this nineteenth century. But with the glory there is linked tremendous responsibility. Arise, beloved youth, and equip yourselves for the work. A greater work than that committed to the tribe of Levi is yours. O, tremble to be found in the mines of earth's golden treasures, when the Master is beckoning you away to his vineyard.

From the Presbyterian Banner and Advocate.

CANDIDATES SHOULD BE SUSTAINED.

The constant increase of candidates is no doubt cheering news to the church, and we trust there are few who will deny that the increase during the last year may, in some degree, be attributed to the increase of the benefice appropriated to them by the Board of Education. Previous to the year 1854, the amount appropriated to collegiate students was $75. Since that time, collegiate students receive $100, and theological $120 per annum, and the effects of this small increase are manifest. If, then, the effects of so small an increase manifest themselves so forcibly, there is reason to believe that a further increase would not be without its salutary effect. True, the Board of Education, in its present circumstances, is not unfrequently straitened to meet the increased demands; but, cannot the church place her servant in a condition that she may be able even to sustain her candidates? The annual expenses of a collegiate student, including board, room-rent, books, and fuel, cannot, with the strictest economy, be met with a sum less than $160. Add to this, other necessary incidental expenses, and clothes, and the amount is increased to very nearly $200. The collegiate and theological courses require, at least, nine years, and the candidate who has no other resources upon which to rely, except the benefice which he receives, and his own exertions, must necessarily have his course considerably prolonged. Or, should he meet with some friend willing to advance him money sufficient to sustain him, he will, at the end of his course, find himself nearly $1000 in debt. Again, it is seldom that any young man places himself under the care of the church, under the age of twenty-one years; add to this the usual time required for the course, and this, augmented by the time lost in teaching and other employments to raise means to prosecute his studies, and, according to the usual length of life, there remains but little time to be spent in the actual service of God in the ministry.

The ministry is not to be desired on account of any earthly emolument, and those who seek to enter this calling must expect many pecuniary embarrassments through life. These, every true disciple will cheerfully bear for the sake of Christ; but can we wonder that many young men of talent and energy are deterred from entering upon so tedious a course, when they carefully consider the ordeal through which they must pass before they can become actual servants of God in the ministry? Can we wonder that many become discouraged when their course is but half completed, and abandon it for other employments? Can we wonder that many of those who do succeed and enter the ministry, enter it with constitutions completely broken down by hard study and the anxieties of mind occasioned by not being able to see their way clear through? Any young man of ordinary abilities can, by industry and economy, in the time required for a regular course, collect means sufficient to establish himself in business, or secure a comfortable situation for life. On the other hand, he must exhaust the energies of youth, and strength of body, in preparing to serve the church, and she not sustain him.

Will the church not consider these things? Will she not place the Board in a condition to sustain her candidates? Will ministers and congregations that have hitherto contributed little for this purpose, not do what they can? "The harvest," even now, "is plenteous, but the labourers are few." A.

CHILDREN OF THE CHURCH RALLYING AROUND THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The following letter, fom a pastor in the State of New York, is, in these dark days, truly refreshing.

Dear Sir—Of the money sent herewith to your Board, eighty dollars is from the Sabbath-school for a scholarship. The school, which had languished nearly to extinction in consequence of our having no suitable place for it, is recovering rapidly in numbers and in the grace of giving, since we have entered our new lecture-room. A word dropped from you, which might be read to the school, in acknowledgment of their present donation—the largest they have ever given to this one object—would, I think, encourage them to greater efforts. Verbum sat.

Very truly, yours, &c.

Is not this a truly refreshing communication? Happy is the pastor who has such a Sabbath-school, and happy, mutually happy, are the children and teachers, in their common heritage of zeal for the interests of ministerial education. This offering, laid on the altar by youthful hands, has a peculiarly sweet-smelling savour. It savours of intelligence, piety, industry, benevolence, and Presbyterian loyalty. With such youth rallying around her, the Board of Education feels that, under God, she has nothing to fear.

A NOBLE RESPONSE FROM A VERY SMALL CHURCH AND A VERY POOR PEOPLE.

Dear Brethren—Your late appeal came duly to hand, and we would say, we are most sorry that your finances are in such a condition, and still more sorry that our means will not allow us to do more. As a church, we now have really only three families in our connection—six members—who are all in poor circumstances, and much in debt. Two of us—all who have as yet seen your letter—enclose one dollar a-piece, hoping that thousands of others will do the same thing, and speedily relieve your difficulty. All of which we humbly pray may redound to the glory of God, and the furtherance of the spread of the gospel.

Respectfully, J. E. Mc.
V. Mc.

How many Elders and members will go and do likewise? The elder first, the member next. Brethren of the Eldership, you hold the power; use it for the Master.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN SCHOOL?

1. It is not a school which can simply point to a staff of well-trained teachers, and say of them all, they are professors of Christianity. The teachers may be all that sound science and true religion can produce, and yet the school over which they preside not be entitled to the title of a Christian School. What though the well contain living water, if there be a stone on the well's mouth, which may not be rolled away? We thank God for the influence which the example of many of our Christian young men and young women may exert on the minds of the rising generation in our Public Schools; but whilst example may commend and enforce precept, it can never become a substitute for instruction. A holy life is a precious boon, whether in the family, the community, the school, or the church; but it can never rise above the rank of an indirect instrument in leading either youth or manhood to Christ. It is, after all, but the hand-maid of instruction; and there is no more reason to expect that Christian men or women, who occupy the important office of teaching, will convert the youth committed to their care by a godly life, independent of the inculcation of the saving truths of the gospel, than to look for the extension of the kingdom of Christ through the agency of a holy ministry that never preaches.

2. A Christian school is not one of which it can be merely said the Bible is read in it daily in some form. If the text books of secular learning were introduced to the minds of children, as the Bible is, when would they become acquainted with their contents? How much arithmetic, or geography, or grammar, would they know at the year's end, or at the end of ten years, if the principal of the institute were to read one or two pages in their hearing, once a-day? No school is entitled to the name of a Christian school, in which the truths of the Bible are not taught as regularly as the principles of grammar, or the facts of history. And wo worth the day, when Presbyterians entrust their consecrated youth to schools in which the Bible is read, but not taught.

3. A Christian school is an institution in which true religion and sound science are taught, and both sanctified by prayer. It should not be a matter of debate, whether the Church is bound, irrespective of what the State may do, to establish and maintain such institutions. Whether we argue from principles, or results, we arrive at the same conclusion. Christians are bound and commanded to train up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and where schools are established on other principles the converting grace of God is seldom, if ever, vouchsafed.

In making these observations, it is by no means our intention to speak in derogation of our Public Schools. We simply wish to assign them their proper place. We wish Christian parents to know, that however admirably equipped they may be for instructing the rising generation, in some branches of science, they are not to be confounded with Christian schools. It is not speaking evil of water, to say that it is neither wine, nor milk. Nor is it a disparagement of the excellent secular instruction, furnished by the state, to speak of it as an utterly inadequate substitute for a sound Christian education. This it never can be, and it is well for the church to know it, and act in view of its inadequacy, establishing, wherever she has the opportunity and ability, sound Christian Schools under the conduct of Christian teachers. We know of no other way of providing for the great lack of Christian instruction in the common school system. Sabbath-schools and family training, are important aids; but the "sessions" of the former are too wide apart, and the leisure requisite for the latter, is, in the present day, too rare to warrant us in placing much reliance upon it as the basis of national Christian instruction.

A Christian school with Christian teachers, and sound biblical instruction, and above all, a Presbyterian Parochial school with the doctrines of the Westminster standards, is what we need to mould the character of our American youth. It was, under God, minds cast in this mould that gave America her institutions; and if these institutions are to be preserved, with all their countless blessings and hallowed memories, it must be by statesmen who have learned in infancy, that "Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy him for ever."

DR. BURROWES' SCHOOL, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

After a few days of recreation, this school has been resumed in the first story of Calvary Church, the rooms of which have been generously tendered by its Trustees, to the school for the present. It is hoped, however, that the school will soon be removed to more suitable rooms. An eligible and central fifty vara (rod) lot has been purchased, for the site of college buildings, for the sum of ten thousand dollars. And the Board of Regents hope, with the aid of the good people of San Francisco, to be able to erect in a few months, a College Hall on this lot, and to organize college classes, by January next. They feel confident, that with God's blessing, the advantages of a thorough Collegiate course of liberal studies, may now be secured for our sons without sending them from home. It is their purpose to associate in this College with the Rev. Dr. Burrowes as its President, such a corps of tutors and professors as will afford to our sons at our own doors, as thorough and liberal an education as can be obtained abroad, and at much less expense, and with much less risk to their morals and health. This College will be open alike to all creeds and religions. Though controlled by Old-school Presbyterians, no religious test will ever be required, but all sects and denominations will be freely admitted, and their opinions and prejudices be uniformly and studiously treated with liberality and respect. Its denominationalism is only intended as a guaranty that all the moneys and contributions made to it, shall for ever be used according to the intention of the donors, and that the piety, moral character and literary qualifications of the President and Professors, shall be such as are approved of by the church. It is not to be a sectarian College, though, of necessity, in order to secure peace and efficiency in its management, it is under so much denominational control as to guarantee the security of the investments made in it, and the proper qualifications, moral and religious, in its instructors. Its friends and patrons are found among all denominations, and among gentlemen who are not members of any church, but who are desirous of keeping their children at home, and at the same time wish them to be thoroughly educated. It is much cheaper to send our sons from our own doors to college, than to board them away from home. And it is infinitely better to keep them under the sweet influence of home, "of mother and sisters dear." We are antagonistic to no other institution. For we believe that the more institutions we have in our rising State, of a high literary character, the greater the number of persons who will be able to secure the advantages of a collegiate education, for many are able to graduate at a college within reach of home, who could not afford to do so by having to go abroad, or to board away from home. And we are persuaded that by uniting our efforts in this city, we can now build up a College for the city of San Francisco, with the money that it would cost us to send our sons abroad for a liberal education, and then we shall have the advantage of having them at home, and of seeing an institution reared that will be a blessing to generations to come. We bespeak the aid of all Californians, and especially of all the people of San Francisco for the City College. We do not doubt but that the friends of a liberal and thorough system of education will soon build up here an institution that will be the pride of the city. We are now trying to lay the foundations of a College that shall be to San Francisco and the whole Pacific world, what the University of Edinburgh has been to Scotland and to Christendom.

W. A. Scott.

The brethren in California may indeed ask, "What hath God wrought?" Dr. Burrowes received his commission from the Board of Education in July 1859. Before a year of actual labour passes, the Board is informed that the school, which he was commissioned to found, "has become self-sustaining, as to his salary." And now, when the threshold of the second year is barely crossed, we are surprised and gratified by the above announcement from the pen of Dr. Scott. But little more than a year gone, and yet a school planted, which, under the wise counsel and benevolence of the friends in San Francisco and New York, is efflorescing into a College!

THE WANT OF THE AGE.

Not a little is heard, now-a-days, about "the wants of the age!" Good men and bad, wise men and unwise, real and false philanthropists, the pulpit and the press, all have much to say as to the demands of the age, and the best way of supplying them.

The Fourierite tells us we must herd human beings, as we do cattle; the Agrarian, that we must divide up property and land; the Agitator, that we must fall in with his favourite scheme of excitement; the Swedenborgian, that we must have faith in his dreams; and the Mormon, that we must bow down and worship in his temple. Every one cries out, that the age must adopt his views, or it is undone! One tells us the demand of the age is for universal education; another, that it requires liberty of speech, person, and conscience; and still another, that it must and will have an upheaving of the social state, and perfect uniformity of social privilege and enjoyment.

But as opposed to some, and far above and beyond all these things, there is A want, and it is THE want of the age. Do you ask what it is? It is THE Gospel! This is what the age wants—pre-eminently and supremely wants—and must have for its improvement and salvation.

The Bible is THE book of the age—of this, as of every age! It is not antiquated, old-fashioned, out of date! It needs no remodelling for the nineteenth century; and he is but a madman or a fool who pretends it! The idle, who would be amused; the visionary, who prefers dreaming to reality; the vicious, who would wallow in indulgence, may turn away from it to novelties, excitement, or the wild schemes of skepticism, delusion, selfishness, and lust. But if souls are to be renewed, communities benefitted, the age regenerated, our country and the world redeemed, it must be by the Bible—by Christianity.

The lawless spirits of the age must yield themselves to the law of God; the free spirits of the age submit themselves to the righteousness which is by faith; the proud spirits of the age be humbled to acknowledge their dependence on the cross; the depraved spirits of the age be renewed by the gospel of Christ as applied by the Holy Spirit. The great doctrines of the Bible must be made known, and the great duties of the Bible pressed home on every conscience, and heart, and life, in all their power, and by all the sanctions of eternity!

THE want of the age is the gospel; the plain, unadulterated and unmodified gospel—the gospel preached from the pulpit, taught in the family and Sabbath-school, sent forth in the Bible, and printed volume, borne by the press, the missionary, the colporteur, the private Christian, to the city and wilderness.—N. E. Puritan.

IGNORANCE AND PRESUMPTION.

Mere ignorance is not deserving of rebuke. No wise man will sneer at one who is less informed than himself, no good man will despise the unlearned. An honest well-meaning person will not even be pitied for his ignorance, so that the expression of pity will give him pain. Many a man who cannot read or write, or who cannot spell correctly, may be a sound and original thinker, whose views are worthy of high consideration. The most learned philosopher may receive from such a man hints of important truth, and lessons of practical wisdom. But when an ignorant person grows dogmatic, prates of his superior wisdom, and sneers at the views of those who have bestowed some care and thought upon plans or measures that he would urge, then the exposure of his ignorance may have a salutary effect. When such a person denounces others as behind "this enlightened age," then the measure of his common-school education may help to determine the weight of his opinion and influence.

It is a common mistake that great reforms have been achieved mainly by uneducated men. This is not so. Some of the apostles, it is true, were men of that stamp, but these were aided by inspiration; moreover, Paul—who was employed to develope the Christian faith—had the highest Jewish culture, and was not ignorant of Greek poetry and philosophy. Luther, Calvin, and their fellow-reformers of the sixteenth century, though some of them were of humble origin, were not ignorant men. Not a few of them were men of the most liberal education for that age. The leaders in the Puritan movement were men of whom the universities of Britain might well be proud. There is, after all, a connection between even the art of spelling and the work of a Reformer in church and state.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
January 12th, 1861.

Recent Intelligence.

CHINA.

Our latest letters are dated Canton, October 26th; Ningpo, October 15th; Shanghai, October 20th. From our Canton letter we learn that Mr. and Mrs. Preston had returned to that place from Macao, where they had been spending a short time for the purpose of recruiting their health. From Ningpo we are sorry to learn that there had been several cases of sickness among the members of the mission, but glad to know that there was none of a serious character. Mr. Rankin expected to receive a number of the pupils of the female school to the church at their approaching communion season. He mentions that there is a number of others, not connected with the school, who were candidates for baptism. At Shanghai the missionaries were in the enjoyment of their usual health, and were prosecuting their work as usual. Mrs. Reuben Lowrie and her three children arrived safely in New York on the 21st of December, having had a long, but in other respects, a pleasant voyage.

SIAM.

We have a letter from Bangkok of the 17th of October, mentioning the safe arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Mattoon and their associates at that place, on the 15th of September. They were most cordially welcomed by their missionary brethren on the ground. It was expected that a new station would be commenced at an early day.

INDIA.

We have a letter from Futtehgurh, of the 19th of October; Allahabad, November 1st; Karpurthala, October 30th. Mr. Scott, writing from the first mentioned place, gives the following interesting incident, viz. "I expect to baptize on next Wednesday, Mohun Lal, the pundit of whom I have already written. We have no man so shrewd, so well acquainted with the Bible, and, at the same time, with Hinduism. I hope he may be useful. He is certainly a very clever man, and, I think, has influence among his people." A letter has also been received from Mr. Ullman, dated Calcutta, October 30th, mentioning the safe arrival of himself and family at that place, after a passage of eighty-eight days from England. They expected to remain at Calcutta two weeks, and then proceed to their station, in connection with the Lodiana Mission.

AFRICA.

We have a letter from Liberia as late as the 1st of November. It is mentioned that more than four thousand recaptives had been landed at that place in less than two months, the great body of whom were from the Congo country. We were greatly grieved to hear of the death of George L. Seymour, the enterprising explorer, an account of whose journey to the Kong mountains was contained in a recent number of the Record. He was as decided a Christian as a successful explorer, and died happily in the hope of a glorious immortality. His last and most earnest expressed desire was, that the work he had undertaken of establishing a Christian mission in the interior of Africa might be carried on. Mr. Miller expected to commence his station among the aborigines, at a place he calls "Mount Coffee," about the first of January.

SOUTH AMERICA.

A letter from Mr. McLaren, published below, conveys the painful intelligence of the death of Mr. Sharpe, on the 30th of October. It will be read with deep grief by all who feel a particular interest in this mission.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

A letter from the Indian Orphan Institute of the 25th of December, mentions that there were twenty-three boys and eleven girls in attendance upon that school, and a number of others were expected soon. From the Choctaw Mission we have a letter as late as the 20th of December. The school at Spencer was full, and in other respects doing well. The school at Goodwater, we were glad to learn, was doing well, notwithstanding the absence of the Superintendent. The young ladies who manage that school deserve great credit for the energy and wisdom they have displayed in conducting its affairs. We are sorry to learn that there is much destitution and suffering among the Choctaws, and there must be much more, unless the provision made by the Council, of purchasing sixty-five thousand bushels of corn for the poor, is carried into effect. It is very doubtful whether the funds appropriated for this purpose can be realized in time to avert the sufferings.

CHINA.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SHANGHAI MISSION FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1860.

Death of the Rev. Reuben Lowrie.

The return of the season for sending to the Board an account of our operations for another year, reminds us very forcibly that "the night cometh in which no man can work," and that what is to be done by us for the countless multitudes of China must be quickly done. The lesson thus impressed upon us at the close of each recurring year, is emphatically enforced at the present time, by the fact that one of our own number, who was with us at the beginning of the year, has been called to rest. Our beloved brother, the Rev. Reuben Lowrie, died on the 26th of April last, after a lingering illness. The circumstances attending his long and trying sickness, his gradual decline, his and our alternate hopes and fears, have already been fully communicated to you, and we forbear to dwell upon them now. We desire, however, here to record our high appreciation of his talents, his attainments, and his earnest and intelligent devotion to the great work to which he had consecrated his life; and to express our deep sense of the loss sustained by the cause of missions in his death. May the Lord of the harvest speedily send forth more labourers into his harvest, in the place of those whom, in his infinite wisdom, he has seen fit to remove.

Accession to the missionary force.

While we mourn over the loss we have thus sustained, we would acknowledge with gratitude the many mercies we have received during the year. A few weeks before the death of Mr. Lowrie we were permitted to welcome among us as co-labourers, the Rev. J. M. W. Farnham, and Mrs. Farnham. Some of our number, who have suffered from illness, have been restored to health; and although there is still some sickness among us, we trust it is not, in any case, of a serious character. We have also great cause for thankfulness that, in spite of foreign war and internal disorders, we have been permitted, except for one short interval, to pursue our missionary work without hinderance; and that, when danger did, at one time, threaten us, we were preserved, by the mercy of God, from all harm.

Organization of a church.

Although we have still to mourn over the absence of those spiritual influences, which alone can give success to our labours, we have had the privilege of laying the foundation of a Christian church. On the 5th of February, a Presbyterian church was regularly organized, composed of members of the mission families, and one native convert. Our late brother Lowrie would, no doubt, have been requested to take the pastoral charge of this little church, but for the feeble state of his health at the time of the organization. Since his death, it has not been deemed necessary, for the present, to designate any one individual as pastor. Our native church-member continues to give satisfactory evidence that he has indeed been taught of God. We have at present no prospect of any increase of the number of our church-members, except in the case of one person, who seems to be sincerely inquiring what he must do to be saved. He expressed a wish more than three years ago to receive baptism, but was some time afterwards accused by his employer of aiding and abetting in the theft of a chest of opium; and although he was acquitted of this crime after an investigation before the English Consul, still the suspicion attached to his character from this circumstance, rendered it proper to act with more than ordinary caution. Since that time he has been absent from Shanghai, and has only recently returned. He still professes his desire to be received into the church, and we trust that ere long the way may be open for his admission to baptism.

Public preaching.

The preaching of the gospel has been regularly maintained in all three of our chapels. At the beginning of the year arrangements were made for services for five days in the week, besides those of the Sabbath, in both the city and suburb chapels. On account of the failure of Mr. Lowrie's health, however, it was but for a short time that this arrangement could be carried out. The attendance at our city and suburb chapels has not generally been large, although occasionally the rooms have been well filled. The attention paid has been such as to encourage us, and we trust that impressions have been made which will yet bring forth fruit. The small chapel at the south gate, where a regular service has been maintained every Sabbath morning, has generally been crowded to overflowing. This service has been attended by the pupils of the girls' day schools, and persons employed in the mission families. It partakes more of the quiet and orderly character of a Christian congregation, than can be secured at our other chapels, and it is on that account important that we should procure, as far as possible, the attendance of our heathen neighbours, who have shown a growing disposition to attend. It is to be regretted that the room is so small as to discourage their attendance, and we hope that we shall be able, ere long, either to enlarge the present building, or to erect a larger and, at the same time, a more substantial structure.

This service was conducted by Mr. Lowrie as long as his health permitted. Indeed, he insisted on preaching here long after we all thought his health required him to desist altogether, and after he had given up all his other services. As he became convinced that his labours among the Chinese were drawing to a close, he seemed to feel more than ever the value of the privilege of preaching the gospel to the heathen, and became more intensely anxious to see his hearers brought under the power of the truth. During the last months of his life, he preached with an earnestness, a pathos, and an unction, which will long be remembered by those of his associates who heard him, whatever may have been the effect upon the Chinese portion of his audience. Since his death these services have been conducted by Messrs. Mills and Gayley.

The services in the eastern suburb, we cannot but regard as of great importance. This has been the most crowded portion of Shanghai, and although outside of the city walls, it was the locality in which the largest business transactions of the place were carried on. Yet, in all this portion of the city, extending along the river bank, a distance of nearly two miles, there is not a single Protestant place of worship, except our own. The obstacle in the way of establishing such places of worship, has been the high rents, and the high prices demanded for building-lots in localities suitable for such a purpose. We were long desirous of establishing religious services in this quarter, but could not succeed in renting a suitable room at a price which we could afford to pay. During the year 1859, however, an opportunity offered of renting a large building which we thought might eventually be purchased. The rent, we thought, might be paid for a year or two, until arrangements could be made for purchasing this, or some other lot. Mr. Lowrie was very deeply impressed with the importance of having a church erected in this locality, which is not only very desirable in itself, but is at the same time within a short distance of our residences at the south gate. One of the last of his labours for the cause of Christ, was to call upon many of the leading merchants of Shanghai, to ascertain what amount of money could be raised for this purpose among them. He was much more successful than he had anticipated, and obtained the promise of more than two thousand dollars. He, however, did not, except in a few instances, procure anything but a verbal promise, nor did he leave any list of the names of those who had promised to contribute. The work, therefore, had to be done over again, and several of those whose names had been mentioned by Mr. Lowrie as large contributors, afterwards declined. We mention this to account for the fact that the amount actually secured is less, by several hundred dollars, than that mentioned by Mr. Lowrie. The subscription for this object in Shanghai, amounts to one thousand nine hundred and sixteen dollars. To this must be added the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, raised by the senior Secretary of the Board in New York, making in all three thousand four hundred and sixteen dollars. We have been negotiating with the owners of several lots, but the prices demanded were much larger than we thought it right, at the time, to give. At the time of the panic created by the approach of the rebels toward Shanghai, the owners of these lots fled from the city, and we have not since been able to get into communication with them. We hope that they will ere long be found, and as a large part of this populous suburb was burnt by the French troops, during the presence of the Rebels at Shanghai, we think it probable they will abate something from their former demands, although none of the lots we have been negotiating for are situated in the burnt district. That locality would not be so desirable for our purposes, as one nearer to the south gate.

Circulation of the Word of God.

In connection with the preaching of the gospel, efforts have been made to put in circulation the publications of our press at Ningpo, especially those portions of the word of God which have been printed. We could have desired to extend this distribution beyond the immediate vicinity of Shanghai, but the disordered state of the country has prevented our making excursions to any considerable distance beyond the city. Could we have obtained the services of any well-qualified colporteurs, we would gladly have availed ourselves of them; but none such, who were not already engaged, could be found. The city itself, with its numerous visitors from the interior, furnishes an admirable field for Bible and tract distribution, but during the past year the disturbances which have prevailed over so large an extent of country have greatly diminished, for the time being, the number of those coming to this place for purposes of trade. Many copies of the Scriptures and other books have, however, been put in circulation, the results of which we can never know till that day when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed.

Sale of religious Books.

The experiment of selling books to the Chinese, mentioned in our last report as having been commenced, has been continued through the past year. The success it has met with has not been very encouraging in a pecuniary point of view, but we are satisfied that it possesses substantial advantages in other respects, which abundantly justify the expense incurred, and fairly entitle it to be considered one of our permanent instrumentalities for reaching the Chinese mind. We find that it furnishes a place, open at all times, to which persons will resort for information on the subject of Christianity, who never would think of going near the house of a missionary. It has the advantage, too, of getting our books into the hands of that class of men whose respectability or sensitiveness—real or feigned—would prevent their receiving a book as a gift, when freely distributed in a crowd. Our sales hitherto can hardly be considered as showing anything in regard to what may be done in this way. Our salesman, although a steady and honest man, is not well fitted for such a post. He lacks not only the volubility and tact, but also the information and intelligence, which are so important. Besides this drawback, the panic prevailing in the city during the whole of the last half of the year, caused large numbers of the inhabitants to flee from the city, and the total derangement of business of all kinds, could not but have a very injurious influence on the sales of our little bookstore. During the last two months of the year, all business in that neighbourhood having been stopped for the time by the advance of the rebels on Shanghai, the store has been entirely closed.

Preparation of religious Books.

The preparation of books for distribution is an important part of our missionary work. Mr. Culbertson has continued to devote most of his time to the important work of translating the Bible in connection with the Rev. Dr. Bridgman. During the past two years the interruptions, from sickness in his family, panics and alarms among the Chinese, and several other causes, have been very discouraging. The work has, however, been carefully and steadily carried forward. In addition to the New Testament, which has been revised, the Old Testament has been translated to the end of the book of Psalms—the book of Job excepted. The printing has been carried forward to the second book of Kings.

The Bible is now the great want of the mission-work in China, and, in our opinion, it ought to be very largely distributed. But until we have a version which will command confidence, as at least a tolerably faithful representative of the original text, and at the same time idiomatic, in the main, as to style, there will not be a very extensive distribution of it by the great body of Protestant missionaries. This object, therefore, is one which calls for earnest and special prayer on the part of the people of God everywhere.

Translations into the colloquial dialects.

Next in importance to the translation of the Bible into the written Chinese characters, or general language of the country, is its translation into the various colloquial dialects. Although we have not yet, as a mission, done anything in the way of producing such a translation, we hope that some of our number will be able, ere long, to enter upon this work in earnest. We have, during the past year, united with the Baptist mission in printing, with blocks, an edition of Luke in the dialect of Shanghai, adopting for this purpose a version prepared by members of the Episcopal mission. The character used in this edition is the phonetic character, newly invented—a form of writing the colloquial which, in our opinion, possesses many and great advantages over any other system now in use. The cost of printing one hundred copies was seven dollars and thirty cents. We also need a good Commentary on the Scriptures, especially adapted to the wants of the Chinese. Mr. Lowrie was engaged, at the time of his death, on a Commentary on the book of Matthew, which will no doubt be found useful. His final revision of it was nearly completed, so that it may readily be prepared for the press.

Schools.

Two day-schools for girls have been kept in operation during the year, and one for boys since February, except when the panic, on account of the rebels, rendered it necessary to suspend them. Mrs. Gayley's school has had an average attendance of about twenty scholars. Mrs. Lowrie's had about the same number. It is still necessary to give to each scholar in the girls' schools a few cash each day, in order to secure a regular attendance. The reading and writing of the colloquial has been the principal study, and the more advanced pupils have committed to memory portions of the word of God, which we hope will make some abiding impressions upon their hearts.

Boys' school.

The boys' school was established by Mr. Mills, in the schoolroom connected with the city chapel. The attendance was very good until the movements of the rebels created so much alarm that nearly all the families represented in the school fled to the country. The native Chinese classics were taught to some extent, but much attention was given to instruction in the colloquial, as written in the new phonetic character, and the progress made by the boys was very encouraging.

During the months of December, January, and February, a night-school was kept by Mr. Gayley's teacher, for the instruction of the servants employed in the mission families, and any others who chose to avail themselves of it. Here, also, the main object was to teach the use of the new phonetic character for writing the colloquial. Many of the pupils, all of whom were adults, entered into the study with earnestness, and were surprised at the facility with which they learned to read books thus written, which do not require the aid of a teacher to explain the meaning of the words; and still more pleased at being able to write down, intelligibly, the words they are daily using. We hope this school will be resumed during the coming winter, and be a means of much good.

Refugees from the rebels—how instructed.

The movements of the rebels, which drove so many people away from Shanghai, also brought many strangers to it. Numerous refugees, whose homes were destroyed by the Rebels, or by plunderers following in their train, came to this city, in the course of their wanderings, in search of safety and assistance. Their number at one time amounted probably to ten thousand. It was a sad spectacle to see them lying about by the wayside, or crowded together under some open shed, or endeavouring to shelter themselves from the rain, under pieces of old matting propped up as best they could. The sick and dying could procure no better shelter than the strong and well; and mothers might be seen looking on with the indifference of despair, while their fatherless children were dying around them from starvation and exposure. To relieve this suffering, very little was done by the native community. In some instances, when they sought refuge in the spacious temples, in which were housed the idols of wood and clay, they were heartlessly driven out; and none of them were permitted to set foot within the city walls. The foreign community contributed over ten thousand dollars for the relief of these distressed people, and a small sum from this fund was placed in the hands of Mr. Mills for their benefit. Some of this money was distributed among them in cash, but it was thought better to give them employment, so far as it could be done, and pay them for their work. A number of the women were brought together daily for some weeks, and employed under the supervision of Mrs. Mills and Mrs. Farnham, in making up clothing to be distributed hereafter; the cloth for this purpose being furnished by some of our mercantile friends. Some thirty of the boys were gathered together in a school, where they read the Scriptures, receiving a small allowance in cash each day for their partial support. As another means of doing good among them, some of the adults who could read well, were collected together in our small chapel, where they spent the time in reading the Bible and religious books, receiving for each day's attendance an allowance of fifty copper cash, equal to about five cents of our money.

Most of these refugees were from the vicinity of Nanking and spoke the Mandarin dialect. They were frequently addressed by persons speaking that dialect, and those reading the Scriptures were examined from time to time on what they were reading. Many of them were recognized by some of their old neighbours here, who were more fortunate than they, as men who had been in affluent circumstances. Some of them were well read scholars and literary graduates. It is hoped that some good has been done by these means, and that the good seed thus sown will not be all lost. Unfortunately, the schools, both that for adults and that for boys, were soon broken up by an event which involved them and ourselves in a common danger—the approach of the rebels to Shanghai.

Visit to the Nanking insurgents.

About the 1st of June the Nanking insurgents succeeded in getting possession of the city of Su-chaw. They were visited there by several foreigners for purposes of trade, and some of our missionary brethren also went to that city to give them books, and learn what prospect there might be for commencing missionary operations among them. It soon became evident that they were in so much confusion and disorder, and withal so well satisfied with their own system of doctrine, that no permanent missionary agency could be established among them at present, with much prospect of such advantages as to justify the attempt. The rebel chiefs, while expressing friendly feelings towards foreigners, intimated to these brethren their purpose to take possession of Shanghai, while the Allies and Imperialist forces were engaged in the North. They were distinctly told that Shanghai was in possession of foreign troops, and that they would not be permitted to enter it without fighting. About the middle of August information was received at Shanghai that a large army from Su-chaw was actually on the way to this city. The alarm here was very great on account of the small force then available for the defence of the place. The whole military force consisted of but fifteen hundred men, and the naval force of but one small English gun-boat and a dismantled French frigate. Vigorous preparations, however, were made for defence, although it was hoped to the last that the rebels would not persist in a design which must involve them in hostilities with foreign powers. But on Saturday, the 18th of August, they appeared before the walls. Messrs. Mills and Farnham, with Mrs. Farnham, were at their houses at the south gate, when they were surprised to find themselves suddenly surrounded by rebels. They seemed, however, quite friendly, and although fired upon from the walls by English soldiers, they allowed the missionary company to pass through them to the foreign settlement without a single insulting word.

From that time until the following Thursday, great excitement prevailed. The families from the south gate were kindly received by some of our Baptist brethren, and by Mr. Olyphant, with whom they continued to reside about three weeks. Mr. Culbertson's family, and those living in the same neighbourhood, of the Episcopal and other missions, took refuge on board American ships in the river, where they were kindly entertained for a week.

Attack upon Shanghai by the insurgents.

The rebels can hardly be said to have made an attack upon the city, for although they literally "sat down before the walls, they did not fire half a dozen guns against it, if indeed they fired at all. Many of them were killed by shots from the walls—for they occasionally advanced within gun-shot—and many were killed also by shells thrown from the shipping, to which a reinforcement of two gun-boats had been received from Chusan.

Retaliation on the part of foreigners.

On Thursday, the 23d, the foreign authorities adopted the measure of opening a communication with the rebel chiefs, which they had a few weeks before positively declined to do, and explained to them that Shanghai was in possession of foreign troops, who held it for the Allies at war with the emperor Hien-fung. They immediately withdrew, and although they hold all the surrounding country, have not since approached this city.

By this movement of the rebels, a heavy loss has been inflicted upon the inhabitants of Shanghai, for the Allied troops burnt a large portion of the populous suburbs, thus rendering homeless many hundreds of families, and consigning many men of wealth to hopeless poverty. The brethren at the south gate, expecting their houses to be burnt, removed all their furniture to the foreign settlement. The expenses thus incurred, and the losses and damages sustained, has entailed a loss of at least one hundred and eighty dollars, which they are illy able to bear. They have made an effort, through the American consul, to obtain payment of this loss from the Chinese authorities, and, by the treaty, they are clearly liable for such a claim. They, however, utterly refused to recognize the obligation, and probably will not be compelled to pay it.

True character of the insurgents.

Some additional light has recently been thrown upon the character of the rebel chiefs by intercourse with them at Su-chaw, and by a visit to Nanking by the Rev. Mr. Holmes, of the American Baptist mission. The information thus obtained leaves little room to hope that the principal chief himself, with whom the movement originated, knows anything of the true nature of vital religion. His cousin Hung-Jin, however, was for some years employed by the London Missionary Society as a native preacher in Shanghai, though not formally ordained to the sacred office. About two years ago he succeeded in reaching Nanking, where he was at once raised to the dignity of Prime Minister, with the title of "Shield King." He is well instructed in Christian truth, and although he has grievously wounded the truth by yielding to the customs of his associates and becoming a polygamist, yet he seems sincerely desirous of correcting the errors of his cousin, and introducing among these men a purer form of Christianity. What his power for good may be, we know not, but his presence must, in all probability, prove decidedly advantageous to the cause of truth.

We have some reason to believe—and without positive evidence we might reasonably hope—that there are at least a few among these men, who are sincerely seeking the way of salvation. Whatever may be the final result of this wonderful movement, and however great the errors connected with it, we cannot but rejoice that the foundations of the old religious systems of the Chinese have been shaken, and that a hatred of idolatry, and some knowledge of the Bible, have been diffused among so many myriads of people.

It is an interesting fact, that Hung Sin-tsienen, the principal chief, has ever retained an earnest desire to see his first religious teacher, the Rev. J. J. Roberts, the only Christian missionary with whom he has ever had any intercourse. He has expressed his desire to see him wherever he has had an opportunity of communicating with foreigners—whether official persons, or private citizens—and in compliance with his often-repeated request, Mr. Roberts has come from Canton, and is now on his way to Nanking. We trust he may be able to exert an influence for good, and that he will receive that wisdom which cometh down from above. Special prayer should be made for him by those who have at heart the interests of the cause of Christ.

The only other topic which seems to call for any remark in this report, is the present aspect of the foreign relations of China, as bearing upon the progress of our work. On the 21st of August last, the English and French forces took possession of the Chinese forts at the mouth of the Pei-ho, after a sharp but brief struggle. A few days afterward, the terms of a treaty were agreed to by the Chinese Commissioners. They subsequently refused to sign the treaty as agreed upon, and the Allied armies were at once put in motion for Peking. Recent news has been received of another battle in which thirty thousand Tartars were defeated. The city of Tung-chau, within twelve miles of the capital, had been taken. Several English officers of high rank had fallen into the hands of the Chinese, and the complications of the affair, already sufficiently embarrassing, were likely to be greatly increased by this unfortunate circumstance.

What shall be the end of these things? It is impossible for any human foresight to predict what results might follow the occupation of Peking by a European army. This might complete the disorganization of the government, overthrow the reigning dynasty, and plunge the whole empire into a state of anarchy, thus greatly retarding the progress of the gospel. On the other hand, it might be the means of opening the way for the unrestricted preaching of the gospel in every city and village in the land. Let the church of Christ bear in mind, continually, before the throne of grace, the critical state of this populous country. Let prayer be made unto God without ceasing, that these wonderful events may be made to conduce to the salvation of hundreds of millions of perishing souls.

In behalf of the Shanghai Mission,

M. S. CULBERTSON.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE REV. JONATHAN WILSON, OF AUGUST 31, 1860.

The following letter from Mr. Wilson, relating to his severe affliction in the removal by death of his wife and only child, will meet with many sympathizing hearts among the people of God, and will be read with heartfelt interest.

I am well assured that I shall find in you and in all the brethren at the Rooms warm sympathizers. The Lord has laid his hand heavily upon me. The same disease that was sent by him to call your son Reuben to heaven, has made my happy home desolate. I mourn for a dear wife and child. But through the grace of the gospel I am not called to sorrow as those who have no hope. They, whose presence I miss so much, are now in their Saviour's presence and are like him. It would be cruel in me, even if I could, to call them back to the sins and sorrows of earth. God took them—he had the right, for he gave—and, though in tears, it becomes me to bless his name. Though my wife's missionary life was short, it was not in vain. It was her daily regret that she accomplished so little, but she did what she could. Her warmest sympathies were enlisted on behalf of this heathen people, and she frequently, during her last illness, expressed a strong desire, if it was the will of God, to live and labour among them many years. Her cheerful temperament and straight forward Christian course, even when under deep trials and affliction, rise up before me day by day, and happy will be my life, peaceful my death, if I can succeed in imitating them. For her sweet example and her testimony to the mercy and faithfulness of Jesus, both during her life and at her death, I am bound always to give thanks. For her to live was Christ, and to die was gain. I need not tell you how lonely I am. But now I am not alone. Jesus, the Friend of sinners, is near, and as he sympathized even to tears with those he loved, when he was upon the earth, I feel privileged to weep forth my sorrows at his feet, and can already testify to the rich consolations of his grace. I ought never to have forgotten that, as to his merciful dealings, he is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." But I did. Both before and after Mrs. Wilson's death I had seasons of deep spiritual darkness. I thought the hand of God was too heavy upon me. Instead of submitting, I murmured. Then I was left to bear my burden of sorrow alone. Of course it was too heavy. My soul sank in deep waters. My mental distress was so great that it began to impair my health. While my wife and child lived, however, the exercise required in waiting upon them was sufficient to keep me strong; but when they were gone, I failed to take enough of exercise, and then my deep gloom began to drink up my strength. The first week of August was a dark time, but the Saviour forgave my sinful unbelief, and the second week was brighter than the former one had been dark. But to keep me in mind of my sinful distrust he weakened my strength, or rather the result of my sinful conduct appeared in the prostration of my nervous system. For three or four days I could do nothing. Dr. and Mrs. House had started to Petchaburi on a tour. I began to regret that I had not accepted an invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Telford, who accompanied the Houses, to go in their boat. But Providence provided for his selfish, ungrateful servant. On the 13th, our little steam-tug, Jack Waters, started for Petchaburi with some six or seven visitors. Her owner gave me the offer of a free passage. I accepted, and leaving brother McGilvary alone, was soon on my way to join the Houses and Telfords, and reached them at noon on the 15th. Imagine their surprise on returning from their morning's ramble at finding me there. My snuff of sea-air had refreshed me some, but I was still weak. By restings I made out to climb the mountain on which the king's palace has been erected. The next day I made a similar ascent with a little less fatigue. But so rapidly did I improve, that climbing hills was thereafter performed with the elasticity of youth. I had several nice rides on horseback. In my rambles for health I was also able to do something for Christ in the way of talking with those I met, and in distributing some tracts and books. Sabbath, the 19th, I shall ever remember as among the most pleasant I have spent in Siam. I took some books and went out into the market. Sometimes I was received very politely, and the people listened attentively. Again, my stammering sentences and the precious name "Jesus" were repeated after me with an air of mimicry, and the whole ended in a chorus of laughter. At one place I was surrounded by about thirty men and boys of this description. After the first outburst was over, I succeeded in gaining the attention of three or four who seemed to be ringleaders, and soon the whole company became quiet, while I told them how happy the servants of Jesus Christ are in life and in death. One of them asked me if the religion of Jesus was better than that of the Siamese. My answer to this question was listened to with serious attention. On leaving them, three or four of the men said they would like to be Christians. I need not say I was much pleased with Petchaburi and the people. Its natural scenery far exceeds any I had yet seen in Siam. My four-and-a-half days there passed away pleasantly, and I may say, profitably. My strength of body was regained. Christ was with me, and therefore my mind was happy I am now quite well, though not so strong as when I returned from Petchaburi.

On next Monday I expect to start for another tour of ten days up the Meklong river. I hope to return home strong and ready for work. I have given you a rather prosy letter, but it has done me good to tell you my sorrows and my joys. I am very happy in my field of labour and my work. I hope and pray that God will spare me many years to labour in Siam, and when my day's work is done, there is a pleasant spot hard by the graves of my wife and babe, where I should like to rest my weary body till the morning of the resurrection.

You may be assured that we are very glad at the prospect of soon having helpers. Yet we were quite disappointed to learn that the number was less by two than we had expected. What a joyful day that will be when Mr. and Mrs. Mattoon and their associates reach us! We begin now to look at the sunny-side of Siam. You know its prospects were once gloomy enough. Our Saviour reigns, and therefore we rejoice, and will rejoice. We cannot thank him enough for sending us four new missionaries.

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SIAM MISSION FOR THE YEAR ENDING OCTOBER 1, 1860.

The year which has just closed has been, in many respects, an eventful one in the history of the Siam mission. Shortly after our last report we were called to mourn over the death of Quasekieng, the Christian teacher in the Chinese department of our school. His memory will long be cherished by his missionary and other friends here. It is rare that a convert from heathenism leaves brighter evidence that he was a child of God. He left a large family of children, who are members of the church by baptism, and are entitled to its watchful care.

Together with the other missions in this field, and simultaneously with Christians of all lands, "the world's concert of prayer" was observed in January. It was a season long to be remembered, and was much blessed to the mission. The interest which such a concert manifested impressed the minds of many of the natives, and tended to prepare them for the belief and reception of the gospel.

In April the city had another slight visitation of the cholera. Among its first victims this year was our dear sister Wilson. She was brought very low by it, but so far recovered as to give hopes of permanent restoration to good health. But it was followed by another disease which removed her, on the 11th of July, from the service of the church on earth to that of heaven—her death having been preceded only a few weeks by that of her infant daughter, thirteen months old. She has left a bereaved husband and friends to mourn her loss, which to her was unspeakable gain. She had given her life to the cause of the heathen. God designed to teach them by her death. She spoke much to the natives who visited her during her long illness, and they were constrained to see that nothing in Buddhism can cause such triumph in death.

And now, at the close of the financial year, we are permitted to welcome back our dear brother Mattoon and his family, with his other fellow-labourers, the Rev. Messrs. McFarland and McDonald, and their wives, who have come to join us in our labours and trials.

You will thus see that the year has had more than its usual share of bright and dark spots. The bright ones have been very bright, and the dark ones very dark, though a golden tint has lined even the dark clouds, giving much comfort for the present and hope for the future.

With these exceptions, the regular operation labour of the mission, except as interrupted by sickness, has been about the same as last year. It may be divided into three departments.

1st. The regular Sabbath preaching exercise at the station in Bangkok.

2d. The mission school which has been under the superintendence of Dr. S. B. House. And

3d. The tours made out into the various provinces and cities of the kingdom.

The two first are pretty uniform, and detailed particulars would only be a repetition of our former report, to which we would refer for more particular information. The usual attendance at the Sabbath exercise has been from sixty to more than one hundred. Many of those have been quite regular attendants for several years, and have received much Christian instruction.

The mission school has numbered, during the year, forty-six scholars, of whom thirty-one are in attendance at its close. The course of studies and the arrangement of the classes have varied but little since our last report. The school has a number of interesting pupils to whom we have looked with much interest as a foundation for the future church in Siam. Some of them are boys of more than usual capacity, and promise to be useful among their countrymen. We have been favoured in having a Christian teacher—Nai Chune—in the Siamese department, whose walk is still consistent, and whose influence, we trust, will be good in the school.

Several very interesting tours have been made during the year; two by Dr. and Mrs. House; one by Dr. House and Mr. Wilson; one by Messrs. Wilson and McGilvary; two by the latter alone, and one by him and a son of Dr. Bradley. These tours average about two or three weeks in length, and extend in all directions through the kingdom. It is one of the most interesting departments of the missionary work. It does not exactly meet our idea of what it should be, yet with the scarcity of labourers in all our mission-field, it is the best, and probably the only way by which to reach the masses in these Eastern nations. The objection to it is, that the labour is of rather too fugitive a character—not allowing an opportunity to follow up the seed sown and the impressions made. In all our tours we find persons who seem to be interested in our religion, who take books with eagerness and read them with apparent avidity, and are interested for a time, but before another tour can be made to the same place these impressions are effaced. But instances not unfrequently come to the knowledge of missionaries in which permanent impressions have been made, and the seed thus hastily sown has brought forth much fruit. And then, how else are the great masses in these nations to be reached? Here are thousands and millions outside of the large emporiums, which must from necessity be the centre of our mission operations, who are as sheep without a shepherd. They are born —they live, they die—they perish—what is to be done for them? We cannot bring them to our stations, nor can we go and live among them. All that we can do, is to leave our regular work as often as practicable, and, even in a hurried tour, meet, if but once, as many as we can—give them a general idea of the gospel plan of salvation—leave the tract, and the Scripture history, and the gospel—and leave them by prayer to Him who has commanded us to sow beside all waters—in the morning to sow the seed, and in the evening to withhold not the hand.

Two very perceptible good results flow from even this desultory kind of labour. One is, that the truth thus imparted excites a thirst for more. They learn where that can be had, and are invited to call and receive further instruction. The other is, the gradual knowledge of our religion which is scattered among the people. They get some of its leading truths, and what it professes to do for our race, and are, at least, prepared for the settled teacher when they are thrown near one.

It is a great cause of gratitude to our Heavenly Father, and a great source of rejoicing to ourselves, as missionaries, and, doubtless, to our friends and supporters at home, that we are able to begin another year with such a good reinforcement to our numbers. We see in this the answer to prayer—while the church was praying for Siam, a good little band was sent to instruct her sons and her daughters. We hope thus to be enabled to carry on all the departments of the mission work with more efficiency in future. We hope to do what we have long felt desirable—establish a new station outside of Bangkok—do more work in the city itself—more in the translation and dissemination of the Scriptures and religious books—as well as more of the fugitive kind of labour referred to above.

W have resolved to establish a new station at Detchaburi. Dr. and Mrs. House will probably go there first, during the present year, and make arrangements for the permanent location of a mission, with the hope that another family will join them in the course of a year.

Mr. Mattoon will resume his former services in Bangkok—superintend the printing-press, and employ the remainder of his time in translating.

Mr. Wilson will take the place of Dr. House as superintendent of the school. The new brethren will be engaged principally in the study of the language. Mr. McDonald will reside in one of our own houses. Mr. McFarland has been accommodated with a vacant house in the Baptist mission, which was very courteously and kindly tendered to him. Mr. McGilvary will occupy one belonging to the American Mission Association, near the centre of the city, where he will have an eligible situation for the distribution of books, and preaching, so far as he will be able. This is the disposition of our number which has been agreed on for the present, subject to such change as may be afterward seen advisable.

We cannot close our report without expressing our gratitude to our Heavenly Father for his goodness to us, as a mission, during the year. It is especially due in that he has disappointed our fears and exceeded our hopes in sending these beloved brethren to aid us in our work. We regard it as another evidence that God has blessings in store for this people. No greater evidence could be given of his favour than a faithful devoted ministry of his word. But still, we should be unjust to the perishing millions of Siam did we not at the same time remind the church that her wants have hardly begun to be met. While we are devoutly thankful for this acquisition, we must ask, What are these among so many? Our new station gives a pressing call for more immediately. It was with some hesitancy that we entered on such a step even with our present reinforcement. It was more with the hope and belief that we should be still further recruited during the year. We rejoice to know that the church is willing to send us the men if they can be found. Three instead of two were under commission last spring. Is there not one, or two, or a half dozen, to take the place of the one who failed to come? If allowed the privilege, we would directly address the students in our Theological Seminaries, and young pastors at home, and say, brethren, we have here an open door, an inviting field. We would conclude by being the importunate bearers to you of the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us!"

BOGOTA—NEW GRENADA.

DEATH OF THE REV. SAMUEL M. SHARPE.

The following letter from Mr. McLaren, of the 15th of November, conveying the painful intelligence of the death of Mr. Sharpe, will be read with heart-felt grief.

You will perceive by the date of this letter that we are at last in Bogota, and I am sorry that my first letter from here must be one of so sad a character. God, "who doeth all things well," has removed our dear brother Sharpe from the scene of his earthly labours. He died at one o'clock on the morning of the 30th of October. On hearing of our arrival at Conejo he went down from Bogota to meet us in Honda. We spent a few days together there, including a Sabbath, when Mr. Sharpe preached his first extempore Spanish sermon, very acceptably, to quite a large audience. This was his last public ministration. We left Honda on the 17th, and arrived here the following Saturday. Up to Friday evening, Mr. Sharpe had apparently enjoyed perfect health, and several times so expressed himself. That night, however, at Manzanas, he was seized with a severe chill, followed by fever. On Saturday, riding in from Manzanas, he was quite unwell, and immediately retired to his bed. His first symptoms were only those which accompany the fever usually brought on by passing from the hot to the cold climate. But it was not long before the fever assumed a more serious form, and a very malignant abscess appeared on his left arm. We obtained for him the best medical advice, but in spite of every effort he continued to sink until death relieved him from his sufferings, and ushered his spirit into the presence of his Saviour, in whom alone he trusted. Mourning, as we did, over the physical pains of his dying bed, we could not but rejoice to witness the triumph of faith in his last hours. When he began to realize that there was but little hope of his recovery, with a face radiant with faith, he said, "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him until that day." During the most of his sickness his mind wandered, but even then prayer was the language of his lips. In his more lucid moments he gave precious evidence that his soul, like the Psalmist, feared no evil; for the Lord was with him: his rod and his staff they comforted him. The day before his death he called all the household to his bed-side, bidding farewell, in a most affectionate manner, to his wife, his friends, and the servants. For each one he had a word of Christian exhortation or warning. A number of young men, who have been under religious instruction in connection with the mission, were present at this time, and seemed deeply impressed as their dying instructor proclaimed to them, for the last time, the precious truths of the gospel. His last words to them were, "Soi mui feliz," (I am very happy.)

How inscrutable is the providence which has taken our brother from us just at this time! We can only say, "It is the Lord, let him do as seemeth him good."

The body of Mr. Sharpe was deposited on Friday, the 2d, in the English Cemetery, by the side of his little son.

You will perceive, my dear Doctor, how this sudden dispensation changes the condition of affairs in regard to our mission here. Spanish services and instruction are necessarily suspended, and my time for months to come, must be devoted to the acquisition of the language. I have begun weekly services in English, and shall continue them, although the attendance is by no means encouraging. I would urge the immediate return of Mr. Pratt. We shall, in a great measure, be losing the ground that has been gained until he does return.

With regard to the pending revolution, it is impossible to say what will be the result. In the North, where the government was previously victorious, there has been another formidable rising, and very likely the government will be defeated in that section. In the South, so far as we know, General Mosquera is still inactive. A large flotilla left Honda a few days ago against the revolutionary party along the river and on the coast. I doubt the entire success of this expedition. I have no doubt, however, that the navigation of the river will be resumed before Mr. Pratt arrives out.

Since leaving Barranquilla we have had rather an eventful time. After getting to Las Mercedes the second engineer was lost overboard, and we were obliged to return to get another. We then left Barranquilla for the third time, and had a slow, but not unpleasant passage up the river. Arriving at Conejo —where we were compelled to remain three days— we took canoe, kindly sent down by Mr. Jenny, from Honda, and reached that place after two days delightful travelling, spending one night in a deserted mansion. We remained a week at Honda, where we were most hospitably entertained by Mr. Jenny. Mrs. MacLaren and myself were both seized with fever after Mr. Sharpe arrived there. Mrs. MacLaren recovered in three days, but it clung to me all the way up the mountains, and I was confined to my bed for a week after arriving in Bogota. The third day from Honda, Mrs. MacLaren was seized with a violent attack of cramping pains, and was obliged to get off from her mule and to be carried in a chair from Chimbi to Manzanas. But her health is greatly improved since our arrival at Bogota, and I feel confident that this climate will entirely restore her health. Mrs. Sharpe was taken quite sick the day after our arrival and was confined to her bed throughout Mr. Sharpe's sickness. She is much better now.

MISCELLANY.

SOUTH AFRICA.

The field in this direction is still white and promising. Anxious efforts are now made to push the gospel into the central parts of Southern Africa. There is a Christian heroism at work which seems inspired by that grace which will crown it with success.

Mr. L. Grout, of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, writing from one of their stations, shows the success of the gospel.

"This station was originally commenced by Champion and Adams, more than twenty years ago, at the Umlazi river, and was transferred by Dr. Adams in 1848 to its present locality, some ten or twelve miles further to the south-west, making it now a little more than twenty miles from Durban. Here is a native church numbering about sixty members, a flourishing day-school, and a good Sabbath audience. Here, too, lie the mortal remains of our departed brother Adams, reminding us that the night cometh, when no man can work. An hour's ride round about, took us to the dwellings of several of the natives connected with the station, whose houses, in point of material, construction, furniture, order, and neatness, would not suffer by a comparison with a majority of the dwellings of men in Christian lands. Spades and ploughs, carts and wagons, and many other marks of civilization, show what the gospel can do to raise men out of the filth and stupidity of heathenism, to minister to the wants of the life that now is, as well as to prepare for that which is to come."

William E. Schenck, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 821 Chestnut Street.

All communications, reports, remittances of money, and orders from Colporteurs, to be addressed to Mr. Winthrop Sargent, Superintendent of Colportage

Orders for books, other than from Colporteurs, and letters relating to the business of the Depository, to be addressed to Mr. Joseph P. Engles, Publishing Agent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. Engles, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to James Dunlap, Esq., Treasurer.

OUR FISCAL YEAR.

The fiscal year of the Board of Publication will close with the last day of the present month (February): All amounts received before that time, will be acknowledged in the Annual Report to the next Assembly—all received later will go over to the Report of next year.

In view of the heavy drafts making upon our Colportage Fund, to sustain colporteurs now in the field, and of the already deeply indebted condition of that Fund, we earnestly request pastors and Sessions, treasurers of Presbyteries, or whoever else may have funds in their keeping for the Board of Publication, to transmit them immediately to James Dunlap, Esq., 821 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

MUST OUR COLPORTEURS STOP WORK?

Until November our receipts for colportage were largely in advance of those in the corresponding months of the preceding year. Since the beginning of November there has been a fearful falling off in the receipts of all our Boards, as well as of all benevolent societies in the land. Upon the causes of this sad change it is unnecessary here to remark. When this sudden falling off began, it found our colportage system in enlarged and most useful operation. The Board had never had so many colporteurs in the field, or more usefully employed. New fields had been entered and occupied with marked success. Several labourers had, at great expense, been sent among the French Canadians in the region of Kankakee, Illinois. A District Superintendent of Colportage had just before gone to California, to establish more fully, and extend there our colportage operations. Hence the colportage expenses of the Board were much enlarged.

The sudden change in our receipts has left the Colportage Fund largely overdrawn, while additional drafts are made upon it every day. The deficiency now stands at about $15,000, while another quarter's salary is nearly due to the larger part of our colporteurs. Such being the case, the Executive Committee, at a recent meeting, decided that it was a plain dictate of prudence to curtail the number of colporteurs. At a subsequent monthly meeting of the Board, the Corresponding Secretary made a full exhibit of the state of the work and its expenses, and of the past, and probable receipts therefor, after which it was unanimously

"Resolved, That, under existing circumstances, the Board approves the resolution of the Executive Committee, to appoint, for the present, no new colporteurs, and to re-commission none (except in special cases) whose commissions expire."

We know the hardness of the times. We know how difficult it is for many upon whose liberality we have been accustomed to rely, now to make remittances. We leave the case with our Christian friends in all parts of the land. Must these self-denying colporteurs cease from work for want of support? Or will God's people help us with means to keep them at work? Let those who are able to send us any contributions send them speedily; send them from love to Christ and souls, and accompany them with their prayers. Let pastors lay the case before their churches, and secure their annual collections for us without delay. Be they large or small, the amount will be most acceptable.

COLPORTAGE ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

The following is taken from the Pacific Expositor, issued at San Francisco, California. We hope that the friends of colportage in the Atlantic States, as well as on the Pacific slope, will appreciate the greatness and necessity of the work Mr. Wells has undertaken, and will aid the Board, in this time of its need, to sustain him in that important field.

"District Superintendent of Colportage.—Since our last number we have had the pleasure of welcoming to our coast the Rev. S. T. Wells as District Superintendent of Colportage for the Board of Publication. Mr. Wells has had successful experience in such work in the West. On the evening of his arrival, he preached in Calvary church to a large audience, and gave great satisfaction. The work before him, on this coast, is a great one in respect to the extent of the field, the difficulties to be met, and the necessity of supplying so destitute a region with religious books. The cost of carrying on Mr. Wells' work by the Board will be very great. But, as they say in making the appointment, 'it is so great a work that it must be done at any cost.' The interests of the Presbyterian church, and of hundreds of thousands of souls demand it. The Board of Publication is doing a great work for Christ's cause, and we hope the contributions of the churches will be increased as the demands require. The Colportage Fund will especially need replenishing by larger contributions. Mr. Wells will meet with the hearty co-operation and sympathy of his brethren. He seems to be eminently fitted for the work, and has engaged in it with a whole heart. Those who wish any of the publications of the Presbyterian Board should address Rev. S. T. Wells, San Francisco. The Board will now keep him supplied with all their publications."

BOOKS FOR SAILORS.

A lady having deposited in the Distribution Fund of the Board a few dollars for books for Sailors, the following was received in acknowledgment.

——, January 1, 1861.

Rev. Dr. Schenck:

Dear Brother—I am thankful that the authoress of the "Widow's Sixpence," has not forgotten the sailor. Now, while he is remembering himself, he should not be passed over by the friends of Christ. Glad voices are continually coming up from the sea. Some fourteen ships of our Navy have daily prayer-meetings on board. How many merchant vessels, I know not, but a large number. To hear of the conversion of almost all of a ship's company, is not uncommon in these days. Our port was visited, a few weeks since, by a barque, with all on board but two, professing Christ. While here they were continually at work for Christ.

And this book distributing seems to be as much blessed of the Spirit as ever. Would that health and means permitted me to put in circulation thousands of good books, where I now do but dozens. Only a few days since, a sailor called on me, and said that the books I gave him some four years ago, were the means of his conversion, and that now he was a member of the Rev. C. Jones's church, New York. Good books on ship-board are effective for Christ.

Thanks that the sons of the ocean are coming to Zion with songs. Truly, "the day dawneth," with all the clouds and darkness in the political horizon.

Yours, in Christ, J. B. R.

COLPORTAGE AT KANKAKEE AND VICINITY, ILLINOIS.

The Colporteurs of the Board continue to labour diligently and successfully among the French people in Northern Illinois. The following extract from a letter just received, will be read with interest.

Kankakee City, Illinois, January 4, 1861.

Dear Brother—Brother L. not being able to write in English, requested me to write to you, and transmit to you the following report. He has continued to labour as before reported, dividing his time between St. Anne and Kankakee, visiting from house to house, reading, conversing, and praying with the people. * * * * Generally his visits have been very encouragingly and comparatively blessed. Especially in a Roman Catholic family at S. A., where the mother was given to drunkenness. He made them some visits, in which he spoke to her about the evil of drinking ardent spirits, and about the necessity of her being saved, by God's grace, through Christ, from the power of sin, and of her heart being renewed. After a while she became convinced of her state of sin, and was much alarmed, feeling the dangers of her position. She had never read the Bible before. She asked for one, which was given to her and was cheerfully received. She has since given up her drinking, and is reading the Bible with her family, and now she has experienced peace with God, as she says, hoping that she has sincerely repented, and seeks her salvation in Christ alone.

He has also visited a young girl who was sick with consumption of the lungs. She was without peace, dreading death as the king of terrors. But she learned, through his instrumentality, that Christ was her peace, and she is now in the heavenly mansions that Christ went to prepare for his beloved disciples. She died triumphantly in the faith of the gospel, relying quietly on Christ's blood. I myself visited her a few days before her death, and I was much delighted to see her faith, hope, and desire to be with Jesus.

At K——, two families have been induced by him to search the Scriptures, and to give up Romanism. They are now regular attendants on the evangelical worship, and they feel the need of praying to God from their heart.

THE POWER OF READING.

Benjamin Franklin tells us, in one of his letters, that when he was a boy, a little book fell into his hands, entitled Essays to do Good, by Cotton Mather. It was tattered and torn, and several leaves were missing. "But the remainder," he says, "gave me such a turn of thinking as to have an influence on my conduct through life; for I have always set a greater value on the character of a doer of good than on any other kind of reputation; and if I have been a useful citizen, the public owes all the advantages of it to the little book." Jeremy Bentham mentions that the current of his thoughts and studies was directed for life, by a single phrase that caught his eye at the end of a pamphlet, "The greatest good of the greatest number." There are single sentences in the New Testament that have awakened to spiritual life hundreds of millions of dormant souls. In things of less moment, reading has a wondrous power. George Law, a boy on his father's farm, met an old unknown book, which told the story of a farmer's son who went away to seek his fortune, and came home after many years absence, a rich man, and gave great sums to all his relations. From that moment George was uneasy, till he set out on his travels to imitate the adventurer. He lived over again the life he had read of, and actually did return a millionaire, and paid all his father's debts. Robinson Crusoe has sent to sea more sailors than the press-gang. The story about little George Washington telling the truth about the hatchet and the plum-tree, has made many a truth-teller. We owe all the Waverley novels to Scott's early reading of the old traditions and legends; and the whole body of pastoral fiction came from Addison's Sketches of Sir Roger De Coverly, in the Spectator. But illustrations are numberless. Tremble ye who write, and ye who publish writing. A pamphlet has precipitated a revolution. A paragraph may quench or kindle the celestial spark in a human soul—in myriads of souls. Take care what you yourselves read. Take care what sort of reading you place within reach of your children, your families, and your Sabbath-schools.

THE SYNOD OF KENTUCKY,

AT ITS LATE SESSION IN LOUISVILLE, KY., ON THE SUBJECT OF COLPORTAGE.

M. G. Knight, District Superintendent of Colportage for the Board of Publication in Kentucky and Tennessee, having been heard in behalf of the Board, touching colportage in the bounds of Synod, it was,

Resolved, 1st. That, inasmuch as the Board has generously committed the superintendence of their work of colportage in our bounds to us, at our instance, by appointing a member of this Synod to the care of this work, and has manifested a disposition to extend their work throughout our bounds, to the extent of the means they may be able to control, that we recognize a corresponding obligation on our part, to use our earnest endeavour to sustain the work. And as our churches, for the most part, have heretofore omitted to take collections for this Board, we earnestly recommend all of them to take up annual collections for it, with a liberality corresponding with the enlargement of the work in our bounds.

Resolved, 2d. That we believe that the colportage of our Board may be made a most powerful agency for the instruction and comfort of our people—for their protection against the assaults of error in its every form—for the general promulgation of our denominational views and practices, and the consequent extension of our cause, second only to the preaching of the word.

Resolved, 3d. That we recommend to our ruling elders especially, and to other members of our churches possessing gifts and graces qualifying them to labour successfully with their fellow-men, as God shall enable them so to do, to engage in this work, which furnishes them with so powerful an agency for doing good.

NEW SABBATH SCHOOL BOOKS.

The Board of Publication has just added the following interesting new books to its catalogue for Sabbath-school libraries.

I. A Mother's Prayers Answered. 18mo, pp. 190. Price 25 and 30 cents.

This is a most touching sketch of the lives of six young persons, whose hopeful conversion could be traced to the earnest prayers, the faithful instructions, and the holy example of their mother. The book is from the pen of a pious aunt.

II. Marion Leslie; or, the Light at Home. With an introduction by the Rev. H. A. Boardman, D. D. 18mo, pp. 295. Price 40 and 45 cents.

Dr. Boardman pronounces this "a valuable contribution to our stock of publications in this department of literature." It was written by a young lady during her last illness.

III. George Miller and his Mother. 18mo, pp. 215. Price 40 and 45 cents.

This book will prove a favourite with young readers. It gives an account of a little boy who loved his mother, and by persevering diligence and pious principle, became a successful teacher and a faithful minister.

IV. Remarkable Escapes from Peril. Illustrative of Divine Providence. 18mo, pp. 308. Price 40 and 45 cents.

Authentic accounts of remarkable interpositions of Providence, which cannot but be popular with youth who are fond of exciting and marvellous adventures.

V. Aunt Carrie's Budget; or, Fireside Stories. By Sarah A. Myers. 18mo, pp. 174. Price 30 and 35 cents.

The "Budget" contains four stories worth reading —The Mysterious Button, Naughty Fanny, Cowardly William, and Anna Walters.

VI. Whispers from Dreamland. By Nellie Graham, author of "Little Annie's First Thoughts about God." 18mo, pp. 128. Price 20 and 25 cents.

Dreams sometimes convey useful instruction. Truth is often conveyed in the similitude of a dream. The contents are—1. A Dream of Life, an Allegory. 2. Jamie's Dream, or Jacob's Ladder. 3. The Household Angel, or the New-Year's Gift.

VII. Cares and Comforts. By the author of "Lame Letty," &c. 18mo, pp. 190. Price 30 and 35 cents.

A poor woman, with an idle drinking husband, and a helpless family of children looking to her for support, is oppressed with cares until she finds comfort in religion, and happiness restored to the household.

VIII. Boys of Wyoming Valley. One of Life's True Tales. By Mrs. Sarah S. T. Wallace, author of "Julia's Visit," "Rosalie's Lessons," &c. 18mo, pp. 164. Price 25 and 30 cents.

This is a true tale of the times of Indian warfare, and of the adventures and after-history of two boys, whose father was killed in the Wyoming massacre.

IX. Words of Wisdom Illustrated and Applied. Being a Sequel to "Little Words." 18mo, pp. 285. Price 35 and 40 cents.

This book is from a pen that has often gratified, and, we hope, edified youthful readers. It is not written in solemn sermon-style, but in lively conversations, full of pleasant instruction. The chapter on "Crooked Things" cannot fail to please and to profit.

Any of these books may be obtained by addressing an order to Mr. J. P. Engles, Publishing Agent, No. 821 Chestnut St. Philadelphia.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.
No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

STATE OF THE TREASURY.

The liabilities of the Board of Church Extension exceed their means on hand fully $5000, and applications for a still larger sum are awaiting their action. We dare not anticipate our income any further at present. Unless, therefore, the treasury is replenished, feeble churches and self-denying missionaries must suffer. Allow us, in connection with this statement to call special attention to the subjoined admirable article on "Church-Building" taken from a recent number of the New York Observer. It will well repay more than one perusal.

CHURCH-BUILDING.

FREQUENT CALLS FOR HELP.

The great variety of applications for charitable aid, so constantly made to the liberal and wealthy men of our cities, is no doubt sometimes trying to their patience, and it is not strange that they should often weary of well-doing. A stranger can have but little idea of their number or importunity. A college needs an endowment; professorships or scholarships need to be founded; a struggling church in some important locality requires aid to complete its house of worship, or avert the foreclosure of a mortgage. Some benevolent society is straitened for funds, or some reform movement needs money to initiate it. Indeed, there is no end to the variety of applicants, each crying, "Give, give."

Among these claimants to charity crowding and jostling one another, those which are specifically ecclesiastical often fare the hardest. There is with some a prejudice against giving to churches. They have seen organizations which were uncalled for, or unwisely located, fall to the ground, and the funds expended have been lost. They have seen church endowments which have only worked mischief, ministering to avarice, if not strife. Such results have excited antipathy towards this class of applications.

Certainly, we would not commend them to the liberality of the charitable without scrutiny. But neither would we have them indiscriminately rejected. The local church is an institution established generally at no little cost of effort and self-denial. It had its inception in the experience of spiritual destitution and the fervour of earnest prayer. Its early history is usually a history of struggle. It is planted to reach the wants of generations yet to come. It gathers to its support many who, identifying its success with the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, cherish it with all the warmth of a hallowed affection, and devote to it sometimes what they can ill afford to spare. It is not Christian, it is scarcely human, to deny them our sympathy, or withhold that "God-speed" which cheers them on in a course which developes the noblest features of character.

Other charitable claims can often make more show and parade. Their aims and prospective results can be set forth with more effect. A college or a theological seminary delights with ready gratitude to immortalize its benefactors in the names of its professorships. The favourable bearing of educational institutions on the development of material and industrial interests can be set forth in glowing style. The claims of a benevolent institution which has passed already the period of its probation, the origin of which antedates the memory of the living generation, and the results of which can be marshalled in imposing tables of statistics, come before the community with a degree of prestige which relieves the necessity of laboured argument in their behalf.

But the local church, in the very time of its greatest need, is yet an experiment. It has no meed of immortality to confer on its benefactors. It has no historic standing, scarce a specimen sheaf of its promised harvest. It occupies an humble, an obscure position. It appeals to a class of interests with which the world at large is not in sympathy. Its peculiar claims, sensibly felt by those who nurse its infancy, are feebly appreciated in part because it is so difficult to depict them to the colder eye of the stranger. If it had at command its own possible future—if it could uncover at a glance the harvests it should reap in a single generation, it might at once remove every scruple, and secure at once the full measure of its demands.

But this is impossible. The darkness of the future covers the chances of its stability and success. It may fulfil the most sanguine hopes of its founders. It may become an institution of perpetual blessing to after generations. It may be visited by successive revivals, the glorious ingathering of successive harvests. It may become the fountain from which streams of blessing shall flow forth to the ends of the world. But all this is yet in the distant and unknown future—a future to be explored only by faith and hope.

And yet the history of the individual local churches of our land—with some sad exceptions—is such as to inspire confidence in the minds of wise and liberal benefactors. They have proved themselves to be the nuclei of benevolent effort. Each of them—to a greater or less extent—has been a missionary institution established on a permanent basis. To the community around it, it has been an oasis in the desert. Under its grateful shade popular intelligence and public morals have been nursed and sheltered. The school-house has sprung up in close proximity to the house of worship. The village—grateful to the thoughtful eye as "sweet Auburn" itself—has seemed to smile more sweetly as it rested secure beneath the spire of the village church. The very neighbourhood has worn a new aspect from this added feature of the landscape.

Meanwhile, various activities of benevolence have been set at work, harmoniously co-operating for the welfare of man and the glory of God. The thought of the community has been turned into religious channels. Over plans of business and pleasure, the shadow of higher interests has been thrown. The Sabbath-school, the social meeting for prayer, the solemn services of the sanctuary, have all been exerting their quiet but powerful influence. Light has gone forth. The leaven has spread. In a thousand ways the blessing has gone abroad, and found its way to humble homes. Character has been moulded by it. Passion has been restrained by it. Vice has been rebuked by it, and forced to hide its diminished head.

And yet unless within that sphere some revival of unwonted power is experienced, the fruits of which are announced in striking paragraphs, the history of that little Christian band is scarcely known beyond its own limits. It may be that in years to come it shall be told that some Brainerd consecrating his life to India missions, some Jonas King toiling up the steps of learning that he might lay his hard-won laurels on Christ's altar, or some Judson, carrying into his mission work a heroism that battle-fields never witness—it may be that in years to come it shall be told that such an one was born there, and then the memory of that humble church, linked to a life that has been as a burning and a shining light, receives a tardy vindication. Then it is felt that all the charity and self-denial that were expended there, have been more than repaid in the beneficent career of a single servant of God, and that millions of wealth could not compensate for the loss of such an one to the church of Christ.

Donations received by the Board of Church Extension, during the month of December 1860.

DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Vermillion, Dakota Territory,
January 21, 1861.

Dear Brethren—On yesterday we dedicated to the Triune God the Presbyterian house of worship at Vermillion. It is an humble hewed-log house, but it is the only church edifice in this entire territory! It was filled to its utmost capacity with a very attentive audience. I preached the dedication sermon from Psalms cxxii. 7. The dedicatory prayer was offered by the Rev. A. T. Eckels of the Methodist church.

As we received $50 from our Church Extension Committee, our house is, of course, free from debt. We have a respectable church bell, and a Sabbath-school in which the Shorter Catechism is regularly taught. Our library was donated by our Board of Publication. I have laboured a little over a year in this territory as a domestic missionary. The above-named results show the wisdom of the expansive policy of our Board. The blessing of our covenant-keeping God has evidently rested upon us. The prayers of God's people are earnestly solicited. As to our locality, permit me to say that we are on the Missouri river, and thirty-five miles above Sioux City, Iowa.

If any Presbyterian families contemplate moving into this very fertile region, the ensuing spring, and wish to gain additional information respecting it, they will please address me at this thriving town.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOME MISSIONARY.

It is one of the glories of Christianity, that to whatever duties and sacrifices the follower of Christ is called, there are attached to these duties and sacrifices, certain privileges which amply compensate for all the suffering they entail.

The home missionary, who goes forth to the desolate fields of Zion at the West, "weeping and bearing precious seed, shall not only come again, rejoicing and bringing his sheaves with him," but, even in the midst of his labours, he enjoys blessed and glorious privileges, such as the slothful and inactive Christian has never experienced.

It is a privilege to be permitted to aid in laying broad and deep the foundations of society, to mould it, while in its plastic state, into forms which shall insure the permanency of good order, intelligence, and a pure morality in its future history.

It is a privilege to be permitted to assist in establishing good institutions in a growing and thrifty town; to aid in securing the observance of the Sabbath, the promotion of temperance, the organization of schools for intellectual and religious culture.

It is a still higher privilege to help in rearing a spiritual temple for God, a church of the redeemed, in which the ordinances of the gospel are administered, and souls are born into the heavenly kingdom. That temple may seem insignificant now, and blind unbelief may fail to recognize the firmness of its foundations, the beauty of the superstructure, or the height of its towering pinnacles; but in the ages to come, the Divine Architect will claim it as his work, and then "shall the topstone be brought in with shoutings of grace, grace unto it," and the humble under-builders shall have, from his gracious lips, their due meed of praise.

It is a blessed privilege to be permitted to labour for Christ; to point sinners to the Saviour of sinners; to encourage the feeble, to strengthen the weak, to reprove the erring, to comfort the afflicted, and rejoice with those who are joyful in God. It is especially a privilege to do this, when such labour manifestly tells in the great work of Christian evangelization, in rearing churches which shall be the fountains whence shall "go forth the streams that make glad the city of our God;" mother churches, which, in the not distant future, shall send out a host of daughters to obey the Divine injunction, to worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.

It is a glorious privilege not only to labour for Christ, but to suffer with him, to understand not only the power of his redeeming grace and dying love, but to experience also the fellowship of his sufferings, "for, if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him." This honour have the home missionaries to a greater extent than most of the servants of Christ. It is not unseldom the case, that their course lies through manifold perils; perils of disease, hunger, thirst, and nakedness; perils by waters, by robbers, and above all, by false brethren; perils of flood and field; perils from ungodly and unreasonable men, the enemies of the cross of Christ, and the advocates of a godless and licentious infidelity. But amid all these perils and dangers, these trials and sorrows, it is a privilege to labour for Him who bore all our sorrows, and was afflicted in all our afflictions.

It will be a blessed privilege, one transcending all earthly experience, when the labours and toils of this earthly pilgrimage are ended, to enter the home of the redeemed above, to hear from the gracious lips of our ascended Redeemer the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord;" to sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with prophets, and apostles, and martyrs, and with the great multitude, who, through much tribulation, have entered upon their heavenly inheritance, and, through the ages of eternity, to strive to comprehend more and more completely, the length and breadth, the height and depth of the love of God, which passeth knowledge.

Such are some of the privileges of the home missionary. Who shall say that they are not fully commensurate with his trials, privations, and sacrifices? Home Mission Record.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS.

H——, J. D. Co., Illinois,
December 15, 1860.

Rev. Drs. Musgrave and Happersett:

Dear Sirs—The quarter lately closed, like a true picture of life's brief day, has had its lights and shadows. Among the former may be mentioned the completion and dedication of our new house of worship in this village. These events have not been trumpeted by newspapers as matters of public concern; but they have brought joy and gladness to many deeply interested hearts in this place. Thanks to a kind Providence, to the Board of Church Extension, and to the friends in our vicinage, we now meet in a neat and commodious edifice, unburdened by that abhorred incubus, a church debt. Our congregation has largely increased, and we have cheering evidence that our church is winning favour among the people. With a few exceptions, I have been enabled to perform my missionary tours, (the distance between my two churches is fifteen miles,) and fulfil my regular appointments, and, though few have been gathered into the church, the betokenings are such as to animate hopeful exertion. On the occasion of our last communion at Zion's Grove, I had the pleasure of receiving into membership of the church a son and a daughter of one of our elders—both children of promise in more senses than one.

But shadows also have fallen upon my path. That distressing disease, fever and ague, has attacked and prostrated myself and several of my family, unfitting us for the duties and enjoyments of healthful life, and making many of our days dreary and our nights wearisome. Yours, &c.,

J. C.

A CHEERING REPORT FROM VIRGINIA.

C——, Jefferson Co., Virginia,
December 11, 1860.

Rev. and Dear Brethren—I have the pleasure of informing you that, within the current quarter of my labours, there has been, in this mountain region, a manifestation of more than usual interest in the cause of the gospel. In one of my congregations, Lovettsville, (which lies within the bounds of Potomac Presbytery,) a number of young persons were awakened to a lively concern for their souls, about a week before the election; and, on that very day—so usually marked by a totally different spirit—there was joy unspeakable in more than one of the families under the care of your missionary, parents and other kindred, and neighbours, rejoicing over youth of both sexes, who had been dead, but were alive again, had been lost, but now were found. At many houses, both in the village and surrounding country, on that day of memorable national concern in politics, there were earnest congregations, prayers and singing, showing forth the praises of Him who makes his people willing in the day of his own power. I have been tardy in reporting to you this cheering intelligence, for the joy seemed too great to endure; but, after watching the work prayerfully for more than forty days—the last seven in my sick room—receiving by letter, almost daily, evidences from the converts, penitents, and others, testifying to the continued progress of the good work, I think it proper to let you know, brethren, that the care which you have been exercising over the dilapidated walls of our Jerusalem among these mountains, has not been altogether in vain.

Nor can I close this brief statement without adding, that in this harvest there are others reaping and rejoicing with us, zealous and self-denying co-labourers, both ministers and people, of four other denominations—the Methodist, Lutheran, German Reformed, and Episcopalian churches. Thus five different bodies of Christians are refreshed and strengthened by these gentle dews which are descending upon the mountains of the Old Dominion.

Your servant in the gospel,

N. G. N.

EXTRACT FROM A REPORT.

M——, N. C.

Dear Brethren—The time has nearly expired for which I am commissioned to labour in this field. The year now drawing to a close has been one of deep interest to me in Lebanon church. There has been an interesting attention to the means of grace during the whole year. We have added, on examination, to the communion of the church, twelve individuals. These have been mostly the children of the church. There is one case of some interest. A man and his wife, who formerly rarely attended church at any place, have been regular in their attendance for four or five months, have erected a family altar, joined the Sabbath-school, connected themselves with the church, have broken off from their wicked associates, and, in the judgment of man, are true Christians. He is a poor man in the things of this world, but I trust he will do good in the church. Yours, &c.,

J. E. M.

A NEW FIELD IN KENTUCKY.

P—— O——, Ky. November 12, 1860.

Dear Brethren—The first quarterly report of my labours in this field should have been made at the first of the month, but owing to my absence from home, has been delayed.

As this is a new field, it may be well to give you an account, at some length, of the state of things here. This place is a mining village, with a population of about 300 souls. About one-half this number are natives of this region; the remainder are foreigners—English, Scotch, Irish, and Germans. Up to the time of my arrival, there had been no Presbyterian preaching, and but little of any kind. The proprietor of the mines, who was an Episcopalian, had made repeated efforts to obtain a minister of his own church, but failing in that, was ready to receive one of any Evangelical denomination. Most of the native population had been accustomed to the Methodist church, and were inclined thereto, though but a very few were members. The foreigners had been connected, years ago, some of them with the church of England, and a few with the Presbyterian church of Scotland. I arrived here about the middle of July, and, with the exception of two Sabbaths, have been here since that time, preaching twice on the Sabbath, and holding a Wednesday evening service during the week. There has been, most of the time, an attendance of from forty to eighty or a hundred; the foreigners manifesting most interest, and attending most regularly. Brother Bayless, of Ashland, made us a visit in September, and took the initiatory steps of an organization. On Sabbath afternoon, he gave some account of our church—its doctrines, government, &c., and twelve persons applied for admission, to whom he administered the communion. At night, further opportunity being given, six more were admitted. We did not think it best to proceed to the election of Elders, and thus complete the organization at that time. This we hope to do some time during this month, when it is probable a number of others will unite with us.

When I first came here, there was a certain prospect that there would, in a short time, be some improvement in the navigation of this river, (the Big Sandy,) and a large increase of the population, and it was only in view of this that I consented to come. Nothing further has been done in the matter, and it is perhaps rather more doubtful now than it was then. Should it not be made, I would scarcely be willing to remain, and indeed it would not be worth while, as most of the families would probably move away for want of employment.

My labours have been confined entirely to this place, and to what may be considered an outpost of this station, the place where the coal-diggers live, one and a half miles distant. There seems to be no opening in the surrounding country, the Methodists and Baptists occupying the whole ground, and jealous of other denominations. This state of things will not continue always, probably, but may for some time. I will endeavour to be in readiness to take advantage of anything favourable that may occur.

I cannot conclude without adverting to the death by drowning of one of our most promising members. He was a native of Scotland, in middle life, and had been about four years in this country. From my first acquaintance with him, he manifested much interest in religion. After I had been here about three weeks, I had almost made up my mind not to remain, and left, for the purpose of at least looking at another field. The report got abroad that I was going away, and as I was starting, this man met me with tears, inquiring if I could be leaving them, and asking what they would do. The deep concern he manifested had much to do in bringing me to a determination to return, and that without going to the other place I had in view. I think he was prepared for death, and it is a source of great comfort to me that I perhaps was of some assistance, by the blessing of God, in preparing him.

Your brother in Christ,

C. N. C.

GOOD NEWS FROM VIRGINIA.

Bull Creek, Wood Co., Va.
February 13th, 1861.

Dear Brethren—It is again my duty to open a correspondence with the Board. After my return from Lake Superior, I spent a few weeks among my friends in Connellsville, Pennsylvania, and then, by the request of many members of my own (Washington) Presbytery, came to this region, and have been preaching in Bethel church for two months. Here is the place where I began my work in the ministry. I found the people all exceedingly glad to see me among them again. We have held meetings more frequently than usual. During the second week in January we had preaching day and evening for nearly the whole week. A good work of grace is, as I trust, going on among our people. Several hopeful conversions are already known, and many are inquiring the way of life.

All the people urge me to remain among them. I have consented to do so if arrangements can be made for my support. In the present troubled state of the country, there is a great scarcity of money here. Business is prostrated, and the people are unable to do as much as they would desire to do.

Very truly,

C. P. F.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

DUTY OF SELF EXAMINATION.

This duty, incumbent on all, (2 Cor. xiii. 5,) is peculiarly binding upon ministers and upon candidates for the ministry. Beset, as both classes are, with peculiar temptations, exposed as they are to a peculiar enmity on the part of Satan, it behooves them to examine themselves whether they be in the faith; to prove themselves, and know whether Jesus Christ be in them. We write, in the present instance, for those who contemplate an entrance upon the sacred office. Desiring not to have dominion over their faith, but to be helpers of their joy, we would counsel all such to deal faithfully with their own souls during their course of preparation.

In order to self-examination there are three things which are indispensable. 1. A proper disposition of heart in reference to this particular duty. 2. A due knowledge of the means to be employed in the performance of it. 3. A full recognition of, and dependence upon the agency of the Holy Spirit in the prosecution of it.

1. As to the first, we would specify among the foremost the grace of sincerity. The heart that is destitute of this grace is not likely either to enter upon, or submit to the unmasking and undeceiving incident to the work of self-examination. Sincerity must characterize every step of the entire process, or the duty had almost as well be left unattempted. The examinator must be desirous of knowing his real condition, and willing to acknowledge it, however bad and humiliating it may be. Though the trial should result in establishing the charge of envy, or hatred, or malice, or evil-speaking, the man must be prepared to admit the conclusion and confess the sin, and deplore it before God. Brethren, be sincere when you turn your eyes inward upon the fountain of all thought, and feeling, and action.

2. Another all-important qualification for the right performance of this duty is a spirit of calm and patient reflection. One of the greatest obstacles in the way of a Christian's progress is the difficulty of fixing the mind upon itself. To observe the sins of others, or our own outward transgressions of speech and behaviour, is easy; but to lift the vail and enter the funum of thought and emotion, and read the record of lust and ambition which conscience has recorded there, is a task from which the mind instinctively turns away. Deformity does not like to contemplate itself in a truthful mirror, nor does the soul like to have its moral deformities portrayed and emblazoned before its gaze. Thus the merely metaphysical difficulty which the mental philosopher encounters, is increased, in the case of the Christian, by a moral bias of a most inveterate character. This bias, or habitus, is altogether insurmountable by the natural man. The unrenewed soul will never fix its thoughts upon its own carnality, so as to discover and abhor its own moral pollution. And even after regeneration, the difficulty is not absolutely removed. The mind—the mind in all its powers—is renewed, but it is not sanctified. The dominion of sin is destroyed, but sin is not annihilated. There still remains the law in the members warring against the law of the mind, whose effort and tendency ever is toward the re-enslaving of the soul. This law is in direct opposition to the work of self-examination. As she of Bahurim hid the messengers of David in a well, "spreading ground corn thereon," so doth this handmaid of Satan put forth all her artifice to conceal the remaining garments and lineaments of the old man, by spreading over them some grace or commendable quality, that may divert attention and disarm suspicion. She will, moreover, bring into requisition all the disturbing elements of her own remaining carnality to distract the soul, and employ the opiates of lust to stupefy, and becloud the mind. To turn the soul back or inward upon its own moods, and thoughts, and emotions, therefore, is a difficult work, and to prosecute this work efficiently, to the exposure and condemnation of indwelling sin, is a task that may well be called not only a conflict, but a warfare. Who is sufficient for these things? Who can sit in calm judgment upon his own soul, and, arraigning himself as a culprit, examine with sincerity and patience the entire array of witnesses which rise up to put him to silence, and to clothe him with shame?

3. The next great requisite in order to the performance of this work, is a due knowledge of the means to be employed. We here refer to the rule or standard by which we are to judge of our spiritual condition. This is no other than the word of God. To perform the work of self-examination we must know the tests by which our estate is to be determined. If we would know whether we are Christ's, we must ascertain whether his Spirit dwelleth in us. If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. The vital union, which is the fruit and issue of the federal union, is effected by the Holy Ghost, who takes up his abode in the soul, and constitutes the man a temple of God. This union manifests itself in fruit. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Where the Spirit dwells, as the bond of vital union with Christ, these fruits will appear. There will, it is true, be a diversity in the measure in which they are produced, in different persons. There will be in some cases one hundred, in some sixty, and in some a thirty-fold increase. As the measure of fruit is, so will the evidence of our living union with the Saviour be. In some instances the measure of fruit will be so straitened that the man may doubt whether he be a Christian at all. In other cases, the measure may be so abundant, that the soul may rejoice in full assurance. Let a man examine himself by the word of God in reference to his fruit-bearing. Remember, dear brethren, the fearful doom of fruitless branches. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, He taketh away. He taketh the fruitless branch away from its apparent connection with the vine, in order that He may cast it forth from the vineyard, and commit it to the flames.

4. In the work of self-examination, it is indispensable that we recognize and seek the aid of the Holy Spirit. It is his to apply the purchased redemption. It is by his agency the fruits from which we are to judge of our condition are wrought in us; and without his illumination we will not be able to conduct an examination involving the discovery and scrutiny of the affections of the soul. The eyes of our understanding must be enlightened before we can know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power toward us who believe. If the Spirit dwells in us as the earnest of our inheritance, if He bears witness with our spirits that we are the children of God, if, as the Spirit of the Son, he is sent into our hearts crying, Abba, Father; if it is He who sheds abroad in our hearts the love of God, and thus imparts a hope that maketh not ashamed, it must be manifest that self-examination, without his aid, is impossible. Then, beloved young men, when you take the word of God in your hands to enter upon this all-important work, be sure to look to God through Christ for the gift of the Holy Spirit. Remember that it is He who conducts every process by which the redemption of Christ is applied to your souls, from the hour in which you discover your own moral nakedness and guilt, until, with the robe of Christ's righteousness upon you, and the image of the First-born within you, it is yours to be with him where he is, and to behold his glory.

If you would save your own souls, if you would have the joy of God's salvation, if you would save the souls of those who shall wait upon your ministry, enter upon, and be diligent in the work of self-examination.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

For the Home and Foreign Record.

A PLEA FOR OUR ACADEMIES.

Sixty academies are now under the care and control of our church. They occupy a position intermediate between the common-school and the college. To them a very difficult, and a very important part is intrusted, in the education of our sons and daughters. These are the nurseries from which our colleges must be recruited from year to year. Here it is that the foundation must be laid on which all higher institutions must build. In a great majority of cases, the student is moulded for life in the academy. Hence we infer the necessity of placing these institutions on such a basis as will enable them to do their work in the most thorough manner. If this part be neglected, we must expect failure, or very meagre success, in all higher departments.

These views were advocated in the last Annual Report of the Board of Education. And we are pleased to know that this Board justly regards the academy as an essential link in the chain of our great educational scheme. But do our churches, and people generally, appreciate the great work that should be done in these classical schools? We fear not, if we may judge from the sad embarrassments in which many of them are left to struggle for a precarious existence. Could this be the case, if these fountains of all our classical streams were duly valued? Surely not; and the existence of such neglect, calls loudly for redress, that Zion may not suffer in her vital interests.

There are obvious reasons why the church may fatally neglect her classical academies, even while she cares, with commendable zeal and liberality, for her higher institutions.

The magnitude of the latter more readily arrests her attention, and elicits the alms and prayers of her children. But the former do their equally important work in a more unobtrusive way, and in an humbler sphere.

Besides, it has been the long established policy and fixed habit of our church, to support and endow colleges and theological seminaries; but her attention to classical schools is of more recent date. Hence higher institutions more commonly acquire the aids requisite to success. Some are enabled to erect costly buildings, others receive princely donations and legacies, and others obtain complete endowments to support their professors.

In all this we rejoice, and would gladly see the patronage of those noble institutions greatly extended. This should be done, and that for which we plead should not be left undone. But while tens and hundreds of thousands are expended on the higher schools, who gives his thousands to establish or sustain our classical academies? Such cases occur but rarely. These are worthy of all honour. But do the Presbyteries which establish academies generally aim to furnish them with a boarding-house, a library, a philosophical apparatus, or to secure a partial endowment to sustain a competent corps of teachers? Is it not rather the prevailing, but erroneous opinion, that an academy should indeed be created, but not sustained, and that with a bare existence they should sustain themselves without means, and flourish without facilities?

The cases are extremely rare, in these times of cheap education, in which a Presbyterial academy can have such a run of patronage in students as will even support the necessary number of teachers, much less acquire the additional facilities essential to stability and good success. Not less than two classically educated teachers are needed to do the work of education in any truly classical school. And these must be supported, or they cannot be retained. And as the academy is intended to receive and educate students from all parts of a Presbytery, or from a still wider field, proper arrangements for lodging and boarding students are essential. Also, besides recitation rooms, rooms for literary societies, and something in the way of libraries and apparatus are very important.

Now, suppose that an academy is located in a suitable place, that a building for recitation rooms alone is erected, and competent teachers appointed, but nothing more is done. The local patronage is limited, and there are no suitable or adequate arrangements for lodging and boarding students from a distance. The duties require not less than two teachers, but there is neither endowment nor any other resource, except the pittance of tuition fees, affording, perhaps, a meagre salary for one. Being an ecclesiastical school, it can receive no aid from the state, and, perhaps, the churches all decline or neglect to aid it. The Board of Education is applied to, but nobody has enabled the Board to lend a helping hand. This is no fancy sketch, but the actual condition of some of our Presbyterial schools of this grade. Yet it is expected that they shall not only exist and flourish, but they must do thorough work, and gain a wide reputation, as truly select and classical schools! How preposterous!

If, in the case supposed, one of the teachers be dismissed, then the other must fail to do the work of two. Or if, to increase the income from tuition fees, the doors of the institution are thrown open to receive scholars of every grade, then the school is no longer classical. It is immediately degraded into a common or promiscuous school, and the great object of thoroughly drilling advanced scholars for college, teaching, &c., for which the school was established, is utterly defeated.

In either case, the failure may be conveniently saddled upon the teachers, or be, with equal justice, referred to the unlucky fact, that it was a denominational school; while the truth, nevertheless, lurks in the fact, that the same neglect would kill any similar institution, whether of church or state.

The conclusion is not, that the church should abandon the glorious enterprise of Christian education, but that she should understand and duly regard the necessary and unchangeable conditions of success.

That this cause, so closely allied to the cause and kingdom of Christ, be not brought into disrepute, and that labour and means be not worse than wasted, let us have good academies, or none.

Let the friends and managers of classical schools see that they obtain, and retain classical teachers. Let no bricks be expected without straw; but let all the facilities in buildings, endowments, and in other arrangements be furnished, which a first-rate institution of the kind requires. Then, and not till then, will our prayers and hopes for the best success be rational.

But until these permanent and complete arrangements can be made, some temporary props must be applied, or the church must lose many of her most promising schools. The present is a time of pecuniary embarrassment through which some of them cannot pass unassisted. The church cannot afford to lose any of these recruiting institutions, which enlist and train the future leaders of her militant forces.

May we not hope that many churches, and liberal individual donors, will spontaneously contribute to this exhausted department of the Lord's treasury?

EDUCATION IN KANSAS.

HIGHLAND UNIVERSITY.

The walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt under Hezekiah, "in troublous times;" Joseph was delivered and elevated after long neglect on the part of the chief butler; David was raised to eminence in the face of the most determined opposition. Whatever is to be done and ought to be done now, is worthy of untiring effort. Education in Kansas must be seen to, and seen to now. Some may say, "Tush!—wait until public matters are quiet. Let us see if the Union is to be dissolved, and what we are coming to." Well, if the Union is to be dissolved, are we going to let the rising generation grow up in ignorance? Some things may stop—some will not, cannot. While we stop to see what is to become of the Union, our wives and servants do not stop the dinner. Necessities must be met, and education is one of them.

We have, in Doniphan county alone, two thousand children who should be in school. One-half of them should be in the higher branches. But there is not a grammar school in the region, excepting our own. The county is yet too new. Government appropriation of land is not yet available, and schools are not organized. Children are growing up in ignorance, and vice is taking deep root.

Will not some kind friend, or friends, help us, even in these troublous times? These schools, under God, are the great fortresses of our country. Have not some prosperous individuals gathered round them, under the excitement and uncertainty of the wavering times, large means that they know not well what to do with, and which, under certain adversities, might even crush them to ruin? Here is a place for good and safe investment. It will remain. Lot "chose him all the plains of Jordan," beautiful as the "garden of the Lord." But how soon do we see him, stripped and helpless, flying under the fearful injunction, "escape for thy life!" So may it be with some of the wealthy of this land. We will most gladly give any information about our work, that may be wanted. Ask what you please.

Dear Record, fail not, if you can do so, to say a word for us; or allow us, through you, to say a word for ourselves, if we say it right; and of this you are the judges.

Ever your friend. In behalf of the Board of Trustees of Highland University.

S. M. IRVIN, Sec.

Highland, Kansas, Jan. 12, 1861.

IMPORTANT DECISION—CONTROL OF THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH OVER BURGH SCHOOLS, IN SCOTLAND.

The First Division of the Court of Session have pronounced two judgments during this week, of national importance. They have held that a widower cannot marry the sister of his deceased wife; and in so doing, they have pronounced a judgment in accordance with the Confession of Faith, and the prevailing opinion among the Scottish people. It is not, however, to this judgment that we intend at present to call special notice; but to a judgment in regard to the control of the clergy of the Established Church over public schools, which, we have no doubt, will be the beginning of an agitation that will terminate in something like a national system of education.

The Court have just determined that every Presbytery of the Established Church has a control and superintendence, not merely over the parish schools within their bounds, but over all public schools, though they are not parish schools.

The case originated in a summons, at the instance of the Presbytery of Elgin, against the magistrates of that northern burgh. It that burgh there is a grammar-school, as there exists in all the other great towns of Scotland. It has been in existence for about three hundred years, and long anterior to the establishment of parish schools in Scotland. The masters were nominated by the magistrates, and paid by them with salaries—the scholars also paying fees. In consequence of disputes originating at the disruption of the church, the magistrates refused to recognize the pretensions of the Presbytery to the exclusive control and superintendence of this school. They had been in the habit of asking their attendance, as they did the clergy and other learned persons in the district, to the examinations; but they pertinaciously refused to make the school the seminary of a sect, and, in consequence of this, they were cited by the Presbytery of Elgin in an action in the Court of Session.

The summons by the Presbytery asked the Court to find and declare, that the masters of the school "were and are bound, before or on admission as masters aforesaid, to appear before the pursuers, the Presbytery of Elgin, and respectively to acknowledge, and profess, and to subscribe, the Confession of Faith as the confession of their faith, and to practise and confine themselves to the worship of the Established Church of Scotland, and to submit themselves to the government and discipline thereof, and never, directly nor indirectly, to endeavour the prejudice or subversion of the same." And in terms of this conclusion, the Court of Session have just given judgment. The result of this judgment, were it to be followed up, would be, that every free-churchman, or other dissenter, who is at present a teacher in the High School of Edinburgh, in the High School of Glasgow, in the Grammar School of Perth, or in any of the other burgh schools throughout Scotland, must immediately adhere to the Established Church, or resign his office.

Thus the burgh schools, which have hitherto been regarded as free from sectarianism, are now made the mere appanage of the Established Church. The judgment of the Court declares that the Presbytery, and not the magistrates, are henceforth to have the control over them, and the masters are to submit themselves to the government and discipline of the Established Presbytery.

This decision has been arrived at upon a very forced construction of very ancient statutes, which we shall endeavour to explain in a few sentences.

By an Act of Parliament passed immediately after the Reformation in 1567, it was provided that "all schools in burgh and landward, and all universities and colleges, be reformed, and that none be permitted nor admitted to have charge and care thereof in time coming, nor to instruct the youth publicly or openly, but such as shall be tried by the superintendents or visitors of the Church." (1567, cap. 11.) It was admitted by the Court that under this statute the Presbytery had no authority or jurisdiction, for they are not superintendents or visitors. It was only in the year 1633 that parish schools, in the proper sense of the term, were established under the authority of Parliament; and these schools were very generally in existence throughout the country at the Revolution of 1688. In the year 1693, an act of Parliament was passed, upon which the judgment of the Court is placed. It is declared to be "An act for settling the quiet and peace of the Church." It confirms the Confession of Faith, requires ministers to subscribe it, and to take the oath of allegiance; orders uniformity of worship to be observed; and concludes, after a number of other ordinances, with this clause: "And it is hereby declared that all Schoolmasters and Teachers of Youth in Schools, are and shall be liable to the trial, judgment, and censure of the Presbyteries of the bounds, for their sufficiency, qualifications, and deportment in the said office."

It is upon this clause that the judgment of the First Division of the Court of Session is rested. The words employed are wide enough, certainly, to include burgh schools; but they are wide enough also to include private schools. The argument maintained to the Court was, that the statute, being so general in its language, required construction, and that it could only legitimately apply to the schools established by law—namely, the parish schools, which were called into existence by act of Parliament in the year 1633. The Court, however, rejected this construction; but still they would not give the literal meaning to the words. They held "all schoolmasters" to mean "all public schoolmasters," but not all private schoolmasters. It is needless to follow the reasoning upon which this result was arrived at. It was necessary for the Court to come to this conclusion, in order not to make absolute nonsense of their judgment; and a private teacher who is a Dissenter has the consolation of knowing that he is at least saved from the necessity of proving his qualifications before an Established Presbytery, and from domiciliary visits by them.

We have said that this judgment in the Court of Session is the beginning of agitation for a national system of education. When the First Division of the Court formerly held in the case of Mr. McDowall, that every Professor in a University was subject to the tests, the tests were abolished in the next session of Parliament quoad the Universities. Of course, it cannot be tolerated, that the teachers of our public burgh schools must be taken from a limited class in the community; any more than the professors in our universities; and this decision has just come in time, on the eve of the meeting of Parliament, so as to enable the Lord Advocate once more to introduce his bill for the purpose of putting public instruction in Scotland upon a thoroughly unsectarian basis.—Edinburgh Witness.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
February 12th, 1861.

Recent Intelligence.

CHINA.

We have on hand letters from Shanghai to the 20th November; Ningpo, November 17th; and Canton, November 27th. We are sorry to learn that Mrs. Rankin, at Ningpo, had been extremely ill, but glad to know that she was convalescent at the date of our letter. Mr. and Mrs. Rankin had been called to mourn the death of an infant, the third child they had buried in Ningpo. The same letter contains intelligence of an encouraging nature. A renewed interest in religion had manifested itself in the boys' school at Ningpo, and also among the people at Yuyiao, one of the outstations of that mission.

SIAM.

We have a letter from Mr. Mattoon of the 13th November, mentioning that Mrs. Mattoon was slowly recovering from a severe attack of asthma. The Siamese woman who accompanied her to this country, was received to membership with the church at their last communion season. In relation to the attendance upon preaching, it is remarked, "I see an improvement not only in the numbers, but in the attention of those who come to our regular Sabbath services."

INDIA.

A letter from Allahabad of the 4th of December, mentions Mr. Williams' expectation of leaving for this country in the month of February, on a visit for the improvement of his health. A letter from Sabathu, of the 27th November, mentions that Mr. and Mrs. Barnes were expecting to leave soon for this country. Mr. Barnes has been afflicted with acute disease for more than a year past, and returns to this country as the only hopeful means of recovery. Dr. Newton is to be transferred from Sabathu to Lahor, to occupy the post vacated by the return of Mr. Barnes. A letter from Saharanpur of the 17th December, gives an account of the safe arrival of Mrs. Campbell and family at that place, in good health, having been separated from her husband for three years.

AFRICA.

We have letters from Corisco as late as the 23d October. Miss Latta had reached there in good health and spirits on the 16th of the same month, and was much pleased with the prospects of usefulness in her chosen field of labour. There had been some sickness among the members of the mission, but none of a serious character. The newly formed church at Corisco had contributed about $108 to purposes of benevolence, besides $66 to the erection of the new church at Evangasimba. From Liberia we have letters to the 11th December. The missionaries and their families were generally well, and were pursuing their missionary labours as usual. Mr. Priest mentions that he had received one person to the communion of the church at Sinou, and had baptized four children at their last sacramental occasion.

SOUTH AMERICA.

We have a single letter from Rio Janeiro, of the 30th November. The missionaries were well at that time, and were mainly occupied in the study of the language. Mr. and Mrs. Blackford were temporarily absent with some friends in the country. Mr. Simonton was about to undertake a tour into the interior, for the purpose of distributing Bibles and preaching. The brethren were encouraged with the prospects of usefulness before them.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

Our latest dates from the Indian Missions are from the Creek Mission, January 21st; Seminole, December 19th; Chickasaw, January 14th; Choctaw, January 25th.

From the Creek Mission we have received the painful, but not unexpected, intelligence of the death of Miss McKean, for a number of years a most faithful and efficient teacher in the school at Tallahassee. This painful event occurred on the 21st of January, and resulted from a renewed attack of typhoid fever. Mr. Loughridge remarks, in communicating this intelligence: "She was five weeks confined to her bed. During this long period, even in times of delirium, she gave the most satisfactory evidence of a work of grace in her heart. She died, as for many years she had lived, trusting alone in the merits of Christ for salvation." Mr. Lilley is cheered by evidences of the Spirit's presence in his labours in both departments of his missionary work. Much suffering prevails in portions of the Choctaw and Seminole countries, from the scarcity of provisions, consequent upon last summer's drought.

URGENT NEED OF FUNDS.

We regret the necessity we are under of calling the attention of the churches to the present depressed state of the finances of the Board. The receipts of the treasury for the present year have already fallen more than $15,000 below those of the corresponding months of last year, being a reduction of at least fifteen per cent. from the usual contributions; and unless an important change takes place very soon, this deficiency must become seriously great before the close of the present financial year.

This deficiency is not limited to the churches in any particular section of the country, but pertains equally to all portions of it. It is to be ascribed mainly, no doubt, to the disturbed state of the country, and the increased pressure in the commercial world. Great reluctance is felt in calling upon the friends of missions for increased contributions in this time of general distress, but the circumstances of the foreign mission work are urgent, and very little option is left as to what should be done in the present exigency. The number of missionary candidates under appointment, who are expecting to go forth to their respective fields of labour the coming spring or summer, is unusually large; but none of these can realize their cherished wishes at so early a period, unless there is great improvement in the financial affairs of the Board. The detention of these brethren however, is not the most serious aspect of the matter. The missionaries of the Board with their families are already scattered over almost every section of the heathen world, and, from the circumstances of the case, they are necessarily dependent for their daily bread upon the contributions of the churches in this country. They went forth to these distant ends of the earth, with the knowledge and approval of the churches, relying upon their engagements for the means of support, and there is no other source to which they can turn in this time of trial. They cannot be recalled and brought home, even if such an extreme measure should be regarded as expedient and justifiable, without incurring a larger outlay of funds than would be necessary to sustain them through the existing crisis where they are.

Many of the friends of missions may not have it in their power to contribute as liberally to this cause as they have done in past years; whilst others may not be able to contribute at all only by practising the most rigid economy. But there are many whose means have not been materially crippled, and it is to such mainly that our appeal must be made for aid in this time of distress. They have a special opportunity for showing their attachment to the cause of their Redeemer, and we would affectionately remind them, as well as all others, that whilst uncertainty is deeply enstamped upon every earthly investment at the present moment, nothing that is done for the Saviour will be thrown away, but shall bring forth abundant fruit, in the course of time, to the glory of God and the salvation of dying men.

CHINA.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CANTON MISSION.

Missionary Labourers—The Rev. A. P. Happer and his wife, the Rev. C. F. Preston and his wife, John G. Kerr and his wife, the Rev. I. M. Condit and his wife. Native assistant, Lam Ats'ung. Native church members three. Three chapels, one hospital. Two day-schools for boys; one day-school for girls. Pupils on roll—boys seventy, girls eighteen. Two boarding pupils, girls. Eighteen public religious services weekly.

In review of the year now closed, we would record our devout thanks to God for his great mercy to us in the preservation of the health, and the continuance of all the members of the mission and their families. We have been permitted to welcome a new labourer to this field. The Rev. I. M. Condit and Mrs. Condit arrived in China August 1st, and they have entered upon their preparatory labour in the study of the language with energy and diligence.

The work of re-organizing the mission in all its various operations has been in a great measure accomplished. The year closed has been one of great external advancement, so that the mission never was more favourably circumstanced for the prosecution of evangelizing labours among this people than they are now. The chapel in the hospital has been enlarged so as to accommodate double the number of hearers. The hospital has also been enlarged to double its former capacity. The expense of these buildings was provided by the Medical Missionary Society in China.

It was considered desirable that Dr. Happer should be located in the vicinity of the other members of the mission in the southern suburbs of the city. It was, however, found impossible to secure a suitable location. A very eligible site for a residence, with suitable accomodations for a boarding-school, and with chapel attached, was offered in the western suburbs. The providence of God appeared to direct the mission to this site. After much careful and prayerful deliberation, it was decided to accept the offer. After spending four months in seeking a site and superintending the erection of the house, Dr. Happer removed to his house on the 16th of January, and opened the chapel on the 26th of February. The schoolrooms are well lighted and ventilated, and the chapel is one of the pleasantest audience chambers in the city.

The superintendence of the day-schools for boys having been assigned to Dr. Happer, they were located in the vicinity of his residence. The premises rented for one of the day-schools affording room for a small chapel in a good location, it was opened for public worship in March, and service was held there daily by Dr. Happer and Mr. Preston on alternate days.

Preaching.

There has been more public preaching of the gospel than during any previous year of the mission. The services in the chapel at the hospital, by Mr. Preston, have been held on dispensing days, on the Sabbath, and on two evenings of the week. The attendance at the evening service has been such as to encourage its continuance. The chapel at Dr. Happer's has, as yet, only been open on the Sabbath, and for two evening services. The audience on the Sabbath is composed largely of the pupils of the schools, the teachers, and acquaintances who come especially to attend the service. The street on which it is situated having been temporarily obstructed, it has not been favourable for gathering a promiscuous audience, hence it has not been opened on week days. The crowning mercy of the year was the completing of the purchase of a house for a chapel and room for the day-schools. It is in a most eligible location. It affords a chapel to accommodate an audience of one hundred and twenty, and schoolroooms for seventy or seventy-five boys. There has been little street preaching, as, when we have the chapels, and can always have an audience in them, it is a much more satisfactory opportunity of presenting the truth. Yet when Dr. Kerr went to Fat-shan to vaccinate and dispense medicines, the opportunity was always availed of to preach to the people of that crowded mart the glorious gospel.

A room suitable for a chapel for women having been secured, in connection with the girls' day-school; it was opened for religious service early in March. It was opened twice a week till the middle of July. The attendance of women and children, not including the school children, varied from twenty to sixty. The success equalled the expectation with which it was opened.

Through these various ways thousands have had the opportunity of hearing the precious truths of salvation. The results will only be known in eternity. We deeply lament that we have not been permitted to see any manifestation of the fruit as yet.

Day-schools.

Day-schools have been continued, not only by our own mission, but by other missions, in the southern suburbs, ever since the first day-school was commenced there by this mission in 1850. But no day-school had ever been commenced in the western suburbs. It was, therefore, with some solicitude as to the result that the experiment was commenced. Our best hopes have been realized. God has given them favour in the sight of the heathen. The "Backus" school, which is so named for the Rev. J. C. Backus, D. D., pastor of First church, Baltimore, at the request of Sabbath-school of that church, who contribute $100 towards its support, has had as many as forty-four pupils on the roll at once. The other school, which is called the "Clarke" school, for the pastor of the Central church, Philadelphia, the Rev. H. S. Clarke, D. D., as the Sabbath-school of that church contributes for its support, has had twenty-six pupils on its roll. The expectation was that this school would be as numerously attended as the other, if not more so, but the result has been different from our expectations in that respect.

The pupils of these schools have spent a portion of each day in the study of the sacred Scriptures and other Christian books. The Scriptures have been daily explained to them, and prayer offered in the schoolroom. They have all attended public worship on the Sabbath. Thus we have endeavoured to fulfil the blessed Master's command, "Feed my lambs." Now that we have a permanent chapel, we work to carry out that which has ever characterized Presbyterians—we plant the school fast by the church.

The girls' school exceeded expectations. There has been eighteen on the roll—a larger number than in any other girls' school in Canton. The manner of instruction has been the same as in the boys' schools.

The only department of the mission that remains as yet unorganized is the boarding-school. As that subject has been fully discussed in the correspondence of the mission, it is not necessary to refer to it further. But every year's experience deepens the conviction of the necessity of some means being used to raise up an educated and efficient native ministry.

While we, with gratitude, record this external enlargement, and this measure of outward prosperity, we would mourn, with increased humiliation, that we see no spiritual fruits of our labours. In regard to those who profess the gospel, we rejoice over them with trembling. We trust they give some evidence of growth in grace. There are those who come to inquire what they must do to be saved, but we fear they have been led to come more with the view of getting some employment, than to seek the pearl of great price. May God grant us the spirit of more earnest and believing prayer; and may the Lord grant us the outpouring of his Spirit, without which our labours will still be without any saving results.

Reinforcement of Missionaries needed.

In conclusion, we cannot refrain from still earnestly asking for a large reinforcement to our mission at this place. This mail carries home the gratifying intelligence that peace is again established, we may hope, on some permanent basis.

There is now a proposition made in England to open a mart of trade on the western borders of China, and to connect that mart with Calcutta by a railroad, and then to connect that mart with Canton by telegraph and other means. When this is realized, it will open up a direct communication with that part of the empire which must be reached from Canton. The population that will depend, humanly speaking, on the Canton mission for the gospel, numbers more than seventy millions, or more than double the population of the United States by the late census. What a view of the extent of the field and the greatness of the work before us! Can any language exceed the urgency of the demand for more labourers? This region is a high, hilly, and therefore healthy part of the country, and foreign missionaries might be able to reside away from the seaboard. But it is not necessary to contemplate future changes in order to enforce the conviction of the want, the present want, of a greatly increased number of missionaries. The city of Canton itself is very inadequately supplied. Then here is the great mart—one of the four great manufacturing marts of the empire—of Fat-shan, with its seven or eight hundred thousand inhabitants, without a single missionary. Then there are four or five cities of two hundred thousand inhabitants, within a day's journey of this city, entirely destitute; and thousands of towns and villages with twenty thousand inhabitants and under that number, without the gospel. If these teeming millions are reached by the gospel, it must be by some efficient and successful means of training up native evangelists. While we would pray with increasing earnestness and fervency to the Lord of the harvest "to send forth labourers into the harvest," we would, at the same time, still continue to reiterate the Macedonian cry to the churches of the Lord Jesus, and to the young brethren in the Seminaries, "Come over and help us." We would tell them that the fields are white already to the harvest. We would make known to them the sights that pain our eyes as we see these perishing multitudes hastening on to the bar of God, without ever having heard of "the only name given among men whereby we can be saved." "How can they hear without a preacher? and how can they preach except they be sent?"

In behalf of the mission,

Yours very truly,

ANDREW P. HAPPER.

INDIA—PESHAWUR.

REPORT OF THE MISSIONARY TO THE AFGHANS FOR THE YEAR 1859—60.

The following report of missionary labours pertains to a portion of the world of which very little is known, at least to American readers, and cannot fail therefore to be highly interesting to all who will spare time to peruse it.

Translations.

The principal work of the Rev. J. Lœwenthal, the missionary to the Afghans, still consists in translating the Scriptures into Pushto, the language of the Afghans. Progress has continued to be made, but not as rapid progress as might have been desired. It is believed, however, that a correct as well as idiomatic version can only be obtained by means of constant, laborious, and copious revision, and this necessitates a great expenditure of time.

Preaching in the Pushto and Persian languages has also regularly been carried on in the villages near Peshawur, and, though less frequently, in the city itself. The audiences in the latter are usually numerous and attentive, but greatly wanting in good manners. Interruptions of the preacher are considered a religious duty, absurd cavilings the height of wisdom, and vehement gesticulation the best substitute for argument. The assemblies the missionary sees usually gathered around him, are still like tinder, unoffensive, soft, and velvety in appearance, until the spark falls upon them, when they at once take fire. The spark may be a plain statement of some vital doctrine of Christianity, or some assault, open or implied, on any Mohammedan article of belief. The quiet, respectful, elastic hearers and opponents a missionary meets with among the Hindus, he would in vain look for among Afghans, who are zealous and fanatical, usually in proportion to their ignorance—ignorance very frequently even of their own religion. The missionary has met with instances among them where they were ignorant even of the name of their prophet. It is quite notorious that certain clans of Afridis on the frontier never pray except during the fast of the Ramazan, and then only in this way, that they get some man from a village in the plains to be their Imám or Precentor; and this poor man often gets quite as many cuffs as pence, when his appreciative congregation are not satisfied that he gives them full-lengths in his prayers.

In the villages the audiences differ very much. In some villages the people remain shy, distant, suspicious; they listen in sullen silence, and rarely gather in large numbers; in others, they are violent, intolerant, fanatical; the very appearance of the missionary among them makes them bristle up; they sometimes take the quiet presentation of the truth to be only preparatory to some more forcible measure; and the mental attitude in which they thus place themselves is one extremely unfavourable to the reception of anything; the scholars and readers among them, who are put forward frequently by their less learned co-religionists, often refuse to assent to axioms, or to truths universally acknowledged by themselves, for fear that such assent might open the door to something binding or compromising them irrevocably. Among such audiences the work of the missionary amounts rarely to anything more than "witness-bearing;" he tells his message, presents the truth in the least repulsive way feasible; endeavours, perhaps, to arouse some motive for accepting it, and must then, with more or less faith, leave the result in the hands of an all-wise God. There are, however, a few places where the people have become less hostile, and even friendly to some extent; where they will often speak to the missionary of their own affairs, and, indeed, too often ask his advice; where they are ready with their best bedstead for him to sit down on, and where they not unfrequently invite him to partake of their meals; where they are not sufficiently Hinduized to refuse him their own cup, or to eat out of the same dish with him. But even in such places it is impossible not to perceive the secret desire, that religion should rather not form one of the principal topics of conversation, and that their visitor should rather not bring up subjects which they are obliged to gainsay. It is in such places that the missionary has now and then met some unsophisticated individual from some distant place, who, after listening for a little while to the preacher's harangue, has turned to the bystanders with an anxious look, asking them why they did not tell the poor man that he was all wrong, that another prophet had come, who had quite superseded the Nazarene, and how they could permit their creed to be impugned even by implication.

On the whole, as to its outward aspect, the action of the scanty missionary agency now employed among the Afghans, can only be compared to a thin line of oil drawn on a large quantity of water; the line may be barely visible, but the influence on the water is as yet imperceptible.

On the contrary, the work, in some respects, almost appears to have receded from the point it seemed to have gained a year ago. Then the missionary could report numerous visits which he had from people of different classes, both from the city and from villages, with the professed purpose of discussing the contending claims of Christianity and Mohammedanism. These visits, as a general thing, have greatly diminished. The causes of this diminution are numerous, and all are not readily explained in the brief compass allotted to this report. One of the principal causes, however, is the growing sense of danger to their creed. Men actually suffered in their reputation on account of their visits to the missionary. Some young men, who had been in the habit of coming almost regularly, were absolutely prohibited by their relatives from going to see the missionary any longer, and generally it was as much as a man's odour of piety was worth to be seen coming out of the padre's gate two or three times.

Another cause may have been the increased attention to religious matters generally observable among the people. Evidences of such increased attention were not wanting. There has been among the people a vague, but unmistakeable expectation that the present order of things was drawing to a close. This had made it easy for one man, for instance, Alado Sáhibzáda by name, a man who in his day had a reputation among the daughters of chiefs and other respectable men, of being quite irresistible, whose splendid voice and appearance still form the talk among the people, and whose Arabic and Persian learning was the admiration of his countrymen, to set up for Imám Alahdi, the forerunner of Jesus at his second coming, and to collect quite a number of followers.

Another evidence of a somewhat awakened religious life, was the appearance of a paper, during the fast of the Ramazan, written in Indian Persian, but pretending to come from Mecca. It detailed a vision the guardian of Mohammed's tomb had had of the Prophet, who had appeared to him, denouncing the growing faithlessness of the Mohammedan world, and announcing the second coming of Christ as certainly to take place in nine years. The paper began to have a considerable circulation, in the villages more than in the city, when a celebrated Saint in the Yúsufzai country declared it a forgery.

A new doctrine taught—its character and probable origin.

There was also a serious schism impending among the people, by the appearance of a preacher in the principal mosque of the city, who had been preaching there on Fridays for some years, but only now came out somewhat more openly with his heretical notions. The points of his heresy are the more interesting, as he always strenuously denied that he belonged to the Wahábí sect, and wished his followers to infer that he was led by his own independent conviction to adopt certain doctrines for which his opponents persecuted him. Some of these doctrines were rather interesting to the missionary, although the man himself always spurned the idea that he had ever had anything to do with missionaries. He denied, for instance, that any man, though he be a prophet (which includes Mohammed,) could be an intercessor for another, as no sinner could successfully intercede for another sinner, and no prophet had been free from sin. Among Mohammedans generally, it is an established doctrine, that those who belonged to either of the four sects corresponding to the four places of homage at the Prophet's tomb, are all true believers, but that all other sects belong to the unbelievers. The preacher maintained the right of private judgment so far, that if there were a fifth sect, whose system differed from that of the four orthodox sects, but was in accordance with truth, that sect also must be considered orthodox. He opposed, moreover, the practice of carrying sick and insane persons to the tombs of certain saints, since, he said, it was very doubtful whether these men ever performed any miracle whilst they were living, and it was certain that they could perform none when dead. But the most flagrant attack on the laws and customs of Islam, was his injunction on his followers and disciples, that it was not sufficient for the Imám or Precentor to pray, whilst the "Imitator," (mugtadí), who stood behind him, needed only to imitate his motions, but that every single individual must also pray. Indeed, his general notions of prayer differed so much from those of Mohammedans generally, that the conjecture is not a bold one, that he obtained them, probably indirectly, from the preaching of missionaries. Together with these ideas he propounded, it is true, some excessively absurd things also; but still, the doctrines mentioned, it is evident, if generally, or even largely adopted among Mussulmans, would smooth the path of the missionary very materially, inasmuch as they involve some of the very points so constantly in dispute between him and his opponents. If men can only be brought to acknowledge that the age of a doctrine is no proof of its truth, that praying cannot be done by proxy, and that neither saint nor prophet can be an effectual intercessor for sinful men, they have taken some important steps towards feeling the burden of sin, and the need of at least a sinless Saviour. The missionary, therefore, was particularly interested in the result such teachings, continued from Friday to Friday in the principal mosque of the city, might have. The fact was, that the man gathered followers in such numbers that some of the most respectable men who, as is usual, not in Peshawur alone, are strongly conservative, took alarm, and began to oppose these teachings, first secretly, then openly. Men can always be influenced by other means besides those of moral suasion, and it is not astonishing that Abdul Majid—this is the name of the heretical preacher—had his pulpit broken, and was obliged to spend one Friday under the protection of the police, as he was in fear of some bodily harm. The authorities, at this stage, thought themselves bound to interfere, and strongly advised the heresiarch to moderate his zeal, be content with smaller emoluments, and, at all events, desist from preaching. He retired, therefore, to a neighbouring village, and did not make his appearance in the large mosque again for some two or three months. But then he did it triumphantly: the Mufti, he pointed out to his disciples, that had denounced him, was very ill; the Qází who persecuted him was dead; the Kotwal who was inclined to side with his opponents, had been deposed; and even the Deputy Commissioner who (he said) had threatened to imprison or banish him, had been transferred. However, the original effervescence had subsided; and neither his gains nor his popularity became what they had been before.

Whether, if the matter had been allowed to run its own course, this heresy would have had any influence on the missionary cause, and what the nature of such influence might have been, it is needless to speculate on. The missionary, however, is constantly on the lookout for anything that can by any possibility stir the dead stagnation of the Mohammedan's religious life. What he has most to contend with, is the inconceivable amount of inertia that resists all his efforts to produce any motion—the hard, dead matter that is unconquerable through its stolid passivity, and the merest feint of motion, in any direction whatever, fills him with hope. This hope will be excited all the more readily if, as was the case in the instance spoken of, the doctrines propounded sap the very foundations of the popular belief of Moslems, and seem, in so far to prepare the way for the reception of the truth. It may, however, be a matter of doubt whether the missionary ought ever to expect aid from such quarters.

RIO DE JANEIRO.

The following communication from Mr. Simonton, in relation to the history and condition of Brazil, and the prospects of introducing a pure gospel among that people, will be read with interest.

December 28, 1860.

In some respects a parallel can be drawn between Brazil and the United States. The extent of their territory is very nearly equal, perhaps Brazil is the larger by some few hundred thousand square miles. The date of their discovery and first settlement coincides. They began their career with the seventeenth century, under the auspices of two small, but powerful monarchies of Europe. Had the world been called at that day to forecast the destinies of England and her American Colony, and Portugal and her American Colony, it might well have seemed doubtful to which belonged the most brilliant future. The parallel runs a step further. The tyranny and rapacity of Portugal, like that of England, drove her prosperous Colony to rebel, and a short struggle secured the acknowledgment of her independence. This common experience has rooted in both countries a love for free institutions, and a jealousy of everything which they conceive to threaten their liberties. For though Brazil is an empire, and has an army of Barons, Counts, Viscounts, &c., yet the genius of the people is democratic. No titles are hereditary, there is no right of primogeniture; the Emperor's power is only nominal, as in England, and more than all, there actually exists among all, rulers and ruled, a fixed sentiment of equality in rights, and of the sovereignty of the people. The inequalities here, as in the United States, are those produced by difference in fortune, and by official favouritism.

In most other respects it would be difficult to find countries contrasting more strongly than Brazil and the United States; or not to separate mother and daughter, Portugal and Brazil, and England and the United States. Portugal has dwindled until she needed, and was not ashamed to accept English tutelage. Brazil, after three hundred years of infancy has not yet attained a manly growth and strength; while in the same space of time, the United States have outgrown most of the great monarchies of Europe, in all the elements of true strength and prosperity.

Causes of the difference in the condition of the two countries.

There are, no doubt, a multitude of causes which would need to enter into a full explanation of the differences so plainly existing between Brazil and the United States, and so long as various causes exist, there is a great temptation to consult our prejudices in giving particular prominence to any one cause or set of causes, as exercising the chief influence. The ethnologist would not think of looking farther than to differences of race and climate. Given the Latin race and a tropical climate, the Anglo-Saxon race and a cold climate, and Brazil and the United States are for him the necessary results. The sons of "Pilgrim Fathers" sees all the cause in the difference between the religions in whose name the soil was claimed. Others, who are under no such necessity of a rigid generalization, may deny any important original difference of race or religion, and find in later acts of legislation and policy, or in various circumstances, a sufficient account of all the contrast they can observe. It would be too much to expect of the Brazilian that he should see anything to explain, unless it be, how it is that his country, notwithstanding many drawbacks, is yet on the whole better off than the Great Republic of the North.

What the Brazilians concede.

There are, however, many Brazilians who do allow the immense superiority of the United States. They are as far from agreeing in this cause as others. I have heard them allege all those I have indicated, except the religious one. One of the most intelligent of my Brazilian acquaintances said to me seriously, "Julgo que está acabada a raça latina"—"I believe that the Latin race is finished." There may be, and probably are, among the many free thinkers of Brazil, some who do see that the true doctrines of progress and prosperity are in the creed of the Reformation. I have not yet heard this opinion expressed. It is not known to all that there was a critical time in the history of Brazil, when there was a promise that this religious difference might not exist. Brazil had her Pilgrim Fathers. The city of Rio de Janeiro was originally founded by a colony of French Calvinists or Huguenots, fleeing from the same intolerance that planted the United States with the best seed of Europe. In 1555 a colony sent out under the auspices of Admiral Coligny made a settlement on the Bay of Rio de Janeiro, and the church of Geneva, under the guidance of Calvin, sent out several ministers and students to care for its spiritual welfare. The treachery of Villegagnon, the leader of the colony, and the persecution of the Portuguese, crushed the attempt. From that day to this Rome has been free to produce in this virgin soil the fairest and best fruits of her system. More than three hundred years is long enough to wait for the fruits. Any one may see them.

Lack of Religion.

To my mind, the most astonishing feature of the religious condition of Brazil is its almost total lack of all religion. Unless I am mistaken, Brazil is singular in this respect, even among the most thoroughly Roman Catholic nations. Not only has religion degenerated from being a thing of conviction to a mere habit, but it has become a habit to pay no attention to its outward forms. The number of church-goers is very small. Confession is falling into disuse. Priests are dissolute, and not unfrequently scoffers. A pure and universal indifference seems to reign. The extremity of the Pope has produced no public prayers, and Garibaldi and Cavour are heroes. It is said that no people can be without a religion; if so, few nations can be much more destitute than Brazil. There are special occasions, however, which show that he would be greatly deceived who imagined that their irreligion is like that which is found in Protestant countries. At times they become religious. One of these times is the hour of death. Then the priest is sure of employment and pay. Confession, absolution, the sacrament, and extreme unction, are the sources of trust in that hour when all men would be religious if they could.

Festival days.

Another is Holy Week and festival days. During Holy Week, churches are visited, confession made, and the sacrament received by many who have not attended on these duties since the former Holy Week; processions gazed at, and holy water taken home to perform purifications. In some of the churches, wooden images, large as life, represent the body of Christ after being crucified, which are adored by the kissing of its hands and feet. At this time may be seen in the churches and streets of Rio Janeiro all the monkish contrivances of the middle ages for producing devotion through impressions on the senses.

On festival days the streets are crowded; gay counterpanes are hanging from the windows of the streets through which the procession is to pass; flags of all nations flaunt their bright colours from public buildings, the shipping, and also many private residences; and orange leaves are sprinkled over the streets. In the faces of the ladies who fill the windows, and the good-natured people who crowd the street, nothing is marked but a disposition to have some enjoyment. There is little noise, and no drunkenness or brawling. Brazilian crowds are good-natured. If any one commits, unintentionally, the blunder of treading on a neighbour's toe, a request for pardon is answered by a smile, a bow, and a lifted hat, as kindly as if you had just done him a distinguished favour. When the procession arrives, it is made up of bands of music, military, priests, and lay brothers, bearing images, censers, crosses, and lighted wax tapers, little girls of about ten years old dressed in white, and with wings, to represent angels.

Toleration.

There is much tolerance shown towards Protestants. The disposition of the people is towards a compliance with the habits and opinions of foreigners. The constitution of the empire expressly tolerates religions which are not that of the state, only requiring that they shall not worship in a building which has "the exterior form of a temple." This is understood to mean, that none but Catholic churches shall have spires or bells. It is not yet proven whether the government would feel any disposition to oppose the free preaching of the gospel. The event of an attempt is the only satisfactory decision which this question admits of.

There are many reasons for believing that the solution of this doubt, soon to be made, will be what the friends of Christ desire. For many years no difficulty has been put in the way of the circulation of the Bible. This book passes as easily through the custom-house as any other, and the display of it there has, in several instances, led to many sales. Bible agents use freely the daily papers to promote their sales. The street venders of books, almost in every case, have the Bible with their numerous pictures and legends of saints. Passing one of these men sitting with his books on a thoroughfare, I asked him, pointing to one of his Bibles, "Do you sell many of these?" He replied, "A great many; I have sold more than a thousand of them." He told me he had a box of them. Where Bibles are found there will also be found Bible readers and Bible Christians.

Persecution rebuked.

Bible circulation and Bible reading have not been without their fruits, even in Brazil. North American Christians will be rejoiced to know that there has been for some time a small band of organized Protestant Christians in Rio de Janeiro, the capital, metropolis, and chief seat of the Beast in this empire.

These disciples are accustomed to meet one evening in the week, besides their Sabbath services, for worship, and the study of the Scriptures. While thus employed, on a Sabbath evening, a few weeks ago, at the house of one of their number, the house was surrounded by the police, and the men of the party, nine in number, were taken to prison. This was done by the authority of the Sub-delegado, or justice of the parish in which the meeting was held. The next day they were taken before the Chief of Police—answering to our Mayor, or Judge of police court*—who at once ordered their release, and gave his opinion that they were lawfully and properly employed. The inferior magistrate, however, again imprisoned three of them, who were from a different parish. The following day they were again taken before the Chief of Police, who again ordered their unconditional liberation.

The daily papers took up the matter, two of them insisting that the action of the Sub-delegado was unconstitutional, and rendered him liable to penal prosecution. Another contended that the circumstances justified, if they did not require, the legal investigation and oversight of the magistrates. On the one hand, it was alleged that the Bible used was a grossly corrupt translation, falsely attributed to Father Figueido; on the other hand, these allegations were boldly denied.

These people had been subjected to various petty annoyances, by some low fellows in the neighbourhood, before the arrest. This same class of persons reported to the magistrates that the converts met for unlawful ends, and committed abominable deeds. The authorities agreed, that if notice were given of the time, place, and object of the meetings, they would not only not interfere, but see that they were not molested.

The effect of the opposition was to bring the movement into far more extensive notice. A greatly increased interest has been manifested ever since. The circle of influence is rapidly extending. At one of their meetings, but three Sabbaths ago, I was told the room was so crowded they could not kneel in prayer, and that a very deep and solemn interest pervaded the assembly.

* Rather combines a part of the duties of both.

The leader of this movement is a learned and pious man, well known to the religious world by the results of his evangelical labours in a different quarter of the globe. As soon as a suitable room can be obtained, he informed me the public preaching of the gospel would be commenced.

What will be the vicissitudes of the work, before toleration without molestation is attained, will be seen only on trial. Many, doubtless, are bigoted and virulent, and would glory in persecution; perhaps a larger number are totally indifferent as to the whole matter; still, another large class, the men of influence and position, will strongly oppose any thing like legal persecution. Political motives alone, will cause many to take this ground. Other, and in some cases, perhaps, better reasons, will influence a few. Local magistrates have here a great deal of arbitrary power, but the spirit of the people is eminently democratic, and will, no doubt, serve as a check to its exercise.

But more than all, "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice." The sceptre of Immanuel must yet rule Brazil. The Lord hasten it, in his time.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT EVANGASIMBA.

The Church.

During this year much has occurred to fill our hearts with rejoicing and thanksgiving, and much that calls for humiliation. The interest in religion, spoken of in our last annual report, continued during the early part of the year, and was manifested at this station, as well as at the others, in the zeal of professing Christians, the increased attendance upon religious services, and the hopeful conversion of some.

The number of baptisms during the year was forty-three. Of these, five were infants, making the entire number of adults baptized since the organization of the church fifty-seven, and of infants seven.

Until this year, we have not been permitted to welcome any of the native females to the Lord's table; they have seemed more callous to the calls of Christ, and more degraded than the men. Now many females are in our catechumen classes, and sixteen are enrolled among the disciples of Christ.

Our communion seasons have always created much interest among the people. On such occasions our church has usually been crowded, forcibly reminding us of the efficacious manner in which this simple institution shows forth the Lord's death.

Appointment of Elders.

On the 5th of October last, we were permitted to increase our eldership by the addition of three native elders. We would here record with pleasure their faithfulness in the discharge of their duties, and the great assistance they have been to us in watching over the flock. It has since been the privilege of our church to have these young men received under the care of Presbytery as candidates for the ministry, and to see one of them sent forth to a neighbouring island to preach the gospel.

Erection of a church building.

During this year a commodious bamboo chapel has been erected at an expense of $225, of which $66 were contributed by missionaries and people. To the Presbyterian Boards $108.49 has been contributed by our little church, of which $58.49 was collected at our monthly concerts, the remainder by special contributions. At the monthly concerts, $16 have been contributed by the girls of this school, obtained, as usual, by sewing out of regular hours.

Religious meetings.

The religious services at this station have been the same as in former years—on Sabbath, preaching morning and evening, and in the afternoon the Sabbath-school and instruction of the catechumen class; on Tuesday evenings prayer-meeting in the mission house, and on Saturday evenings by the native members themselves. Andeke, the native elder at this station, has been accustomed to assemble the Christians in this neighbourhood one evening each week for special instruction. Some of the young men have also been in the habit of going to the neighbouring villages during the week, and on the Sabbath, to hold religious meetings.

Sabbath-school.

The Sabbath-school comprises nine classes. Two are composed of men and women, and are under the care of Miss Jackson and Andeke. Two Bible-classes are formed of the more advanced scholars, and are taught by Dr. and Mrs. Loomis. A large class in one of the Union question books, was also taught by Mrs. Mackey on Sabbath mornings. The number now included in the catechumen class at this station is seventeen. Five profess a hope in Christ, but we have thought it best to defer their admission to the church. Some of the members have been connected with the class a long time; we rejoice that they still retain their serious thoughts, though we wish much to see them more earnest in striving to enter in at the strait gate. The attendance upon religious services was unusually good until about the beginning of the dry season, when it greatly diminished. This diminution is owing partly to the great amount of business during the dry season, as it is the period for making salt, clearing farms, repairing houses, &c., but chiefly from the decline of that religious interest manifested during the first part of the year, and from the opposition of many on finding that the spread of Christianity was conflicting with some of their long cherished customs. Although this opposition has apparently died away, it is still secretly exerted.

Exercise of discipline.

This year we have, for the first time, been called to the painful duty of the infliction of discipline. We have found it necessary to excommunicate one of our best instructed young men, one who was among our earliest hopeful converts, and also to suspend four others from the privileges of the church. Some of these have manifested penitence, and we hope will soon be restored. May the Great Shepherd, in his infinite mercy, recover them all! There are others, also, especially at this station, who seem to have lost their first love. Although we cannot but deeply grieve on account of the dangerous condition of those who have so sadly fallen, and on account of the reproach which their conduct has brought upon the cause of Christ, and for our crushed hopes with regard to them; yet we do not wonder that we have such cases to report, when we consider the depravity and deceitfulness of the human heart, the powerful temptations which beset our converts on every hand, and their extreme weakness and ignorance. While, in view of these afflictions upon our church, we would humble ourselves for our own unfaithfulness and coldness; we would also thank God that no greater number have fallen, and we would praise him for that grace which has enabled so many of our converts to adorn their profession by their daily walk and conversation.

Respectfully submitted,

T. S. Ogden.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM MR. DE HEER, OF OCTOBER 1, 1860.

The following extracts from a letter of Mr. De Heer, will be found to contain much that is interesting.

With humble gratitude to the goodness of God, I have been graciously brought to the close of this year; and while looking back upon the past events, I cannot but with great gratitude exclaim, "Having, therefore, obtained help of God, I continue unto this day."

My labours during the year have been limited to the Ugobi station. Preaching has been kept up here twice on the Sabbath, morning and evening, and Sabbath-school in the afternoon. For a few Sabbaths during the year I was myself prevented from attending to my duties on account of weakness. I received assistance, however, from brethren who conducted the services for me. The attendance on the Sabbath has been good; better, I believe, than ever heretofore. The congregation has varied from sixty to one hundred; it has exceeded that number since the opening of our new chapel, which proves to be such an excellent accommodation, that we now have at times as many as a hundred and thirty, including all that belong to the station.

The Sabbath here has been observed as well as could be expected. The headmen not only refrain from their weekly employment, but some of them order their slaves to do so. A few days ago, two of the men went out to fish on the Sabbath; when they arrived at the spot where they intended to go, and each one had taken his net from the boat, suddenly one of them stopped and threw down his net. His companion, surprised at this, asked why he did so? The answer was, "Because this is the Sabbath day, and the fish are God's fish, so I cannot do it; the missionaries tell me it is wrong to fish on Sunday." His companion, however, went on, mocking him, calling him a fool, &c. When they came on shore, the latter offered his companion a part of the fish he had caught, but he refused to take them, repeating that he would not eat fish that had been caught on the Sabbath. As a general thing the Sabbath is strictly observed by the church-members and inquirers. The converts spend their time in public worship and conversing with the people in town on the subject of religion.

Our Sabbath-school is attended by old and young, slave and freeman, and has varied from forty to sixty, including all that reside at the station. Our evening meetings have been very encouraging; the average number of attendants has been twenty, exclusive of the members of our own family. These meetings have been interesting; deep seriousness has frequently characterized them, and we have had the presence of the Lord, and the saving influences of his Holy Spirit. Our prayer-meeting has been regularly sustained on Wednesday evening, on which occasion we have had often a crowded house. Besides the religious exercises at the station, the converts have held two meetings in town—one a female prayer-meeting on Monday afternoon; the other on Saturday evening. Both these meetings have been attended as well as could be expected, and have proved to be a blessing, I trust, to those who never otherwise attended upon public worship. Lately our converts commenced a prayer-meeting on Sabbath morning before church time.

Success.

The gospel preached at this station, thanks be to God, has had its saving influence. Fourteen persons, varying in age from fourteen to fifty years, have been admitted to the church on profession of their faith. Among these are several men with their wives. Our converts, with the exception of one, by their general conduct and their faithfulness in the special duties of religion, afford pleasing evidence of a change of heart. They seem to grow in grace, and by example, prayer, and conversation, endeavour to bring others to Jesus. In reference to these converts, it may be regarded as a special blessing, that with the exception of two, all reside in the villages around, and stand in no connection whatever with the station, and consequently exert a good influence upon those by whom they are surrounded. During the year, thirty-two have been admitted into our inquiring class, four dismissed, and one has moved to the mainland. The present number of inquirers is seventeen. They receive religious instruction every Sabbath afternoon, and attend regularly our evening meetings. None of them are ever to be found absent from the meeting or class without sending me word, and stating the reason.

ANOTHER YEAR CLOSED.

The fiscal year of the Board of Publication closed on the first day of the present month. The statistics of the year are not yet sufficiently made up to enable us to speak with precision of its results. It is clear, however, that although the number of colporteurs has, during the last three months, been necessarily much reduced, yet the aggregate of labourers in commission during the year will be considerably in advance of the preceding year. The amount of work accomplished by them will also be, in all its items, in advance of any former year.

From March 1st, to November 1st, 1860, the receipts for our Colportage Fund were largely in advance of the corresponding months of 1859. After November 1st, there was a heavy falling off; and this, together with large expenses incurred in several new and important fields for colportage, will bring the Fund, to the end of the fiscal year, in a largely overdrawn condition.

The same general statement is true in regard to the publishing and sales department. The first eight months of the year were months of unusual activity and success, both in the publication and the sale of new books and tracts. The last four months have been months of curtailment.

The future is wholly in the hands of God. What he may see fit to do with us as a nation, will of course greatly affect this and all our other Boards. May He who is "Head over all things for his church," so order all things, as to bring out his own highest glory, and the truest advancement of his kingdom on the earth.

COLPORTAGE IN IOWA.

The following glimpse of Colportage labours in Iowa is from a letter recently received from a devoted colporteur who is labouring in that field.

As for my labours among these people, they are so diversified that it is almost impossible for me in this report to say all I desire, or all I could. From day to day, and from house to house, I have steadily pursued my line of duty. At one time I am received by a Campbellite, who turns over my books, points out their defects, gives a sweep at Calvinism, and winds up by telling me, if I had a copy of the new translation of the Scriptures he might purchase one, but as for those books he cares nothing about them. Thus I am obliged to turn away from his door with my good volumes of such men as Doddridge, Baxter, and Alexander, as if they were unwelcome guests. But I never leave, in any case, without showing that we are not ashamed of our glorious truths, and I do the best I can, when unable to sell, to disabuse their minds of prejudice. Passing from his door, perhaps the next I come to is a Universalist or a Spiritualist, who, like the former, is ready to hear what my business is, and no sooner is it made known, than I am quietly informed by some knowing one of the house, either male or female, that the days for selling and circulating such works as these are past, and that men are beginning to be guided by another rule of action than that of their fathers. Then comes their system of belief, which in every case is adapted in all its parts to the wants and inclinations of the unregenerate heart. In all such cases I make it my duty to converse with them, and point out their errors, and frequently it results in gaining their consent to purchase one or more books, with the understanding that they will at least read them once, so as to form an idea of what Presbyterians think on religion. If I cannot get them to purchase a book, as a last resort I leave them one or more tracts, such as the conversation might indicate to be most required. In this manner an opening has frequently been made by which a second call would result in selling some good books which will result in giving a correct view of what evangelical Christians hold.

Such are the receptions I have from a large portion of the community; but though these may seem discouraging, yet we go steadily forward, now and then entering a door, where, on looking inward, we see some books that tell us where we are; and on making our mission known we are at home at once, being now in a Presbyterian family. The inquiry is soon made for some of the good old works; next we are informed that we are most heartily welcome, and they will be glad to have an opportunity to purchase some books, not having had the opportunity since they came to this new country. Such houses as these, though rare, are like green spots on the desert. But in connection with such families, it is right to state, that many of them have not heard a Presbyterian sermon for one or more years, and we feel the importance of being permitted to supply them with good Sabbath reading, to make up for the lack of preaching, which is so rare. I might mention here, that there is not a bookstore in this county, as far as I have seen, where religious books could be had, if the people were disposed to purchase.

THE FAR NORTHWEST.

A colporteur, who has been making explorations in the far Northwest, writes as follows:

Green Bay, January 26, 1861.

Dear Brother—I spent a few days at Fond du Lac, where there is a very large French Catholic population, and where there are two families which have been brought to the light of the gospel through my instrumentality, while in the state of New York. I visited the people there, and preached in French in the Presbyterian church, to a congregation of about seventy persons, who listened with the deepest attention, and who have been very well satisfied. They have a good feeling towards Protestants. They had not heard the gospel preached to them before. I think it would be proper to do something for them. In the evening I made a statement of the work of evangelization among the French Catholics, in the Presbyterian church, and in the English language. In this the congregation appeared to be well interested. Afterwards I went to D. and visited some French settlements. I found the people very kind, although they are all Roman Catholics. I spoke to them about gospel truth. They appear to be willing to hear. I learned that about twelve to thirty miles northeast from Green Bay there is a large mixed French population, Belgian and Canadian. Many of the Belgians, I am told, are Protestants, but as they are so much removed from civilization, they are very much corrupted. On account of a very heavy fall of snow it is impossible to go there now. However, I made arrangements with a German brother here, who speaks both French and English, to try to reach that settlement to-morrow, and see and learn what he can. If the road is not practicable, I propose to come back to Fond du Lac to attend the meeting of the Milwaukie Presbytery, and try to get them interested in the work among the French Catholics, and then to preach again there to the French people.

I am confident that the Lord will help us, that he will direct us, and show us the way; but we must follow his instructions. He tells us to be wise as the serpent, and harmless as the dove. Working with him we may be sure of the assistance of his mighty hand.

January 28.—Last Saturday I hired a horse and sleigh, and went with the German brother, of whom I spoke above. We started early on the Sabbath morning, relying entirely on a good Providence for guidance, for we were not acquainted with the road, only the brother who was with me had seen some of these people in the city of Green Bay. We rode about ten or eleven miles, and we noticed a German grocery; we stopped there in order to inquire about our way, and we found there some Belgians, young men, of whom I inquired about their country people. I learned from them that their settlement was not distant, and that some of them were Protestants; they gave me the names of some of them. Then the brother who was with me inquired from the keeper, in the German language, and he gave him some more accurate information, especially the name of one of the leaders among the Belgian Protestants; it was but one and a half to two miles further. We went there straight way, and found the man reading his Bible. As soon as we had told him the object of our coming, he started in acclamation for joy, saying, "Blessed be God he has heard our prayer; for over four years we have asked for an evangelical teacher. But a moment since I was speaking with one of our brethren, in order to write to Europe to ask for spiritual help." I learned that there is quite a number there of Catholic converts who came from Belgium within about five years past. They have a church organization. They have purchased a piece of land for the purpose of building a meeting-house. They meet every Sabbath to read the Scripture, and pray and sing the praises of God. Through them a good influence has been shed on their Roman Catholic neighbours, some of whom have been converted.

In about fifteen minutes, fifteen of these interesting people were gathered in the house where I was, among whom were all the members of their consistory. They came all to me, and looked at me as an angel of God. And instead of a degraded and corrupted people, as I was informed, I found myself in the midst of a true Christian people; and very contrary to my expectation, I had the pleasure to address to them the word of life, which they listened to with a true Christian interest. They have but one hymn book, but they sing with the heart, as well as with their voices, the praises of God. They have committed to memory many hymns, so they could sing without book. They told me they number about thirty families, which may make over one hundred people. There are many children which need to be instructed, and many who have not been baptized. They need a pastor, and they earnestly ask for one. A missionary station should be established there, a church and a missionary house built. This is an important field, although it is in the wilderness, and would require much self-denial on the part of the missionary; and would require arduous labours, for they are scattered on a large field all in the wood. However, much good can be accomplished, for there is a large Roman Catholic population there, for perhaps twenty miles around. Two miles further north from the place where I stopped, there is a Catholic church, where no priest officiates. The priests ask ten dollars every time they go there, and the people are not willing to pay that amount. I think it a good omen for missionary labours; the doors are open, and with proper arrangement much good can be accomplished. I am going to attend the Winnebago Presbytery meeting at Fond du Lac, and to visit some French settlements on the way. I will try, when coming back, to get my box of books at Appleton, if it is there, and to spend a few weeks among this good people, when I will learn more about the field.

Please to receive my Christian salutations, and believe me to be in Christ, truly yours, H. M.

A FRENCH MANUFACTURER.

A translation of the tract, "Serious Thoughts on Eternity," found its way into the shop of Mr. B., a manufacturer in the south of France. The town in which he lived contained, without a single exception, a thoroughly popish community. He took up the tract, and read it. It alarmed his mind, and he read it again. He pondered it for some time, as it was the only tract of the kind that had ever fallen in his way. In it were several references to the New Testament, a book he had never seen. He was now desirous of obtaining a copy of the sacred volume, and after a diligent search, he at last found one at the shop of a bookseller, to whom a Protestant clergyman had sent a few copies, with the faint hope that they might meet a purchaser. He now consulted all the passages referred to in the tract, pondering what these things could mean; and was fully awakened to serious concern for his soul. He requested a friend, who resided in the same town as the Protestant clergyman, to call and inform him that he had seen the New Testament, and was desirous of corresponding with him on the subjects contained in it. Of this invitation the clergyman gladly availed himself, and commenced a correspondence which was not speedily terminated. Mr. B's heart was evidently touched by the influence of the Holy Spirit, and his mind gradually opened to a knowledge of divine things. He shortly left the Romish communion, and became a most useful and devoted servant of the Lord Jesus. Having known, in his own experience, the worth of the Holy Scriptures and Protestant tracts, he sought to circulate them among others. Upwards of eleven hundred New Testaments were sold by him at reduced prices, and several thousands of religious tracts were also distributed. His efforts led to the awakening of several of his friends to a concern for their souls, and, amongst others, of two Roman Catholic priests. What blessings thus resulted from a single tract!

RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS.

Every church-member should make it a matter of course, to take, read, and pay for a religious newspaper. Indeed, no person can be an intelligent Christian in these days without keeping himself well posted as to the history, and movements, and doings of the religious world. A well conducted religious newspaper is one of the best practical commentaries upon the Bible which can be secured, constantly filled as it is with illustrations and explanations of scriptural language, doctrines, precepts, duties, geography, history, biography, etc. Those, therefore, who are in the habit of carefully reading such papers, all other things being equal, will generally be found making the best practical Christians, the best church-members, the best citizens, the best neighbours, and the best parents. Every Christian, one would suppose, feels a deep anxiety to know something of those wide-spread and glorious successes which are everywhere following the varied and noble instrumentalities put forth by the people of God for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom in our land, and among the other nations of the earth. Selected.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. Confirmation without Laying on of Hands. An address to the Young People of the Presbyterian Church and Congregation of Athens, Georgia. By the pastor, Rev. N. Hoyt, D. D. 18mo. pp. 47. Price 4 cents, postage one cent.

In this excellent treatise the venerable author, in a very lucid, scriptural, and affectionate manner, sets forth the true doctrine of confirmation, and brings the thing into its true relations to repentance and saving faith. Such a treatise has long been needed, and its appearance will fill an important gap in the literature of the Presbyterian Church. Pastors would do well to place it within reach of the young people of their charges. Any of them who may become troubled in mind by the assertions and assumptions of Romanists or Episcopalians on this subject, would find an admirable antidote in this little work of Dr. Hoyt.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, (or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c.) to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.
No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

CLOSE OF THE FISCAL YEAR.

The fiscal year of the Board of Church Extension closes April 1st, 1861. In reminding those who sympathize with our houseless churches of this fact, we must add that the appropriations of the Board are now $4000 in advance of the receipts. There are besides, applications prepared for our action, calling for more than twice that sum. As in the present condition of the country, the Board cannot anticipate its income further, no more appropriations can be made until the treasury is replenished. We know something of the disappointment, and sorrow, and loss this inability must occasion, and we earnestly ask all who love the Redeemer, for help to relieve the distress of their fellow disciples. The Scriptures assign a prominent place to the duty of ministering to the necessities of the saints; and surely one of the most effective and delightful forms of that ministry is to aid our feeble churches in their self-denying efforts to secure a home, in which they can, undisturbed, enjoy the ordinances, and approach the table of the Lord.

REMARKABLE LIBERALITY.

A remarkable instance of liberality is presented in the subjoined letter from a pastor on Long Island. If the zeal and self-denial of these three little girls were generally imitated, the lagging wheels of benevolence would roll with wondrous swiftness on their errands of mercy. The happy pastor of these willing "doers of the work" thus writes:

"Please find enclosed thirty dollars, the product of the industry of Lucy, Ella, and Betsie, three little girls attached to the Presbyterian Sabbath-school in B——, Long Island. This is to be used in building the Children's Church at St. Anne, Illinois, which, added to fifteen dollars previously sent by our school, makes, we think, quite a large collection, considering our fewness. The whole was raised within the space of six weeks.

"These little girls are bright, intelligent, and lovely in their dispositions, and are easily moved at the wants of others. As I spoke one Sabbath morning in the school, of the efforts made to build a church for the poor Canadians in Illinois, just emerging from Romish darkness, and how the Board of Church Extension had appealed to the children in the United States for help, they resolved that they would do something. Accordingly, they gathered a shilling from this one, and another from that one, and purchased material, out of which, with the aid of their mothers, they made small children's clothing, pin-cushions, and various articles, which they sold to ladies, and to all who would encourage their good work. When, after their sales, they counted up their pennies, and dimes, and quarters, they were astonished at the big sum of thirty dollars. How their hearts leaped for joy! And was not this noble? As we look at these little girls, we feel to say, 'in God's own good time there are three strong pillars in the temple.' What lends the greatest interest to this story is, that, with a single exception, their parents are non-professors, and some of them, we fear, are very far from the kingdom of God. If unbaptized children have so much love for Jesus, what ought to be expected from those who belong to the covenant, and have always been blest with Christian parents? O that all children could be early taught to love the Saviour, and to labour in His vineyard, as these are doing!"

TO CHRISTIAN FARMERS.

As seed-time is at hand, allow us to call the attention of our Christian farmers to the following statement. If Presbyterian farmers would imitate their Lutheran brother, the treasuries of the Lord would be amply furnished, and their own barns would, in accordance with the promise, Mal. iii. 10, 11, be stored with plenty.

A correspondent of the Evangelical Lutheran is owner of twenty-five acres of land, all cleared, on which he still owes two hundred dollars. Feeling a strong desire to do all the good he can, he one year ago dedicated one acre to the service of God, and planted it in corn. In the fall he gathered the crop, amounting in all to forty-five bushels, which were found to be worth twenty dollars. This was properly distributed among the several claims of benevolence as the Lord's money. "It is probable," he adds, "that if I had not determined beforehand to dedicate the products of that particular acre to God, I would not have given half so much." One of his neighbours has adopted a similar course, with corresponding success. And both are resolved to persevere in it, in order to procure means to assist in building churches. May God abundantly bless them, and may their example "provoke many"!

Ecclesiastical Record.

PASTORAL RELATION DISSOLVED.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel R. Wilson has resigned the pastoral care of the First Presbyterian church, in Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Rev. E. E. Swift gave notice to the church of Newcastle, of which he has been the pastor for several years, of his intention to ask Presbytery for a dissolution of the relation, in order to accept the co-pastorate tendered him a short time ago with his father, the venerable Rev. E. P. Swift, D. D.

CALLS.

The Rev. Alexander L. Hogshead has accepted a call to the churches of Oxford and Collierstown, Lexington Presbytery.

The Rev. Robert F. Sample has declined a call from the church of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.

The Rev. George P. Hays has received a call to the Second Presbyterian church, Baltimore.

LICENSURES.

The Presbytery of Alleghany City has licensed Mr. Monod, son of the Rev. Dr. Monod, of Paris, to preach the gospel, and he will proceed immediately to the French colony in Illinois.

ORDINATIONS AND INSTALLATIONS.

The Rev. J. J. A. Morgan was installed pastor of the Presbyterian church, Hempstead, Long Island, on Wednesday, the 16th of January, by the Presbytery of Nassau.

REVIVALS.

Danville, Kentucky.—The Presbyterian church at Danville is enjoying a glorious work of grace. The meetings continue with unabated interest. A large number have connected themselves with the church, and many others are nightly presenting themselves as inquirers, and numerous written requests for prayer are read from the pulpit. All the institutions, and the whole country participate in the interest. The Professors in the College and Seminary have been aiding the Rev. Mr. Lapsley and Dr. Yantis.

Lexington, Kentucky.—We learn also from Lexington that there is a state of unusual interest in the Second Presbyterian church. The Rev. Mr. Brank's meetings have been held nightly for some time past. Quite a number of anxious inquirers have attended them, and several additions to the church have been made.

Montgomery, Missouri.—The pastor, the Rev. S. D. Loughead, writes to the Presbyterian Herald:—"We are now in the midst of an interesting work of grace in this place. Ten, thus far, are added to our young church. We are looking and praying for a general and powerful revival of religion."

Brownsville, Tennessee.—A correspondent of the same paper also writes of an interesting work of grace at Brownsville, Tennessee. About forty professed a hope in Christ; twenty connected themselves with the church, and some eight or ten more are expected to unite soon.

West Urbana, Illinois.—The Rev. George McKinley, of West Urbana, writes:—At present there is an unusual religious interest in all our churches, especially in the Congregational and Presbyterian. It commenced with the week of prayer. All the churches united in a daily prayer-meeting. Nearly every day since the commencement of the meeting, requests for prayer have been sent in or made by persons anxious for their own soul's salvation, and a goodly number have professed their faith in Christ.

Geo. H. Van Gelder,
Treasurer Trustees of General Assembly,
Office, No. 320 Walnut Street.
Philadelphia, February 13th, 1861.

FORM OF BEQUEST FOR DISABLED MINISTERS OR FAMILIES OF DECEASED MINISTERS.

I give and bequeath to my executors hereinafter named ——— dollars, in trust, nevertheless, that they shall within ——— months after my decease, pay the same to George H. Van Gelder, Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, or to his successor for the time being in said office, for the use of such disabled ministers, and their families, as the said, The Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America shall or may designate.

Nota.—This form will do for a pecuniary bequest. If stocks, or land, or other property is given, the phraseology should be modified to suit the case.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST TO ANY OF THE BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

AN ITINERANT'S REPORT.

The following report is, we think, unusually interesting. We agree with the writer, and think our readers will concur in the opinion, that the best way to give an idea of the missionary's work, is to narrate the labours in the order in which they were performed. We would be glad if more of our missionaries, in writing their reports, would adopt this method.

Stillwater, Minnesota, March 1, 1861.

Dear Brethren—Another quarter of my itinerancy has closed; and I know not that I can give you a better idea of what I have been doing, than by passing over my labours in review, in the order in which they were performed. You will doubtless admit, when you remember that we are in the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, and that it is winter, that it is much more agreeable to the flesh to follow my travels in imagination than was the reality; and yet I have met with so many kind and hospitable friends, who have welcomed me, though a stranger, to their fireside and family board, so kindly and cordially, and have had so many marked evidences of the blessing of God upon my labours, that my suffering from the severity of the climate has soon been forgotten.

Before entering upon the account of my labours, let me ask you to take a look at my outfit for travelling in this northland. This consists of a good horse, a cutter, two buffalo robes, an overcoat made of buffalo skin and lined with flannel, overshoes, and, for the emergency of a piercing wind, a false face made of the same material, fur gloves, &c. Thus rigged, I have travelled twenty miles without stopping, when the thermometer was twenty degrees below zero; and I have faced, for nearly a whole day, a wind whose temperature was but little above zero, and have felt but little the worse for it at night.

My first visit was to White Bear Lake. This is a point about ten miles from here, and about the same distance from St. Paul. I had visited it before, and it had been occasionally supplied with preaching by brethren Riheldaffer and Howell. As there were several persons in the vicinity who desired the organization of a church there, I organized them. This point will probably unite with Stillwater in the support of brother Howell.

I next went to Owatonna, to assist brother Chapin in a series of meetings he contemplated holding. These meetings were continued for nearly two weeks. God's Spirit was present from the beginning. The communion, on the first Sabbath they began, was truly a delightful and solemn one. The place of prayer, frequented from day to day, was often a "Bochim," and the attendance upon preaching from night to night was good. As the result of this meeting, the church was greatly revived and strengthened; some of the impenitent were awakened, and some, we hope, were led to Christ. Brother Chapin was greatly encouraged in his work. Think of a minister labouring year after year, far removed from the ministerial brethren of his own church, too far ever to see them except at the meetings of Presbytery, having few to sympathize with or encourage him, and you can easily imagine how our good brother enjoyed these meetings.

From Owatonna I went to Okaman to visit the little church I had organized there. I found that, since I left them, they had raised a subscription amounting to about $600 for the erection of a house of worship. They hope to increase this, so that, by a little assistance from the Board of Church Extension, they will be able to erect a house worth $1,000. I held a meeting here of three days' continuance, and administered the Lord's supper. There was a good deal of interest manifested at this meeting. Two were added to the church on profession of their faith, and several others showed concern for the salvation of their souls. The Rev. H. F. Taylor has since gone to Okaman, and is supplying that church for the present, and I understand is greatly encouraged in the commencement of his labours there.

I returned from this tour about the first of January, having preached once for almost every day in December. My lungs having become tender by frequent use, and from exposure to the cold in travelling, I took a severe cold, which laid me aside for a few days. A kind Providence, however, shielded me till my work was done, and I was near home. As soon as I was sufficiently restored, I started on another tour, up the Minnesota river. On my way I visited the church of Minneapolis. This church has nearly completed a very neat and comfortable house of worship, which they hope soon to free from debt. The congregation is large and increasing. The pecuniary ability of the church is not very great; a little more energy and promptness, however, in the management of its financial affairs would greatly increase its efficiency. Some of the members seemed to think it absurd to talk about taking up a collection for the Board, whilst they themselves were so dependent on it. When they were induced to try it, however, they were astonished at their success, and I hope will be encouraged to try it again.

I also visited the church at St. Peter during this tour. This is a prosperous and growing church, has been greatly blessed of God, is doing all that it is able in the support of its minister, and also for our Boards.

On my way home, I spent a Sabbath at Belle Plains. In this town and vicinity there are seventeen members of the Presbyterian church, about equally divided between the New-school and Old-school. More than two years ago, a New-school brother from the East, being for a few days a sojourner in the place, organized a church in connection with his denomination. It has never been supplied with preaching, however; only a portion of our members united with it. There are several points on the Minnesota river which might be united in the support of a minister, and where he might be of great service to our church.

My tour for the month of February was to the southern part of the State. The principal points visited were, first, Cannon Falls. This is a beautiful and flourishing little town, situate, as its name indicates, at the falls of the Cannon river. It is surrounded by a very fine country. Our church has an excellent family there, and I was informed that there are a number of others who would assist in the support of a minister of our denomination. This point could be united with Prairieville, which I mentioned in my last report. They are about twenty miles apart, yet the road is so very fine, both summer and winter, that this distance would not be inconvenient to a minister who has a conveyance of his own; and this, we remark, by the way, is a very great desideratum for every minister in this country.

Second, Rochester, the county-seat of Olmsted county. This is one of the most flourishing inland towns of our State, contains about twelve hundred inhabitants, is situated at the falls of the Zombro river, is on the projected line of railroad from Winona to the interior of the State, and is surrounded by a country unsurpassed in beauty and fertility, and abounding in multitudes of pure gushing springs. This whole region must soon be densely populated. The attention of the brethren in the southern portion of the State was directed to this point at the same time that mine was. Brother Jackson and I, though ignorant of each other's intention to visit the place, met there, and, after thoroughly investigating the state of things, and getting an expression of the wishes of those who sympathize with us there, we determined that it was our duty to organize a church at once. We proceeded with the organization as far as circumstances would permit. Some of the most influential families of the place are deeply interested in this enterprise. They will probably be able to raise three or four hundred dollars towards the support of a minister.

Returning from Rochester, I called at Lake City. Our church in that place is prospering under the ministrations of brother Snow, and is energetic and efficient in its financial affairs. I advised brother Haslett, who preaches one half of his time to a little church called Glasgow, and the other half at a point in the vicinity of Lake City, to give up the latter point, where there is no probability of building up a church, and, as the two or three members there already belong to the church at Lake City, to let brother Snow look after them, and to commence an enterprise at West Albany, where they have no preaching of any kind, and where, I am informed, there will be a congregation of fifty or sixty to start with. The advantage of this change is in the probability that a church may be built up at this latter place, which will be convenient to unite with the church of Glasgow in brother Haslett's support, and the cause of Christ will also be extended thereby.

In concluding this report, I remark that nearly all our churches have taken up collections for the Board; some of them too late, I fear, to be reported in the present year's report. There are a number of other points in our Synod, where, I have been informed, ministers are greatly needed. Among these I would mention Black River Falls, Manominee, and Durand, in the Presbytery of Chippewa, in northwestern Wisconsin. In carrying on our work efficiently, I am well convinced of the importance of a judicious distribution of our ministers over this vast region, giving to each a prominent place, which he may make the centre of his influence, and around which he may operate, perhaps for miles. We will thus combine the advantages of the settled ministry and the itineracy.

In summing up my labours for the quarter, I find that I have travelled over seven hundred miles, have preached forty-three times, have not missed a single appointment, have not stopped for cold or storm when it was necessary for me to travel, have been laid by but one Sabbath, and that on account of sickness. Hoping that I may have a continued interest in your prayers, I remain,

Yours fraternally,

I. C. Caldwell.

RESULTS OF MISSIONARY AID.

We commend the following letter to the perusal of the patrons of the Board, that they may see how much good is sometimes accomplished by the pecuniary aid furnished to weak churches.

Rev. and Dear Brethren—Your note of the 7th inst. was received in due course of mail, and I should have replied immediately, had I not wished, when I wrote, to enclose our annual contribution to your Board. I have waited until the last moment, hoping to send at least as much as last year; but I regret to say that "the hard times," which a manufacturing village like ours is the first to feel, has cramped our resources. I never knew so little money in circulation. However, what we send we accompany with our fervent prayers to the great Head of Zion, that he would continue to sustain and bless you. I have been permitted to learn, from practical experience, how important and beneficent is the work God has committed to your hands. Six years ago, I came here among a weak and dispirited people, who, had it not been for your assistance, could not have supported a pastor. The whole amount of salary raised among the people was $300, and even this amount cost not a little self-denial; now they pay me $1000. Then, their nominal membership was seventy-one; now, one hundred and ninety-two; or one hundred and thirteen souls (we trust) have been brought savingly to Jesus, the principal part of whom are young men and women. Six husbands and their wives, four husbands who had pious wives, and two wives who had converted husbands, are likewise to be included in this number. To-day I have thirty young men who are ready and able to conduct our prayer-meetings; leading in prayer, and dropping words of counsel and exhortation, that would surprise and edify you. Who can compute the value of the return which the Holy Spirit has caused to be made to the outlay which, through your Board, has been expended upon this church?

May God bless you all, giving to you every needed grace, and that wisdom which is profitable to direct. Such is the prayer of

Yours, in Jesus, F. R. M.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Domestic Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

CLOSE OF THE FISCAL YEAR.

With this month, the fiscal year of the Board of Education closes. The year has been a most eventful one, both to the world and the church. Death has been doing his work among the members and officers of the Board. Two Secretaries, a Vice-President, and a member honoured throughout the church, have been called home from the toils of the vineyard. Our consolation, under these repeated bereavements, is, that He who presides over and directs the affairs of our Zion, liveth for ever. Upon his servants the shadows of evening must fall, and laying down the weapons of their warfare, they must retire from the conflict, but around the immortal Head and Captain of the Lord's host, no evening shadow ever gathers. As the prophet, priest, and King of his church, possessing all power in heaven and earth, He ever liveth. O precious truth! What change can injure, what power destroy, that body over which he presides, and which he animates, and sanctifies, and seals, by his Spirit, till the day of redemption?

It were, however, but a perversion and abuse of this glorious doctrine, to conclude, and, concluding, to act on the principle, that because of the guarrantied safety of the church, and the security of her interests, we are exempt from duty. Let us remember the context of the great commission. Instead of furnishing a plea for indolence on the part of the church, that context makes Christ's universal Lordship the ground of universal activity. "All power in heaven and earth is given unto me, go ye therefore into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." That power he holds as the Mediator, for the purpose of reducing all his enemies to subjection, and that power he will wield for the accomplishment of that end, and from his hands the governmental reins of the universe shall not pass until the last enemy shall fall beneath his feet—till death itself shall die. But in the prosecution of this work he employs the sons of men; and with those whom he has commissioned to herald his salvation he has promised to be only whilst they are engaged in his service. Christ with an inert, indolent, selfish church, were an anomaly in the economy of grace. If we would have his presence with us, and his favour upon us, we must be actively engaged in the execution of the great commission. The church that is not raising up, and sending forth into this fallen world ambassadors of Christ, is not engaged in this service, and is destitute of the condition on which Christ's presence is vouchsafed. We say raising up, for two reasons. 1. This is a fundamental work, without which the church cannot execute the commission. 2. Because this is the work over which the Board of Education has been appointed to watch. We would institute no comparisons among our Boards. They are all dear to every true son and daughter of the Presbyterian church; but it is no disparagement to the edifice to single out the importance of the foundation, and point out the necessity of laying it, and of laying it well—of laying it on a good and stable basis, and with goodly stones, well hewn and squared.

This is, unquestionably, a good and a determining work. The stability of the superstructure depends upon the qualities of the elements introduced into the foundation, and upon the manner in which they are laid. To pass from the figure, the church will be in a few years, as her youth and her candidates for the ministry now are. The interests, therefore, entrusted to the Board of Education must be regarded as vital. Let the church remember this. Let her bear it upon her memory and upon her heart, at the throne of grace. In praying for this cause, we are praying for the cause of Domestic Missions, and the cause of Foreign Missions. What can these Boards accomplish beyond what the men, raised up and equipped by the church, enable them? Under whatever aspect the cause of God in this, or in heathen lands, is viewed, the mind is carried back to the Board of Education, as the substratum upon which the entire work rests.

In view of these facts, what ought the church to do? What is she doing? What is the measure of her interest in that band, who are soon to represent her on the field of heathen darkness, or here, at home, to break among her sons and daughters the bread of life? Some, yes, many, of our churches are doing nobly. Blessed be God that we have such churches—churches which, to the utmost of their ability, contribute to this cause.

We give the following as a specimen:

"I enclose you a ten dollar bill—the amount of the annual collection of my congregation for the Candidates' Fund of your Board. It is very small. But few of my people are receiving any money now—their business, cotton mills, is at a low ebb. The owner of the enclosed gold chain is willing to give it to the same Fund. The sum realized for it to be added to the above ten dollars, and the whole amount acknowledged as the annual collection of the Presbyterian church of ———. The chain has been worn but a few days. The price, when new, was sixteen dollars. If you know any jeweller favourable to your cause, he will, no doubt, give you pretty near the value. Please acknowledge the receipt as soon as you have disposed of the chain.

Yours, &c.

We greet this chain, which comes from a Southern State, with a peculiar welcome. Stretching over all boundaries drawn by party zeal, linked at the one end to Southern hearts, and at the other, carried within the vail of Northern affection, it puts forth its strength to bind us indissolubly together. Hail beauteous symbol of the unity of that kingdom which will survive all the kingdoms of earth, and outlive all the wrecks of time!

How does the spirit which animates this letter, and which animated the donor, contrast with the spirit of those two thousand churches which seldom or never give anything to this Board!

Dear brethren, you have yet one month wherein to discharge a debt which you owe, not to the Board of Education, but to Him who shed his own life's blood to wash us from our sins.

COLLECTIONS FOR THE BOARDS.

The following suggestion in reference to the raising of funds for the schemes of the Free Church is, we think, worthy of consideration. We have known pastors and elders who gave an opportunity on two occasions on the same Sabbath. An opportunity afforded on a subsequent Sabbath, would seem to have decided advantages.

To the Editor of the Witness:

DEAR SIR—Permit me to suggest, that whenever a collection falls to be made for any of our schemes, an opportunity be given on two successive Sabbaths, instead of one, over all the church. I am satisfied that were this generally done, the funds of these schemes would be very materially increased. Nor, if properly explained, ought any of our people to object to it—no reasonable man will—for a moment's reflection may suffice to show that the object is simply to afford an opportunity of contributing their mite, to such members of the congregation as, by circumstances, may have been prevented, as very many always are, from attending worship on the preceding Sabbath. Say that, by the adoption of this suggestion, there were only, on an average, ten shillings additional contributed by each congregation, and that of course is an extremely moderate computation, even that would be a very considerable gain—a gain, too, without prejudice to any conceivable interests, being simply the voluntary offerings of those, who but for this way of providing for their contributions, would not enjoy the privilege which they, in common with the other members of the congregation, would have enjoyed had they been able to be present on the Sabbath before.

Commending this idea to the serious consideration of the different committees of the church, in the earnest hope that, if, on due reflection, it shall be deemed advisable to adopt and act upon it, it may be found as productive as I anticipate, I am, dear sir, yours truly, W. W. DUNCAN.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

INFANT BAPTISM.

The doctrine that the infants of Christian parents are to be regarded as members of the church of Christ, and ought to be baptized, is very closely and vitally connected with household religion. Where this doctrine is ignored, and Christian parents are taught to look upon their children, not as co-heirs, with themselves, of the grace of life, but as aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, the family is not very likely to be a nursery for the church. Where the doctrine of Presbyterianism has prevailed—the doctrine that the visible church embraces not only believers, but their children, the results have proved that the doctrine is of God. Families pervaded with this idea, and watered by this truth, stand out in the history of the church as gardens which the Lord has blessed. They have furnished men who have given character to the church, and land, and age, in which they lived.

There is one plausible objection against the doctrine of infant baptism, which is very persistently urged by our Baptist brethren, and which, doubtless, influences their own minds to the rejection of this doctrine, more than any other argument or consideration, which we wish to notice, both for their sakes and for the sake of those who may be exposed to their peculiar logic. The objection is founded on the assumption that infants are destitute and incapable of faith. Faith, say they, is the condition of baptism; but children cannot believe, therefore children ought not to be baptized.

1. Our first remark is, that there is here manifest confusion of thought and language. Faith is confounded with believing; that is, a principle is confounded with an act. A principle may be in existence, and not be in action. The habit of the mind determines the character of the activities of the faculties of the mind, when these faculties are brought into action; but the existence of this habit of soul precedes the exercise of the faculties, is distinct from them, and is not to be confounded with their acts. Of this we have a beautiful exemplification in the spouse in the Song of Solomon: "I sleep, but my heart waketh." The principle of love to her beloved was still in her bosom, though it had not been in exercise.

2. We observe, in the second place, that our Baptist brethren do not go through with the principle on which their argument is based. If, as they allege, the lack of ability in an infant to believe, ought to prevent its baptism, why not hold, in conformity with this principle, that the same disability ought to prevent its salvation? How is it possible to avoid this conclusion, if their principle be valid? They profess to have found out from the word of God, that none but believers ought to be baptized. They will, of course, admit, that the word of God expressly teaches that none but believers can be saved. Believing, therefore, is as clearly a condition of salvation, as it is of baptism; and he who is incapable of it, is as manifestly excluded from the former as he is from the latter. The tremendous and righteous sentence, "He that believeth not shall be damned," must, on the Baptist principle, shut out from salvation all who have died in infancy. Let a Christian parent take this principle in his hand, and try to sustain his soul with it, as he looks upon his little one in its coffin and shroud. Ah what a broken reed, to pierce the hand and soul, would such a doctrine prove in that hour of parting, when the fountains of sorrow are broken up, and heart-strings are almost riven!

3. Our third remark is, that they who are fit subjects of the thing signified, are fit subjects of the sign. In baptism, the sign is the natural element, water, and the thing signified is the water of life. Now if, as Baptists hold, those dying in infancy drink of the river of the water of life, clear as crystal, as it proceeds from the throne of God and of the Lamb, how can they withhold from them, on the ground of their unfitness, the sign by which that water is symbolized? Here are the great benefits of the covenant of grace, confessedly, Baptists themselves being the confessors, bestowed upon those who, if the Baptist doctrine is correct, are destitute of what the Scriptures declare is indispensable to salvation, viz.—the ability to believe. How can these things be harmonized? How can the condition be dispensed with in the one case, and not in the other? How comes it that an infant is welcomed to the living fountain opened for sin and uncleanness, and yet debarred from the font of baptism, which is but the emblem of that cleansing flood? How is it, that the arms of the Redeemer are opened to embrace the little ones, and press them to the bosom of his everlasting love, whilst his officious attendants would interpose to hinder their access, and debar them from even the symbol of his grace? If the Saviour were present, would he not reiterate that rebuke whereby he brushed aside such intervention in the days of his flesh, and say now, as he said then, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven"?

In these remarks, we have simply endeavoured to meet an objection. It is almost the only thing, on the Baptist side of the controversy, that is really effective as an instrument of proselyting. Its consequences are manifestly at variance, not only with the teaching of the word of God, but also with the avowed and cherished hopes of Christians the world over—Baptists included. We may return to this subject again. In the mean time, dear brethren of the Presbyterian church, hold fast the precious doctrine, that believers and their seed are in covenant with God. Let this be the law and light of your households, and you will find that your covenant God, who has promised to be the God of your seed after you, will not be slack concerning his promise.

COVENANT EDUCATION.

But there is one particular sectarian influence in the same direction, which ought not to pass unnoticed here—the rise and rapid growth among us of the Baptist denomination, with their peculiar view of the relation of children to the Christian church. A similar conception also was deeply imbedded, as its subsequent historical development has proved, in the principles of the Puritans, when they emigrated to this continent; and the great influence of New England has done much to extend it throughout the country. But strictly taken, it is a Baptist idea, and its consequences are most legitimately chargeable upon that denomination of Christians. For our Baptist brethren, strenuously denying the church membership of infants, that is to say, denying the covenant of Abraham as the true and final basis of Christianity, could not fail to lose the significancy of the divinely prescribed means, or instrumental agency, through which the blessings of that covenant must be realized. In their view, religious education and discipline could not remain a Divine ordinance, to which the promise of regeneration and salvation for their children was sealed by covenant engagements resting upon the faith of God. Whatever the education of children might be, they must still be regarded and treated, not as Christians, but as "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise," until they should come to years of moral accountability, should, on the evidence of regeneration, be introduced into the church by baptism. The influence upon education of this sorrowful denial of the covenanted rights and privileges of children, has been, and still is, very great. For it has penetrated deeply into the ideas of almost all other branches of the church, until it may be said to predominate over their own original views. Even Presbyterians, in no inconsiderable numbers, have fallen away from the principles of our Confession of Faith, with respect to the children of the church, which are drawn purely out of the Abrahamic covenant; and are powerfully influenced, often without being aware of it, by Baptist ideas and tendencies. Hence, instead of regarding and treating their children as presumably of the elect, instead of reckoning with covenant assurance upon the regenerating grace of God for them, and aiming thereupon to train them up in the way they should go, to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, they assume—a fearful responsibility!—that they are not in the church, not "in the way," not "in the nurture." How widely this view prevails among us, can be measured by the general currency of the expression, "to join the church," as applied to baptized children, when they come to their first communion. Thus it is that religious education and discipline, the Divine ordinance to which the promise of regeneration and salvation for the children of believers, is sealed by covenant engagements, resting upon the faith of God, and the great means prescribed of God for the realization of the covenant blessings, has been extensively supplanted by spasmodic efforts, in revivals and otherwise, to bring a sudden, marked, and sensible change of religious experience.

To obviate misunderstanding, it can hardly be necessary for us to state that we do not hold to the possibility of salvation for the children of believers, any more than for others, without that instantaneous change wrought in them by the Holy Spirit, which is commonly called regeneration; nor have we any sympathy with that view which ties this grace to the moment of time when baptism is administered. But we hold that this gift of grace is to be assumed as a covenant grant by the faith of the parents. To us it seems plain that the Pharisees never shut up the kingdom of heaven against their disciples more effectually, than we do against our children, whilst we harp upon the one string, that they cannot love their Saviour until they are regenerated and born again—images of spiritual things which it is impossible to explain to children—instead of teaching them to count upon God's covenanted work in their behalf, whilst we seek to win their hearts to Jesus by opening to their minds with what manner of love he has first loved them. It does not lie within the scope of these remarks to exhibit the evils of this departure from the principles of our faith; otherwise it would be easy to show that it has borne the apples of Sodom and the clusters of Gomorrah in the American churches.

But we must hasten to consider what remains of our subject—the want which is now so generally felt of stronger manifestations of saving power in the ordinances of our educational institutions.

The general recognition and feeling of this want is due, in great part, to a reaction which is now going on among us against this whole movement, whose tendency was to sequester education from religious teaching and influence. Some twenty years ago it began to be apparent to many reflecting and prayerful people, that this adulterous divorce, if the expression may be allowed, continuing to develope and realize its legitimate consequences, must, in no long time, produce such a bloom of infidelity in this country, as the earth had never beheld. Among the first to raise a cry of alarm, was this Review, and our Presbyterian Board of Education, with its late, lamented Secretary, Dr. Van Rensselaer. This great and good man, who has just been called to his reward, entered into this reactionary movement with all the energy and persistency of his ardent and constant nature. To it he devoted himself, with a large share of his ample fortune; in it he enlisted the influence and resources of the Board, and, to a considerable extent, of the church herself. His abundant labours and sacrifices, we doubt not, will be appreciated, in time to come, as among the most important and fruit ful of all that have ever been devoted to the edifying of Messiah's kingdom in this country. It is in this view that an earnest effort is now making to establish the Memorial Institute, a preparatory school for boys, which shall bear his name, and perpetuate through all future generations, the memory of a man who ought never to be forgotten by our church. We desire heartily to commend this enterprise of the Board, to the liberality and prayers of all Christian people; especially, as one of the greatest wants of education, at the present time, is that of adequate and thorough preparation for college; in which department this institution is intended for a model-school.

It is true, however, that some among us are still inclined to regard the efforts of Dr. Van Rensselaer to found and build up parochial schools, Presbyterial and Synodical academies and colleges under immediate ecclesiastical control, as a failure. And it may seem strange that a reaction against the influence of sectarianism upon education, should take on this form; yet nothing is more certain than that it did. For it was in the very opposite of a sectarian spirit and aim that this work was undertaken, and has been prosecuted; otherwise it could have found no sympathy in the Presbyterian church, one of whose glorious characteristics it is that she is truly catholic, and cordially embraces all other branches of the church of Christ, even to the admitting of their ordinances as no less valid than her own. But among all her members, where could a man be found of a more catholic heart than Cortlandt Van Rensselaer? No—it was for other than sectarian objects that he devoted himself to this work; in which he favoured denominational institutions in all other branches of the church, as cordially as in his own. And we happen to know that his influence and advice were as cheerfully given in the late reconstruction, upon a thoroughly religious basis, of one of the colleges of our country, under the control of another denomination of Christians, as if it had belonged to the Presbyterian church.

But it was plain to see that religious instruction in schools and colleges, in order to be anything more than a farce, must be given in some definite, doctrinal form; that is to say, as understood and held by some denominational body of Christian people. And Dr. Van Rensselaer became convinced that the only hope of accomplishing this object, and of restoring religious instruction and discipline to its true position, as a saving ordinance in our educational institutions, was to place these under immediate ecclesiastical control. Perhaps he carried his idea too far—it was natural that he should; perhaps it would not be wise to disturb the established relations of our venerable colleges to the church, which were founded in her faith and prayers, and which for all practical purposes, have always been as completely under her control as they could be in any possible arrangement.

But it is a great misunderstanding of these ecclesiastical institutions to regard them as a failure. This is to measure them by an object which they were not designed to accomplish. For they were not intended to supersede all other institutions, nor to furnish an adequate basis for universal education. This they could never do. But they were intended to embody the solemn protest and reactionary struggles of our church against the prevailing idea, that education was a merely secular thing, a purely intellectual culture, into which the teaching of religion in any definite, doctrinal form, might not enter. They were intended to symbolize and represent, in their several localities, and thus to operate for its restoration to the popular mind, the displaced and well nigh lost idea of a covenant education;—that it is, and must be, a religious training from beginning to end, vitally inseparable from religion; that it is a preparation for life, both for that which now is, and for that which is to come; and that such education is an ordinance of God, to which the regeneration and salvation of the children of believers are sealed by covenant engagements. For this object the influence of these institutions, and of the labours and discussions with which they have been connected, is no failure. It has been, and still is immense; of greater worth a thousand fold than all the cost and sacrifices with which it has been exerted. We have seen the public sentiment of a large community powerfully influenced, in the course of a few years, by one of our Synodical academies. And though it be true, that much, very much, remains to be done in this land, it is also true, that much has been already accomplished; in proof of which, if all others were wanting, we have now the annual observance of our Day of Prayer for deeper, and stronger, and more saving influences of the Holy Spirit, in the ordinances of our colleges and other seminaries of learning. For this was a thing unthought of and unknown during those times of darkness which preceded the reaction, which is now going on, for the restoration of the supplanted idea of a covenant and Christian education.—Biblical Repertory for April.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
March 13th, 1861.

Recent Intelligence.

CHINA.

We have letters dated Canton, December 22d, Shanghai, December 22d; and from Ningpo, December 18th. From Ningpo we continue to receive encouraging intelligence. At the last communion season four persons were received to the church. Two of these were from the boys' boarding-school, one from the girls' school, and the fourth from a neighbouring settlement. There was also an encouraging state of things at Sanpoh and Yia-Yiou. Our Shanghai letter mentions that Mr. and Mrs. Gayley had been afflicted in the removal, by death, of their son. Our Canton letter is occupied mainly with a recommendation of Fuhshan as a missionary station, and earnestly recommends that a reinforcement of missionaries be sent out as soon as possible to occupy that post.

SIAM.

We have letters from this mission as late as the 21st of December. Mr. McGilvary had been united in marriage to Miss Sophia R. Bradley, daughter of the Rev. D. B. Bradley, M. D., missionary in Siam. Mrs. Mattoon, we are sorry to learn, had had a return of asthma, the disease with which she had been afflicted previous to her visit to this country. Mr. Wilson and Mr. McFarland were absent on a visit to Chantiboon, a large seaport town on the east side of the Gulf of Siam, for the purpose of preaching and distributing tracts. Dr. and Mrs. House expected to commence a new missionary station at Petchaburi, an important town to the northwest of Bangkok. This will be the first missionary station attempted in the kingdom of Siam out of the capital. They had the full sanction of the government as well as the cordial approbation of the local authorities at Petchaburi. They hoped to be able to commence their labours in the course of a month.

INDIA.

Our latest dates are from Allahabad, January 4th; Futtehgurh, January 4th: Saharanpur, January 2d; Ambala, December 15th; Lahor, December 20th. We have also a letter from Mr. Morrison, dated Cawnpore, January 1st, which place he had reached on his way to this country, communicating the mournful intelligence of the death of his wife. She died at that place on the 29th of December, from a severe attack of smallpox. Further information in relation to this painful event will be laid before the readers of the missionary journals. From Allahabad we learn of the safe arrival of the Rev. Messrs. Johnson and Wykoff and their wives at that place. They will spend one year there in the study of the language. From Futtehgurh we hear of the safe arrival of Mr. Ullman and his family at that place, where they will probably be stationed as their permanent sphere of labour.

JAPAN.

We have a letter from Dr. Hepburn as late as the 26th of December. He and his wife were enjoying good health, and were devoting their attention mainly to the study of the language. Mr. and Mrs. Nevius were still there, in health very much improved, but were expecting to return to China by the first favourable opportunity.

SOUTH AMERICA.

We have a letter from Bogota as late as the 21st of January, and from Rio Janeiro to the 7th of January. At Bogota Mr. and Mrs. McLaren were closely engaged in the study of Spanish. The change of climate had proved very serviceable to her health. Mr. McLaren had commenced a Sabbath service in English, but it was not numerously attended. He conducts two weekly prayer-meetings also. The civil war still continued to rage, and it was not improbable that a decisive battle would soon be fought in the neighbourhood, if not in the streets, of Bogota. General Jones, United States Commissioner, had promised to take up his quarters in the mission-house, and hoist his flag over it, in case the engagement should take place in the city, and the missionaries were in no fear of personal danger. The appearances were all in favour of the success of the Revolutionists. The missionaries at Rio Janeiro were well. Mr. Simonton was absent on a tour to the South, an account of which our readers will find in the present number of the Record.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

We have letters from the Choctaw Mission as late as the 26th of February; Chickasaw, February 8th; Creek, February 20th; Seminole, February 22d.

We are sorry to record the death of Mrs. Ainslie, the wife of Rev. George Ainslie. This painful event occurred on the 14th of February, at her father's residence in Montgomery county, New York. Her end was peaceful and happy. She had been an active missionary labourer for many years; first at Spencer Academy, and subsequently at Goodwater among the Choctaw Indians. Since her death, Mr. Ainslie has returned to his work at Goodwater, where his presence was much needed. The school at Spencer is quite full, and doing well. From the Seminole Mission we continue to receive encouraging accounts. During the last year twenty-three persons have been received to the church. There is still much suffering in many parts of the Indian country from the want of food.

BRAZIL.

JOURNAL OF A TOUR FROM RIO JANEIRO TO SAN PAULO, BY THE REV. A. G. SIMONTON.

December 27th, 1860.

I know no better way of laying before the readers of the Record the information respecting Brazil, which I feel to be owing them, than by giving some account of the journey in which I am now engaged. There is such an entire lack of statistics and data of every kind, that the only means of getting reliable information about the condition of the country, is travel. A residence in one of the large sea-board cities will not give an acquaintance with what is most characteristic of the nation. The influence of external civilization acting for many years upon a few of the large ports of entry, have greatly modified national habits and character, while a few miles towards the interior, scarcely an echo is heard from foreign shores, to disturb the monotony of national life. Steamboats, railroads, newspapers, hotels, and all things modern, are left behind, as soon as the traveller's face is fairly set inward, and he is alone with nature, and primitive forms of civilization. A glance at any map of Brazil will help to account for the seclusion of country life. A chain of mountains stretches along the coast, making access to the interior from the coast very difficult. The Government, seeing that the resources of the interior can never be developed while this great natural obstacle interposes, are building two lines of railroad through this mountain ridge—one from Rio Janeiro, given in contract to an American company—the other from Santos, in the hands of English contractors. Both these roads are being built at an immense cost of money and labour—but they are a necessity to the progress of this country. At a very few leagues from the sea-coast, the cost of transportation to market equals market value. Of course, therefore, no farmer cares to produce more than he needs for himself, and the market his neighbours supply him.

Voyage to Santos.

At 3 P. M., of the 10th ult., the steamer Imperador, on which I had engaged passage to Santos, steamed out of the Bay of Rio Janeiro. It was a day of sunshine out of weeks of furious rain, and all the varied beauties of Rio Janeiro harbour appeared to fine advantage, as we passed under the guns of fort Santa Cruz, and gazed back upon that side of Sugar Loaf, which the home-sick foreigner so longs to see. The only blot on the fair face of nature was the Imperador—whose housekeeping was an offence to all the senses with which man is gifted. After tea, at 8 o'clock, and a long conversation with an intelligent German passenger, I sought my bunk.

At 8 A. M. the next day, we were at the anchorage of Ubatuba, a village of some importance in the days of the contraband and slave trade. Seeing the boat lowered to take the second officer on shore with the mail, I got permission to enter with my friend, the German. It would be hard to conceive greater desolation than reigned through the village. Many of the houses were uninhabited, and the streets grass-grown. In a venda I was pleased to find a Bible, but the mildew upon it showed that it was seldom used. After roaming along the seashore, gathering shells, and waiting for Senhor Brito and the mail, we set off in search of him. He was strolling back, with his umbrella under one arm, and his mail under the other, totally unconscious that a mail steamer and thirty passengers were waiting on his movements. He informed us that he had breakfasted on eight eggs, and four cents worth of bread and coffee. At 11½ o'clock we were on board again—having spent three and a half hours landing two letters, and receiving in return three! Perhaps the agent waited to receive the replies. The next point of stoppage was San Sebastino, a larger village than Ubatuba, but resembling it in other respects. The landing of the mail here consumed three hours or more—and gave ample opportunity to prospect the town. Straying past the prison, I conversed through the grated bars with its single inmate. This building was a good type of the whole village. All its inhabitants seemed prisoners, and this poor black only thrust into the inner prison. After all were on board, at 7½ o'clock, P. M., and nothing remained but to lift anchor and steam off, we enjoyed a most conspicuous display of a virtue characteristic of Brazilians. The picture which an Anglo-Saxon imagination would draw of the Imperador, lying at anchor for three hours for an exchange of mail, would be of vessel, officers, and passengers fretting and puffing off idle steam at the delay of the mail agent, and under way again the instant his feet touched deck. There is not a trace of Brazilian colour in all this picture. The fire in the furnaces burned down, the officers and passengers behaved as if they had nothing to do but remain in the harbour of San Sebastino all their lives; and after the mail agent returned, two full hours passed before the order was given to raise anchor! We were waiting for absolutely nothing but the passage of time, to prevent our too early arrival at Santos, as the officials do not visit vessels entering their harbour until after daylight. Early next morning we came to anchor before Santos, and, after some delays for the examination of baggage and passports, were permitted to land.

City of Santos—modes of conveyance.

Santos is a city of about 8000 inhabitants, built upon an island formed by arms of the sea. It is the seaport of the Province of San Paulo, and owes its trade and importance to this circumstance. An almost constant string of mules fills the second main road leading to the interior—bringing coffee, and taking in return, salt, flour, and other imported goods. The mule and muleteer for hundreds of years have managed the carrying trade of Brazil. Their only rival, heretofore, has been a wooden cart, which would be sure of a prize in any Agricultural Fair in the United States. It is very heavy—made wholly of wood—its two wheels solid, of a thickness of several inches, and of a diameter of three or four feet. The load is placed immediately over the axle, and is drawn by four oxen. This may serve for a description of this rude wagon when at rest. In motion, the shrill screeching of its great wooden axles is torturing to the ears, and may be heard a mile off. Their drivers declare that the oxen won't work without it. The opening of the lines of railroad now under contract, will introduce a new order of things, and drive these mules and wooden carts further into the interior for employment. I was hospitably received and entertained by English, American, and Brazilian friends, to whom I had letters. Among the latter, I was in some degree an object of curiosity, as being a Protestant Padre. Neither on this occasion, nor on any other, have I been able to trace the slightest disrespect, on the part of the Brazilians, to the fact that they knew me to be a Protestant minister.

Visit to a church—Popery losing its power.

I visited one morning the church of Monte Serrat, like so many other churches and convents in Brazil, commanding a most beautiful view of the city and its surroundings. While engaged in examining the pictures hanging on the walls, of sick persons miraculously cured by vows to "our Lady of Monte Serrat," and wax models of the parts of the human frame which had, on various occasions, received healing from the virgin—here a hand, there a leg, or head, or breast—a padre entered. I introduced myself to him frankly, remarking that I presumed he would be compelled to consider me a heretic. He was polite enough to say No, and treat me with all kindness. He discovered no disposition to converse upon serious things, and merely listened when I spoke of the mediation of Christ as our only sure foundation. He informed me that there are three convents in Santos, but only two fradres. Convents and fradres have had their day in Brazil, and it is nearly past. One of these convents has been appropriated by the railroad company for a station, and it is a popular belief, that an image of St. Anthony, which was removed, was found in a sweat of horror at the sacrilege. From all I saw and heard in Santos, I was convinced that confidence is lost there, as in Rio Janeiro, in religion as it is found among them, and is taught by their priests. One young man of intelligence, after buying a Bible and conversing till a late hour of the night, said, "I did not know that this was Protestantism. It is a prevalent idea that Protestantism is something resembling Mohammedanism, a mere belief in God, without any faith in the merits of Christ." He also added, "Do not suppose that I confess to these priests. The religion of this country is only a religion fit for the blacks." Another said, "It was the religion of his forefathers, and therefore it was his." Going to the police office for my passport, I took with me a couple of Bibles and some tracts. The official had a Bible, which he produced, but bought of me David's Psalms in Portuguese, and a number of little books and tracts. He deplored the irreligiousness of the country, and especially that the young received no religious training. Another police official bought a Bible. The only bookseller in the city, who had a Bible of his own, consented to receive Bibles from me to sell on my account. On Sabbath I preached in the American consulate to an audience of English and Americans. Several Brazilians were present, curious to see how Protestants worship. I trust the day is near when they shall hear in their own language of the wonderful works of God, in providing for them a free and complete salvation through the one offering of Jesus Christ on Calvary.

Journey to San Paulo.

After providing myself with a mule, at a cost of eighty dollars, and waiting a day for the rain to cease, I set out for San Paulo at midday. For several leagues the road was so miry that it excited my admiration to see the pack mules and wooden wagons able to keep it at all. Their drivers—white, black, and mixed—trudged along on foot, inciting on the lagging mules and oxen with blows, vile epithets, and Roman Catholic oaths. The number of these troops, and the value of their cargoes, is a demonstration of the pressing necessity of a railroad to connect the rich lands of the interior with the seaboard. Passing through the village of Cubitao, I was at the foot of the Serra, or mountain range, which I have already mentioned as a marked feature of the whole Brazilian coast. The change in temperature was apparent as soon as the ascent was fairly begun. My lungs, wearied with breathing the hot and humid atmosphere of the plains of Rio Janeiro and Santos, were now regaling on the cool, elastic mountain air, while every faculty by which nature speaks to the soul, was called into activity by the striking beauties of the scenery around me. No one who is not destitute of all sense of the beautiful, can ascend this Serra without lively emotions of pleasure. Whether the eye rests on the immediate surroundings, the rich and varied vegetation above and below the winding ascent, and the rapid and cool streams of water dashing down the Serra, or wandering over the plain below, along the broad highway, with its ant-like mules, to Santos and the ocean, clearly seen in the distance, all is beauty itself. When I first encountered these uncouth muleteers or tropeiros, driving strings of pack-mules down wild mountain paths, through heavy tropical vegetation, out of which towered the stately palm and cocoa, I myself was surprised at the liveliness and peculiar character of the impression made upon me by the scene. I can only account for the exquisite gratification I then felt, by remembering how, in the old country log school, I had read Malte Brun's geography, and dreamed of the wonderful tropics of South America, its mountains, palm trees, and muleteers. Before me was now the reality, and with it so firmly linked a consciousness of the vivid impressions and fancies of early boyhood, that I scarcely knew whether to call it strange or familiar. It was pleasurable, both for its novelty to the eye, and as being the recognized realization of vivid boyish imagination.

Pleasant conversation.

Near the foot of the Serra I had joined company with a mulatto man, who was bound for San Paulo and intended passing the night at the same "Ponso" or lodging-place to which I had been directed. Entering into conversation, I found him a simple-minded and devout Roman Catholic—of a class that is rapidly becoming extinct in Brazil. Seeing me distribute religious tracts, and ask a blessing at the meal we took at the top of the Serra, he became convinced that I was a very good man. On finding I was not a Roman Catholic, he said, "You surely cannot be a Mason?" "The Masons," he said, "were a bad people who followed the religion that Solomon left." His mind would have been open and teachable, had it not been that it was too full of error to leave place for the truth. When I spoke to him of faith in Christ, and in his true sacrifice, he listened with attention, and then assured me that he had great faith, and often miracles had happened to him. On one occasion he had put "a pot on a good fire on Thursday of Passion Week, when it remained without boiling until Hallelujah Saturday; when, without fanning or fresh fuel, the fire blazed up and the pot boiled." In return for a beautiful Portuguese version of the Twenty-third Psalm, he sang me the tropeiros hymn to the Virgin, which, he says, the tropeiros of the interior sing constantly when travelling by night. At the hospedaria of Ponto Alto we passed the night. After a supper on tea, cheese, and crackers, my companion read a portion of St. John aloud, and after conversing upon its meaning until a late hour, we kneeled together in prayer, before lying down to rest. Continuing to converse upon religious subjects, he told me that I had no idea how happy he was in having encountered me, for there were few persons who had any faith. Thus it is in Brazil. Indifferentism and ignorance divide the empire, and the cross of Christ is hidden from the knowledge of the people.

Idleness among the country population.

As we neared San Paulo roadside, crosses and poles, surmounted with a wooden frame, enclosing a rude cloth painting of St. John became very frequent. Near the village of San Bernardo, a large tea plantation seems under very thrifty cultivation, and presents a marked contrast to the great extent of waste land through which the road leads. When asked why they do not cultivate the soil, the reply is a shrug and the stereotyped complaint, "por falta de braços"—for lack of arms. This answer was given in sight of roadside huts, and the filthy inmates standing idle in their doors to watch the passer-by. Why should they work? In their philosophy it is a less evil to live in filth and on bad fare than to make themselves wretched by working. They live, and the man who works does no more. And they never will work until the inner man is remodelled, and entirely new tastes and wants implanted. When they see that cleanliness is a virtue, they will get water and cleanse their persons, their clothes, and their houses. When their dormant sense of the fitting and the beautiful is awakened, they will adorn their homes—and when the higher wants of the intellect and the soul are felt, the whole man will be aroused to seek to satisfy them. Nothing but a moral and religious renovation can reach the case of such an indolent and worthless population as abounds in Brazil, and make them of any value, even as tillers of the ground.

The city of San Paulo.

The city of San Paulo is situated about 2300 feet above the level of the sea, and on this account enjoys a delicious climate. Its population is guessed at, and the figures I have heard given range from 15,000 to 35,000. It is the seat of one of the great Law-Schools of Brazil. As there are few things so precious in the view of the young Brazilian as the title of "Doctor of Laws," which belongs, by right, to one who passes the final examination of the Academy of Pernambuco or San Paulo, there is no lack of students. The usual attendance in San Paulo is, I am told, about eight hundred. As it is now vacation, the city is without this source of life. A walk through its streets shows plainly that it is one full remove further from civilization than Rio. The tiled roofs, narrow streets, stone houses covered with stucco, which was once white, but is now weather-stained, are the same as in Rio. The streets are, however, more gloomy, and, to the eye of the foreigner, apparently uninhabited. The Paulista, instead of leaning out of the window, and taking a fair, open view of the passer-by, like her Rio sister, peers slyly through the green latticed window-shutters, which belongs to every house. It is curious, as one enters a secluded street, to see at a distance these shutters partly open, and proofs that some curious female head is near the opening, and then gradually closing up, so that when in front of them, all is as quiet and deserted as a burrow of muskrats at the arrival of the trapper. During the day no lady goes upon the street, and rarely at night. The family is a close corporation, and decency requires that women shall be seen as seldom as possible in public.

Churches—religious rites.

Church feetas are of course exceptional cases. They would have few to attend upon them if woman was not allowed to go, for it is always true, that a declining religion finds woman the last to renounce her faith. I saw a proof of this on Christmas eve. At that time is celebrated what is called "a missa de Gallo," or the mass of the Cock. Passing the cathedral church at 9 o'clock P. M., I went in and found service begun and a small audience collected. The churches of Brazil are without pews or seats of any kind, except an occasional bench along the wall. The women came in, usually draped in black, with a dark mantilla thrown over the head, and all bonnetless, and kneeling on the bare floor crossed themselves very expertly and elaborately. Remaining for a short time in this tiresome position, they afterwards fell back into a more easy one, and sat hours gazing at the officiating priest, and listening to the unintelligible chanting of the mass. As a convivial party in the room adjoining mine, forbade all thoughts of sleep, I looked in upon the "missa de Gallo" a second time. It was now past midnight; the church was nearly full, and the same tiresome chanting—now by a choir of boys, then a solo by a priest standing in front of a large book before the altar, and then a chorus of priests—went on in an endless round. The whole area of the body of the cathedral, from the entrance to the railing between the priests and the people, was covered by women of all colours and ages, squatted upon the bare floor. The men, who were present in smaller numbers, occupied a space along the sides of the church. The air of the audience, who either looked on in silence or conversed in whispers with each other, indicated no solemnity of feeling, and, of course, no intelligence, for there was nothing intelligible in the service. Standing at the priest's railing for a full half hour, I did not understand a single word except Amen. One of the priests, who, in his turn, chanted or recited a solo, was compelled to clear his throat at the end of nearly every line, to the great amusement of priests and audience. A young man beside me became so full of laughter that he retired to give it vent. An elderly gentleman immediately in front of me sent his snuff-box by one of the boys in waiting, to one of the "cenegos," who, after using it, sent back his acknowledgments and his own box, which my neighbour in turn used. This is a national practice, and nothing is too serious or pressing to be interrupted, at any stage, by the taking of "rapé." On leaving the cathedral after midnight, others were coming and fewer leaving. When the service ended I do not know. By a law of the church, during the year, no priest can say more than a single mass each day, except on Christmas eve, when he may say three. On the evening of my arrival in San Paulo, I witnessed, to me, the most solemn church ceremony I have seen in Brazil. Walking along the streets in the darkness and falling rain, I encountered some priests and inferior "clerigos" returning from taking the Host to some lady near death. First of all came a boy ringing a bell to give warning of the approach of the Host, then two lines of torch-bearers, then the bearer of the Host, walking under a canopy, and attended by several priests, and followed after by a crowd of men and boys, the majority of them coloured. As this procession moved along, those going before chanted some wild chant for the dying, to which the multitude responded in chorus. The darkness of the night lighted up by torches, and the deep wild chant of the promiscuous crowd who closed the procession, were well calculated to produce an impression on the imagination. As the procession approached the cathedral, its bells—not rung but beaten by hand—set up such a din as to drown the chanters, and put a stop to all solemnity. Slipping up to the gallery, I looked down upon the kneeling multitude, and the priest depositing the Host in its appropriate shrine. Before doing so, he turned to the audience, elevating it for their adoration. For the first time I saw reverence in a Brazilian church. At the signal that all was over, the audience jumped to their feet, and left the church as hastily as they had entered it, and far less reverently.

One more description, and I have done with San Paulo crowds. Returning on Christmas afternoon, from preaching a Christmas sermon at the request of the English contractor and engineer of the Santos and San Paulo railroad, I encountered a dense crowd of blacks, blocking up the street in front of one of the churches on the outskirts of the city. They formed four groups or circles, inclosing several dancers of both sexes, two or three fellows beating with the palms of their hands a rude instrument resembling a drum, made by stretching a skin over a hollow piece of wood about three feet long, and rapidly decreasing in diameter from the end that is beaten to that resting on the ground. On one of these instruments was painted a crown, and written underneath "The King of Congo." The furious beaters of these drums, the bystanders clapping their hands, shouting, and distorting their bodies in time to the music, the extravagant movements of the male and female dancers in the centre of the ring—all was of such a pattern of barbarism, that I could scarcely believe that I was in a civilized country, and in the nineteenth century. It was altogether unlike the extravagant negro dances of a Southern plantation. They are comic—this intensely barbarous, like a dance of demons. Instead of laughter, it excited a feeling of the supernatural; for these human beings, in the savage energy of bodily distortion and wild chanting, seemed truly possessed by some inhuman fiend. After looking on for a long time, as if under the fascination of so strange a sight, I entered the church at the door of which this scene was passing. Among the ordinary gewgaws of Romish worship, I saw here a new feature—negro saints. I had no opportunity to inquire their names. One was boyish, another was full size, and bearing in his arms a house—perhaps Peter carrying the church. It was heathenism without, and heathenism within. Never did I receive a deeper impression of the hopeless degradation of the professed Christianity of this country. As for the poor blacks, they continue to do here what they did on their native shores. They are truly pagans, because no one has taught them of the true God and his worship.

German population of San Paulo.

There is a considerable German population in this city, and among them there are many Protestants. For a time they had a regular service, conducted by a pastor of the Lutheran church, but though he continues to reside here, the service is suspended. It failed, not because of any opposition from the Government or the community, but by its inability to take any hold upon the Germans themselves. I do not greatly wonder, for the simplicity of the gospel was marred by a combination of Romish forms and Rationalistic preaching. It is deplorable that the German pastors in Brazil are not more evangelical in their preaching. If anything is pitiful more than others, it is to see, in this Romish country, the Protestants, with altar and crucifix, burning candles in the face of day, and kneeling and bowing priest, with his back to his audience. Such a service and faith has all the weakness of Romanism, and little of its strength. It is Protestantism betrayed and shorn of its strength—Samson in the lap of Delilah. The information which I have obtained from the gentleman who has treated me with great kindness, respecting the German colonists of this and the Province to the south, is very sad. He describes them as being sheep without a shepherd, and rapidly losing even their nominal Protestantism. Their children, by his account, are "growing up without education, and are Catholic or nothing." The Government in several cases pays the salary of Protestant pastors, and had contributed to build Protestant churches, and yet little has been effected for the spiritual good of the colonists. He related instances, showing that the fault of this state of things is not chargeable either upon the Government or the Directors of these colonies, for in most cases a toleration has been shown that is worthy of all praise. A crying evil and wrong, which does lie at the door of Government, is that, according to the law of the land, which declares that marriage is a sacrament, and only valid as such, it has heretofore been impossible to celebrate a valid marriage between Protestants. This frightful state of things has at last been remedied by the passage, last winter, of a law granting to those who do not profess the religion of the state, a valid civil marriage. I have been deeply impressed by the conviction that there is a wide opening for usefulness among the thousands of German colonists in the south of Brazil, for any young German minister, teacher, or colporteur who will go among them, bearing a full and free gospel. Many of these people are bettering their fortunes, and they undoubtedly will have an important influence on the destiny of Brazil. If they were truly disciples of Christ, the whole nation would soon feel their influence.

CHOCTAW NATION.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE STATION AT WHEELOCK.

The year 1860, now numbered with the past, has been a year of great blessings to us who are labouring in the cause of Christ. We have most of us enjoyed a good measure of health, and when sick, have been mercifully restored. Affliction, however, has visited us. Mr. Libby lost a little daughter in the beginning of July, and one of the scholars died about the same time.

We have had no very large outpouring of the Spirit of God in connection with our labours; yet we have had pleasing evidence of his presence in the conversion of souls. Eleven have been received to the communion of the church during the year. This makes the present number on our list two hundred and seventy. Of these, however, many are not in good standing in the church, upon whom formal discipline has not been exercised. I trust there has been some growth of Christians in grace.

The church is mostly included in a circuit of twelve miles from Wheelock, as a centre. In this circuit, we have seven different preaching places in addition to Wheelock, at distances varying from six to twelve miles. My practice is to preach here each Sabbath, at 9 o'clock in the morning, in English and Choctaw, and then go to one of the out-stations, and preach again, usually in Choctaw only. Thus I can visit four of the out-stations monthly, and others occasionally. The communion is administered at all these places once or twice a year. On such occasions, the meetings elsewhere are suspended, and two days are usually occupied by preaching. These "big meetings" are some of them largely attended, and furnish important opportunities for instructing the people. Sabbaths when I cannot attend at the different preaching stations, meetings are generally conducted by Mr. Dukes and the elders.

At most of these out-stations, Saturday and Sabbath-schools are kept up, and do much good. At one of them there is a day-school, taught by a native young lady, who was educated here, and at Sewickley, Pennsylvania.

I am often called to attend funerals, or "cries" also, at which an opportunity is afforded to preach to many who otherwise do not hear the gospel.

Our boarding-school has been prosperous. The number of boarding scholars has been twenty-five, day scholars nine—total thirty-four. The scholars remaining but a few years in school, and most of them having a new language to learn, their studies are quite elementary. They learn very much, however, which is for their permanent good.

My labours in translation have been very greatly interrupted. Still I am progressing slowly with the Psalms.

With much to be thankful for, and much for which to humble ourselves, we would pray God to greatly bless us in our work the present year.

Yours truly, JOHN EDWARDS.

CORISCO MISSION.

REPORT OF ALONGO STATION.

The labours of the Alongo station have been conducted as in former years. The ministrations on the Sabbath are, preaching twice and Sabbath-school. The congregations have been fluctuating, owing to the want of a settled principle of attending on the means of grace. We do not expect that our people will assemble for worship with the same regularity as a Christian community. Their sense of duty is not as strong. In the present imperfect state of society, we are dependent more on the unholy passions and caprice of human nature for the congregations which attend in God's house. Not a few come from curiosity to hear the new doctrine: some without any definite motive, being more influenced by their friends or company than a desire to know the will of God. This is true of the more heathen part of our parish. There are some always present, and we expect to meet them as regularly as the minister of Christ goes to the sanctuary. These latter are members of the church, of whom there are fourteen belonging to the Alongo station, two having left us, to break the bread of life to the people on Illobey. Often there are influences, which cannot be controlled, that thin the attendance on the means of grace. An ordinary congregation consists of seventy individuals, but often the attendance is over one hundred, connected with the station. The Sabbath-school, of which there is one session, contains fifty scholars. These are church-members, and scholars belonging to the boarding-school. All our church-members attend Sabbath-school.

Itineration on the mainland.

Much of the labour of this station consists in visiting the tribes on the mainland that are accessible to the missionary. These journeys are performed for the two-fold purpose of making their friendship, and to obtain scholars for the boarding-school. Many precious opportunities are afforded also in passing, to say a word in behalf of a crucified Saviour. The circuit for missionary labour is rapidly enlarging. The more remote tribes are becoming earnest in their desire to receive an evangelist. Not long since it was considered imprudent to hazard forming a station far from the sea-coast, but as our influence extends, difficulties are removed. Formerly, the people were known only by their tribal name—the day has come when many friends welcome us to their hospitable roofs, with every proof of friendship. God is, by an unmistakable providence, opening up the dark land of Africa to the messenger of the cross.

Help needed.

Many pleasing reminiscences of our intercourse with these scattered tribes have strengthened our hands to lay hold more determinatively on the great work. But it is not possible that the few who occupy this small island can multiply their efforts so as to meet the wants of the tribes around us. Were the work only confined to Corisco, or if we could see all God was doing, by counting the number of converts already added to the church, we would have less anxiety. But the work is imperceptibly outrunning our labours. Hungry souls on every side cry, Give us the bread of life. The call cannot be mistaken, and under the painful necessity of weakening our own hands, we are endeavouring to obey it.

Native missionaries sent forth.

Two labourers have been sent forth to occupy stations beyond Corisco. One, a young man, formerly my interpreter, has been released from his duties for the more useful position he now sustains. He is a regular accredited minister of our church, having been licensed by the Corisco Presbytery on the 3d of July. His field at present is the island of Large Illobey, which contains a population probably of three hundred inhabitants. Since his stay among them, he has been encouraged by the good attendance of the people, some of whom express a desire to seek the salvation of their souls.

The other individual sent out, is a young man who was formerly connected with brother Mackey's station. He went forth as a Bible-reader, to explain the sacred oracles as well as he was qualified, and, if practicable, form a small school. His present location is fifty miles north of Corisco, among a different tribe called Kombe. It is astonishing with what avidity the people grasp at our teachers. Though this young man possesses nothing in his character or birth to distinguish him from others, he has been received with the cordiality of true worth.

These young men are sent forth as experiments, as we desire to know if independent native helpers would be received by their countrymen; and, if received, in what light they would be regarded. Thus far, no complaint has been made against them, which is good evidence that they have been well received. Being satisfied that a certain native agency can be usefully employed, what should be our relation to these brethren? They cannot be left alone, as a licentiate or an ordained minister at home. They have not the same independence; they are not disenthralled sufficiently from the influence of their families, and from the superstition in which they have been educated; they need counsel and encouragement. Some of those now on the ground should be at liberty to visit them monthly, but with our present force, that is impracticable. God is laying a necessity upon us to take possession of fields white to the harvest. There are others, also, in a course of instruction, who will be qualified to enter the vineyard at no distant period. This is the practical working of our system of schools which was inaugurated at the commencement of the mission. This part of the work requires to be anticipated by the church, for two new stations have been formed, and probably the same number may be formed the coming year.

Boarding-school.

The boarding-school is the most important part of our work; not in itself considered, but from its relation to other parts of the work. It is the entering wedge which prepares the way for more practical efforts. When we remember that Africans are heathen, it is sufficient to teach us, according to the analogy of life, that false impressions must be removed before they can be influenced by the truth. The duty of the principal of the school compels the superintendent of this station to visit the parents of the children residing on the mainland. God has most wonderfully blessed the school. Every succeeding year brings continued evidence of its good effects among the tribes, and of the almost unbounded confidence with which they regard it. A light is beginning to irradiate from our walls that shines into many dark places. The knowledge of the plan of salvation is becoming well understood in the regions from whence our scholars are received. True, the scholarship does not yet meet the debased mind so as to gain a complete victory; but the struggle cannot be long. Mind must conquer prejudice and ignorance. As soon as the children and youth now in school attain to the position of men, the fruits of our present labours will be multiplied an hundred fold.

The former teacher of the school was licensed this year by our Presbytery. The second teacher is partially released from the duties of hearing recitations, except the advanced class. One of the advanced scholars has charge of the school, and hears the elementary studies. Our design is to take the teachers out of the school, and make it, in this respect, a self-supporting agency. There are now thirty regular male and three female attendants in school. There were thirty-eight scholars on the roll during the year. In the latter part of June we held our first public examination in the church at Evangasimba, when the advanced class was examined on Willard's History of the United States, Astronomy, and Geography. The present session began on the first day of August, and will continue one year. A few more studies have been added.

Progress of the scholars.

The scholars are obedient and studious. They have all made commendable progress in their studies. It will be seen by the studies named above, that the scholarship of the school is improving. But, while they have improved in the wisdom of this world, I trust they have likewise in the wisdom that makes wise unto salvation. Five of the scholars united with the church this year, making our present number of church members connected with the school, nine. These Christian scholars throw a sanctifying influence into the school. It would be almost impossible to keep such a large number under government without the influence of grace.

The scholars have sustained a prayer-meeting at half-past six P. M., in which the whole school unite. The meeting is conducted in the Benga language, some of those present offering a few words of exhortation. We have a noonday prayer-meeting, also, which has been kept up through the year, excepting a short time in vacation. The meeting is one of much interest, and is attended by those belonging to the station, and occasionally by a few natives. There is also a weekly prayer-meeting.

All the services for prayer are well attended by the members of the church. Much prayer has been offered in behalf of the conversion of the heathen, which God has graciously answered. These prayers afford ground of hope for the future prosperity of the cause of Christ among this neglected race. A glorious victory awaits the church here. Many outcasts have already made their peace with the Saviour, and the signs of the times indicate that others will soon follow. He who has taken some "from the power of darkness, and translated them into the kingdom of His dear Son," will not forget the covenant to give "the heathen to his Son for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." Yours fraternally,

W. Clemens.

INDIA—PESHAWUR.

REPORT OF THE MISSIONARY TO THE AFGHANS FOR THE YEAR 1859—60.

Itineration—preliminary questions.

The early part of the mission year was spent by the missionary in an itineration in company with the Rev. Mr. Clark. The objects of this itineration were manifold. There was the principal one of making known the gospel. Then came other objects. It was to be ascertained how far the Pushto-speaking population extended in the direction to be travelled over; it was to be investigated what differences of dialect subsisted among that population within British territory; in how far such differences might be a hindrance to preaching, and whether the pronunciation acquired among the population in the neighbourhood of Peshawur was intelligible in other parts. It was to be experimented on how the villages that had never heard the gospel before, would receive the message brought to them; and one great object was to find out some suitable place where a mission to the Afghans might be established.

[Want of space, and the difficulty of understanding a route without a map, have induced us to omit it.]

Preaching began at Akora, on the Kabul river, the ancient capital of the eastern Khataks, and continued from place to place wherever an audience could be collected, large or small. On the banks of the Indus, and in the region belonging to the Panjab proper, that was traversed, the missionaries had to abandon the Pushto, and preach, as well as they could, in Hindostani and Panjabi. In the part of the Rawal Pindi district through which their line of march led them, though the population appears sparse, they found very large and prosperous villages and towns, in nearly all of which the gospel was preached for the first time. There was great eagerness for books and tracts, especially in the Gurmukhi character, and the people were even willing to pay for them such small sums as were demanded, and the stock of Panjabi books, which was believed to be large, was soon nearly exhausted. Pindi Ghel may here be pointed out as a place where either a missionary or a catechist should be located. Panjabi is the language to be used there.

Boating on the Indus does not appear to be a good way of itinerating for missionary purposes. The villages are mostly at considerable distances from the banks during the itinerating season, and often cannot conveniently be reached on account of the numerous branches of the Indus that intervene, in many places, between the apparent bank and the villages. In some places, again, especially on the left bank, the villages are temporary, on the uncertain alluvium called Kachi, and the people are not in a good state to listen to religious exhortations. In Kalabagh, which is not inhabited by Afghans, the missionaries found Afghans from the hills, who bring in the wood that is so largely used in the alum manufacture. Wilder and more ignorant specimens of humanity it would be difficult to find. To be spoken to on the subject of religion they considered an unheard-of good joke.

Dera Ishmael Khan at this season was filled with traders from various parts of Afghanistan; the bazars and serais were almost always crowded, and the missionaries had always large audiences, though the mixture of population was so great that during a single discourse sometimes it was necessary to use three languages, Hindustani, Persian, and Pushto, to be intelligible to every portion of the crowd.

How the preaching of the gospel was received.

In those villages in which the missionaries remained only a single day, the gospel message was usually, not always, received in silence, sometimes with apparent interest, sometimes with the greatest indifference, and sometimes with staring stupidity. When the missionaries remained more than one day, the usual Mohammedan controversy ensued: the Mullah or the Kázi would be called, he would display his immense learning, use the hardest Arabic vocables, clinch his arguments with the dicta of Persian poets, and tell the missionaries to go and preach to their own people first. Only in one place, Makadd, on the left bank of the Indus, was there anything like abuse of the missionaries, and attempted violence. This was due, probably, not only to the fame of the place for particular sanctity, on account of the tombs of some wonderful saints of a past age, who made walls gallop off with them, rode on tigers, used serpents as whips, transformed heretical books into blank paper, and the children of a woman who had had only daughters, into sons; but also because a descendant of the most famous of these saints happened to arrive there at the same time, and wild orgies were then preparing for the ensuing night, of which the missionaries were not aware beforehand.

As to the other objects of the itineration, the result may be briefly summed up as follows:—Between Attock and Dera Ishmael Khan, there are no Afghan villages or towns immediately on the banks of the river; even where the name is evidently Afghan, the population is Jat, Awán, Gujár, and the like. The Afghan population is more or less inland; as a general thing, they seem to prefer the hills to the plains, thus preserving in their predilection, the memory of the fact that they have always been a hill-people; for their own name, Pushtún, is doubtless derived from the ancient pushta, "a hill."

Different dialects.

As to differences of Pushto dialects, it might have been assumed a priori that a nation divided into innumerable clans, almost always more or less at enmity with one another, separated, moreover, like the old states of Greece, by ridges of hills and mountains, and having, unlike the Greeks, no one great work in their own language, alike read and admired by all the tribes—that such a nation should have a great number of dialects; the experience moreover, the missionary had had in Peshawur, in meeting with a great variety of people, from various parts of the country, had confirmed his supposition; he had also seen his previous surmise (mentioned in a former report) as to frontier pronunciation, generally verified in this instance also, and had long come to the conclusion that the pronunciation of the Afghan tribes in the neighbourhood of Peshawur, was a very inferior one, which is also betokened by the great discrepancies existing between their pronunciation and their spelling; and yet, even Afridi gutturals had not fully prepared him for the semi-articulate way in which the natives of the hills further south belch forth their words, nor for the incredible amount of abbreviation words undergo in the mouths of those woodmen he met with in Kalabagh, nor for the odd changes of vowels the Bannúchis indulge in. However, the most violent apparent anomalies were found themselves to be but the development of new laws; and such laws being comparatively few in number, and uniform in their operations, it is only necessary to listen to a few sentences of a dialect not heard before, to discover nearly all the necessary changes one's accustomed pronunciation has to submit to in order to be quite intelligible; and, on the whole, tribes not too widely separated geographically, have not much difficulty in understanding one another. What was however more important for the missionary to ascertain was, whether the written language was generally intelligible. And he is gratified to state that the written language appears to be one among all Afghans, provided a full and correct orthography be adopted, which leaves each tribe at liberty to pronounce their own way. There are, of course, localisms and provincialisms, more in single words than in phrases, and it is evident that in translations and books intended for all Afghans, such must be carefully avoided, sometimes even at the expense of pungency and terseness.

Location for a Mission.

As to another important object of the itineration, namely, the discovery of some place suitable for the location of a mission to the Afghans, no result was obtained. The only place on the frontier that had as yet recommended itself for such a purpose, was Ták, the capital of a feudal chief who had been reinstated in his ancestors' rights by the British government. It is situated in the very shadow of the Sulaiman mountains on the frontier, and being on the route of the great caravans of the Lohání merchants, who pass through in the autumn on their way from Afghanistan to India, and in the spring on their way to their homes, leaving, in many instances, their flocks and families in the neighbourhood of Ták during the cold weather, it would seem to offer advantages not met with at many other places on the frontier.

It is impossible not to feel a lively interest in a people who in their own country may be as open to the influences of Christianity as the Karens have proved to be; who, at all events, in former years, showed that they held no prejudices against Europeans, whilst they are fiercely hostile to Mohammedans; and that if it were possible to carry the gospel message to them, a nation might be born in a day.

A COLPORTEUR'S REGRET.

A colporteur in the West sends us a pleasing report of his labours and successes on his wide and destitute field, but closes his letter with the following sentence:

"There is one thing I deeply regret, that is, that the colporteur's labours do not seem to secure the sympathies of Christians, according to their merit. All other enterprises seem to have their prayers. This I never hear mentioned in prayer. Surely colporteurs need the prayers of the church as much as any labourers."

Is there not much truth in this statement? And is it not good cause for deep regret, that Christians pray so little for God's blessing on the efforts of his church to spread over the land a truly Christian literature. Reader, will not you pray for the Board's colporteurs?

THE SUICIDE ARRESTED.

Two Christians set out on a journey from Paris, some years ago, one of whom distributed several tracts in the course of their progress. During the last part of their journey they had much conversation with their fellow-travellers. Among these was a young man who remained quite silent, though, in common with the rest, he accepted the gift of a few religious tracts. On the following day, they were again thrown into the company of this young stranger, who, seizing an opportunity when they were alone, exclaimed in an earnest manner, "Pray give me a few more of your tracts, for they have saved my life." On being requested to explain himself, he said, "I lost at play 3000 francs (about $600), and I had in despair resolved to put an end to my life, when one of you, yesterday, put a tract into my hands. I read the title; it was 'On the Worth of the Soul.' I was so startled, that I could not lay it aside until I had read it through. It gave quite another direction to my thoughts, and completely shook my desperate resolution. I resolved to take a journey, and accordingly set out in this conveyance. And it is astonishing that one of the tracts you have given me to-day is upon suicide, and is the history of a young man of twenty-three years old, which is just my own age. Yesterday evening I could not have supposed it possible that I should be alive and travelling in this manner, at this hour; but may I not hope that some good will result from these circumstances?" The young man parted from the two Christian travellers at Dijon, in order to return to his family, who lived about ten miles from that place; but before they separated, he received from them an earnest exhortation to seek in Christ Jesus the salvation of his never-dying soul; and it may reasonably be hoped that the solemn impressions then made on his mind were never effaced.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESBYTERIAN BOOKS.

The following is part of an appeal recently published in the Presbyterian Herald, of Louisville, Kentucky. It was addressed by the Rev. M. G. Knight, District Superintendent of Colportage for the Board of Publication, in Kentucky and Tennessee, to the Presbyterians in those states. Its facts and arguments are, however, equally appropriate to any other part of the land. We hope our readers will ponder it, and respond to it.

Mr. Editor:—I propose to spread before your readers some of the facts of this work, as taken from a single colporteur's reports made to the Board through me.

Here is what a young man did while acting as colporteur for the Board during 113 days, including the summer months. He sold 1310 volumes, distributed gratuitously to the poor 247 volumes; distributed gratuitously 14,250 pages of tracts; visited 1146 families; conversed or prayed with 190 families; and held many meetings at which he expounded the Scriptures. This was selling daily 12 volumes, giving to the poor 2 volumes, distributing 126 pages of tracts, visiting 10 families, and praying with 2; and at the ordinary colporteur's salary we pay him 62½ cents for this day's service, and at the highest salary we give we pay him 83⅓ cents for it. Now where is there so cheap a form of Christian service, and a service so safe and yet so powerful—the distribution of our own religious literature in the family, connected with the personal effort of an intelligent earnest Christian man? A year's service at this rate will amount to 3618 volumes sold, 650 given to the poor, 40,000 pages of tracts gratuitously distributed, 3278 families visited, and 550 prayed with. Consider what an amount of service is here done. How hopeful of good! These thousands and tens of thousands of volumes and tracts—the noblest productions of the most gifted pens of the dead and living, scattered widely throughout our families and communities, in prayer and hope, and for all this we pay a salary of $200, or at most $300.

Now, say that during the year we succeed in obtaining service for the States of Kentucky and Tennessee equal to that of 12 colporteurs for a year each, (and we will do more), then at the rate of labour above alluded to, the service will amount to 43,416 volumes sold, 7800 volumes given to the poor, 480,000 pages of tracts distributed, 39,336 families visited, 6600 prayed or conversed with.

Now I beg you to look at the amount of this service, and consider its hopefulness of good. Imbue it with the spirit and power of a great Christian work, and what blessed consequences must follow it, and how glorious the harvest to be reaped from it!

Then may I not ask those who have the Lord's money, to sustain liberally this work here in their midst? And as the Board has largely overdrawn its Colportage Fund, and greatly enlarged its operations, with the view of extending its work over the whole church, may I not urge the churches and individuals to increased and prompt contributions to this work?

I may say the Board provokes us to liberality, in sustaining the work, by its liberality towards us. I may say farther, that other denominations, as for example, the Methodists and Baptists, not only provoke us to an earnest activity in this work, but make such a course a necessity, for the comfort and protection of our churches and people.

THE BURNT TRACT.

"You need not leave your tracts here," said a Roman Catholic, angrily, to a colporteur in France; "if you do, I give you fair warning that I shall burn them." The book-hawker, however, left a tract, the man repeating his statement that it should certainly be burned.

A year passed away, and the colporteur found himself in the same part of the country again. He remembered the past circumstance, and felt anxious to know what had become of the violent man who had refused his tracts. What was his astonishment to find that with him all things had become new. The man had kept his promise and burned the tract; but as he watched it slowly consuming in the fire, one sentence caught his eye, standing out in strong relief: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." These words proved the means of his conversion.

THE FIRST PRINTED BOOK.

It is a remarkable and most interesting fact, says a secular paper, that the very first use to which the discovery of printing was applied, was the production of the Holy Bible. This was accomplished at Mentz, between the years 1450 and 1455. Guttenburg was the inventor of the art, and Faust, a goldsmith, furnished the necessary funds. Had it been a single page, or even an entire sheet, which was then produced, there might have been less occasion to have noticed it; but there was something in the whole character of the affair which, if not unprecedented, rendered it singular in the usual current of human events. This Bible was in two folio volumes, which have been justly praised for the strength and beauty of the paper, the exactness of the register, and the lustre of the ink. The work contained twelve hundred and eighty-two pages, and being the first ever printed, of course involved a long period of time, and an immense amount of mental, manual, and mechanical labour; and yet, for a long time after it had been finished and offered for sale, not a single human being, save the artists themselves, knew how it had been accomplished.

Of the first printed Bible, eighteen copies are now known to be in existence; four of which are printed on vellum. Two of these are in England; one being in the Grenville collection. One is in the Royal Library of Berlin, and one in the Royal Library of Paris. Of the fourteen remaining copies, ten are in England; there being a copy in the libraries of Oxford, Edinburgh, and London, and seven in the collections of different noblemen. The vellum copy has been sold as high as eighteen hundred dollars.

Thus, as if to mark the noblest purpose to which the art would ever be applied, the first book printed with moveable metal types, was the Bible.

THE HIDDEN TRACT.

A Swiss girl, of frivolous character, who thought she had only to leave her home in order to get on in the world, and become happy, joined a number of young persons who went to Prussia as governesses. One of her sisters had placed, unknown to her, in her trunk, a Bible and some tracts. The expectations that she had formed prior to setting out were not realized, and she complained in her letters that she led a melancholy life. "I have," she said, "no pleasure here, and no dancing parties. The agreeable days that I spent in Switzerland are past, never to return." These complaints naturally excited the sympathy of her parents and worldly friends, but were a source of grief to her pious sister. This affectionate girl, who was filled with deep anxiety for her spiritual welfare, was at last able to rejoice; for, some months afterwards, she received a letter from her, commencing in quite a different strain from her former ones, and showing the joy of a Christian who had found her Redeemer. She wrote: "One evening as I took up a volume of plays to read, a tract fell out which I carelessly took up, and found it to be 'Nicodemus, or the New Birth.' I felt inwardly urged to peruse it, and as I read, the scales fell from my eyes. I perceived, and felt my misery, and during many days I was so unhappy that every one believed I was ill. At last I could pray, and I am now so happy that I would desire to tell what I feel to every one."

BAD BOOKS.

Bad books are to be shunned even more carefully than bad company. You may pass an hour with a bad man without receiving injury, but you cannot spend an hour in reading a bad book without injury. The celebrated John Ryland said, "It is perilous to read any impure book: you will never get it out of your faculties till you are dead. My imagination was tainted young, and I shall never get rid of the taint till I get to heaven."

THE TRACT BURNED, BUT NOT DESTROYED.

Twenty years ago, the late Daniel Fanshaw gave a tract to a young infidel, in whom he took a deep interest. He was indignant, saying, What right has he to interfere with me or my opinions? To show his contempt, he drew a match, and setting fire to the tract, lit a cigar with it; and, as he supposed, dismissed the matter from his mind. Not long since, on looking over the list of deaths in his paper, this man saw the name of Mr. Fanshaw. The transaction of twenty years ago came to his mind. The contents of the tract, which he had read before burning, to show his coolness as well as contempt, came back to his mind. He attended the funeral, was a deep mourner, became convicted of his sin, was converted, and is now rejoicing in hope of the glory of God.—Am. Mess.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.
Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.
No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

CONDITION OF AFFAIRS.

The liabilities of the Board of Church Extension are still over $3,000 in advance of their means, and applications for more than $10,000 lie ungranted on the table for want of funds. Who will help these debt-pressed churches?

THE CHILDREN'S CHURCH.

We expect to resume work on the Children's Church, at St. Anne, as soon as the weather becomes sufficiently settled. Winter caught us before we could get the walls fully up, but it will not take long, with the blessing of God, to finish them. We shall complete the church as soon as possible. It will be a substantial, neat, but plain structure, standing on ground deeded to the Trustees of the General Assembly. Peculiar circumstances render it impossible for us to say what the exact cost of the building will be. As nearly as we can tell now, we shall need about $1500 more than we have received, to enable us to complete the church. Notwithstanding many severe trials, the spiritual work at St. Anne lives, and is in a hopeful condition.

MARVELLOUS LIBERALITY.

We desire to call special attention to two things in the following disinterested testimony in, we believe, a Methodist journal. First, the large sum raised by the Free Church of Scotland for church-building. It amounts to over $3,500,000, and is more than one-seventh of the whole sum that church has raised. Second, the evils of church debts. Our Scottish brethren have found them, after fair trial, a crushing incubus, and their removal is admitted, on all hands, to be essential to real progress. Let our churches, especially in the large cities, profit by Scottish experience.

The English correspondent of the Zion's Herald thus speaks of the extraordinary liberality of the Free Church of Scotland, and its effect upon other churches.

"The Presbyterian Free Church of Scotland is, in every way, an example to the other churches of the land. That wonderful community have achieved a work with which there is nothing to be compared in the whole course of ecclesiastical history.

"The church only dates its existence from the disruption of the Church of Scotland in 1843, and an aggregate of the money raised in the course of the sixteen years since, amounts to the fabulous sum of nearly five millions sterling, or $25,000,000. She has paid to her ministers—whose number, originally 538, has now swelled to 812—very nearly 2,000,000*l.* Her colleges have cost 45*l.* while upon general education she has disbursed 200,000*l.*

"Then, on Home Missions—a work never neglected, but only now beginning to be estimated at its full value—118,000*l.* have been bestowed. Upon the erection of her 800 church-edifices there have been expended 725,000*l.* Her 565 manses have cost 360,000*l.*; her 620 schools have cost 22,000*l.*; her colleges and church offices nearly 100,000*l.*; and about 150,000*l.* have been invested in order to yield annual endowments of various kinds. Her membership is estimated at rather under a quarter of a million, and the average contribution is, therefore, 20*l.* for each member, or at the rate of $6 per year.

"The Free Church have provided for their ministers in a manner superior to any church in the kingdom. Their minimum salary—£134 and a house and garden—is double that of the majority of most other bodies. They carry on home missions in a manner with which there is nothing anywhere to be compared. Their best men are employed in that work, and the object is everywhere to form self-sustaining congregations.

"The example of the Free Church operated with the most salutary effect on all the dissenting communities of Scotland. The first aroused was the United Presbyterian Church, a body in all respects worthy to stand side by side with the Free Church, numbering among its pastors such men as Dr. Eadie, Dr. D. King, Dr. McFarlane, Dr. Harper, Dr. Peddie, Rev. G. Gilfillan, and others.

"They soon saw that the absence of debt on the Free Church edifices would give to that body an immense advantage over them in carrying on their work with efficiency, and accordingly they determined to deal with their church debts. After due consideration, they formed their plans, set to work, and performed great things. Much has been already done, and the completion is at hand. Arrangements are in progress, in a number of the congregations, to pay off all the debt still remaining on the church property, and it is expected that about the end of the present year nearly £30,000 of the most burdensome debt resting on these church-edifices will be removed.

"The Scotch Independents next opened their eyes to the position they occupied. They ascertained their debt, organized for action, and in due course liquidated the whole."

A CHEAP CHURCH.

In these troublous times many feeble churches are at their wits' end to secure a place of worship. Their diminished resources, at home and abroad, forbid the erection of the humblest sanctuary of ordinary construction. To such, the subjoined reply to an inquiry addressed to the Rev. Dr. Lord, of Buffalo, New York, may be useful. It is far better for churches to try the rude, though comfortable shelter therein described, than to disband or be driven from place to place, or strive with others for the occasional use of some public building ill suited to their wants. The scarcity of timber, and consequent high price of lumber in the broad prairie regions of the West, may render the course pursued by the Central Church impracticable in a few cases. In such exceptional instances, the church may imitate the hardy pioneer, and construct a very temporary shelter of the earth itself and the grass that waves so luxuriantly on its surface. A church so housed, does indeed labour at the greatest disadvantage, but almost anything is better than entire destitution, or a burdensome debt. We need scarcely add, that sawdust, charcoal, or even dry sand, may fill the place of tan-bark in the structure described by Dr. Lord, and concerning which he says, "At the organization of the Central Presbyterian Church in the year 1835, a building was commenced for temporary use, and occupied for a year or two, of the following dimensions and description. About 25 feet front, by 70 or 75 deep. Frame of joist and scantling, boarded inside and outside with rough unplaned hemlock boards, having a vacancy between the boarding the width of the scantling, say 4 inches. The vacancy was filled in with tan-bark before putting on the roof, making the audience room cool in summer and warm in winter. The roof entirely plain shingled, and without any ceiling. A front door, and the necessary number of plain windows; a single aisle, and moveable seats on each side. This cheap edifice seated from 300 to 400 people, was filled at once, and gave excellent satisfaction. It cost about $300, and, I think, where lumber is cheap it might be constructed for $250. The lumber, the main expense, is uninjured, so that when the building is taken down, it is worth as much as when used in the erection of it. Our building externally, had something of the aspect of a huge blacksmith's shop, but was nevertheless popular and as well attended by what are called fashionable people, as other churches. It is my opinion that a building of this kind, without any pretension whatever, only made convenient and comfortable, is more attractive than a half unfinished shell of a church. Such a building might be used several years without decay, and until the congregation was strong enough to erect a permanent and graceful edifice."

FOLLY OF WORLDLINESS.

The following is an extract from a report of one of our missionaries. We trust that its admonitions may be heeded by all of our readers, but especially by those who may be pursuing this world as their chief good.

The most important event which occurred during the year, on this field, was the death of two young men, who were the sons and only children of a widow. Death came on them unexpectedly: the elder one was thirty years old, the other some two or three years younger. By self-sacrificing attention to business, they increased their patrimony to thirty-five or forty thousand dollars. They gave themselves wholly to the pursuit of worldly wealth, and adopted nearly every maxim and habit which at once gratify and increase the craving of avarice. They prospered in their undertakings, for industry and frugality ordinarily secure wealth. When urged, a few days before the first one took sick, to attend church and support the gospel, they passingly promised soon to do so. From the commencement of his sickness, his mind was so distracted that no evidence that he had made any preparation for death could be extorted from him. He died! Less than four weeks after his decease, his brother, who had been confined to bed a few weeks, became dangerously ill, and died. Before he died, he professed to see the folly and criminality of the course he had pursued, and expressed a desire to be restored to health, that he might give attention to the interests of his soul, which he had neglected. He bequeathed most of the estate to cousins. At the grave, the missionary said, "Friends, when approaching this spot, the second time within four weeks, and to deposit in the dust the last earthly prop of that aged mother, I say what you all know to be true, that had industry, frugality, freedom from gross vices, just concern for the comfort of their mother, and many prayers of pious people availed, these young men would not have sunk under the stroke of the last enemy, and that mother would not this day, in writhing melancholy, look out on the world all desolate around her. She is bereaved of all her children! Still, righteous art thou, O Lord. I must also apprize you that the deceased professed to have discovered that he had committed a great error in looking to the world as a final good, and that he desired to recover, that he might seek eternal life. I beseech you, avoid his error, discharge the duties he neglected, profit by his experiment. Consider his decision, when the concerns of the two worlds were before him, and he had no motive to disguise his convictions. Do you not feel at this instant the power of the question, "What is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Weigh well his testimony to the value of repentance toward God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ. Lay not up treasure on earth, where, if wealth remain, its possessor will leave! Abandon for ever the ruinous folly of worldly-mindedness. You—any one of you—may die suddenly. Look into that narrow house—in a short time that will be your only possession—and of that you will be the prisoner, rather than the proprietor! Be admonished to seek first, and above all things, the kingdom of God. If you love the world, you will treasure up memories which will come forth at your last hour, and wring your hearts! Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation. L.

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

Shasta, California, January 1, 1861.

Dear Brethren—Agreeable to the instructions accompanying my appointment as Missionary Agent, and, subsequently, as Superintendent of Missions on the Pacific coast, I herewith send you my first quarterly report.

My commission dates the 1st of October, 1860, and it was but a few days after that I entered upon the duties of my work. My first place of effort was Watsonville, from which a request had come for a minister. The distance was one hundred and fifty miles. I rode there on horseback, preached one Sabbath, and then rode back to Suisun, to endeavour to meet an exigency which had risen there. They wrote to me a very pressing letter to visit them and preach for them—their church had been sold, and they were in a scattered condition. This letter did not reach me till the appointment had been sent on to Watsonville, and knowing the bad effect of a disappointment under such circumstances, I concluded to go to Watsonville, and then return to Suisun, a distance of over a hundred miles. I pursued this plan, though the ride was terribly severe on horseback, at the time. The plan proved a wise one, for at Suisun a minister was beginning his efforts, and at Watsonville they were just ready to make a move also. I am satisfied I saved both places to our church. I went back from Suisun to Watsonville, and organized a church of fifteen members, and sent on the request to you for a minister.

From Watsonville I went to Visalia, in Tulare county—commonly known in this state as the Four Creek country. It is a rich region of country, two hundred miles south-east of Stockton, about midway between San Francisco and Los Angelos. It is the very region to which I induced the Rev. Mr. Kennedy to go, when he came to California, and had he remained, he could have had the whole country under our influence. Visalia is now one of the most important towns in our state. It is one hundred and eighty miles from W——, but I rode it in four and a half days, in a buggy. * * * * * * From Visalia I went to Bear Valley—the name of the town at the headquarters of Fremont's celebrated quartz operations. The distance from Visalia to Bear Valley is one hundred and twenty miles towards Stockton. This town of Bear Valley is at present small, but important and interesting. But few, if any, members live there. Indeed, I did not find a church member of any denomination, but found an infidel club, under the designation of the Society of Inquiry. I preached on Sabbath, and lectured on Wednesday night, on the inspiration of the Bible. I had a crowded congregation. A citizen, writing to a friend in another town, had this language in his letter: "Mr. W—— preached here last Sunday, to the largest audience ever in this place, and lectured on the Bible on Wednesday night, and caused the Caffreyites to open their eyes in a manner they did not expect." The Caffreyites were the infidel club. They told me if a minister of the "right kind" would come to Bear Valley, they would do liberal things for him. From Bear Valley I went to Mariposa, fourteen miles distant, and preached at night. It is the county-seat of Mariposa county, but declining—the mines in the vicinity are much exhausted. From Mariposa I went to Hornitos, fourteen miles from Mariposa, on the road to Stockton. This is a lively place; it is undoubtedly a permanent town, for it is on the edge of the quartz mines on one side, and a farming region on the other, having a double advantage of permanence. We ought to have a minister there. It forms near a triangle with Mariposa and Bear Valley—the latter place only eight miles. On the other side is Snellings, about fourteen miles, the county-seat of Merced county, and in the midst of an agricultural region. A minister of the "right kind" would have a noble field for doing good at Hornitos, as a central point. From Hornitos I went to Coulterville, which is a growing and permanent place. Mr. McCulloch once taught school here, and also preached, but did not build up a church. I found but one member here; she had once been a member of my church at Stockton. But our old church is popular there, and, indeed, nearly every where I go, I am surprised agreeably to find what a desire there is for Presbyterian preaching.

From Coulterville, I went to Chinese Camp, to visit the Rev. Robert McCulloch. He lives near Chinese Camp, but is not preaching at present at that place. He said the congregations would not justify it, they were so small. I have no doubt he is doing good. He is spoken of, everywhere I hear about him, in kind terms.

From Chinese Camp, I went to a country neighbourhood on the Mòquelumne (McAlamy) river. It is between Stockton and Sacramento. Here are quite a number of Presbyterians and Congregationalists, who could be organized into a church if we had a minister there. From this point, I started home by way of Suisun. I happened to get there just in time to prevent the minister whom I met here two months before from moving there. He was just on the point of moving, but I assured the people that we would send them a minister—that we had an organization there, and rather than lose it, I would prefer to come myself once a month. The result was, that they told the minister that he need not come, and so the matter ended. It was only two weeks after, that Mr. McCulloch visited them, with what result I have not heard. They need a good preacher there. It is becoming, and is now, an important place. There are some fourteen or fifteen members there, besides those at Vacaville, who hold their membership there.

From Suisun I went home, having been absent eight weeks, and travelled during that time, with my own conveyance, ten hundred and fifty miles—three hundred and fifty on horseback, and the remainder in a buggy.

I remained at home three days, and then went to San Rafael, in Marion county, and held a meeting over the Sabbath; and from San Rafael went to San Francisco, where I sat in session with the Advisory Committee, and also sat in session with the regents of the "College of the city of San Francisco." You have probably learnt that at that meeting we inaugurated the college, appointing Dr. Burrowes, President; Dr. Scott, Professor of Moral and Mental Science and the Evidences of Christianity; Judge Coon, Lecturer on Chemistry, &c., &c.

From San Francisco, I again returned home, remained there two days, and on Christmas morning took the stage for this place, as directed by the Advisory Committee. This place is five hundred miles from my home, by public conveyance. Here, the end of the first quarter finds me.

GRACIOUS WORK.

B— Creek, Virginia, March 15, 1861.

Dear Brethren—On my arrival here, December 14th, I found that the members of the church had been praying for my return among them. The Spirit had evidently gone before me, and made the field "white unto the harvest." Though the weather has been unfavourable, and the roads very bad, our congregations have been very good. Many of our people, of both sexes, walk three miles to church.

During the second week in January we held a series of meetings, and the Lord was with us. As the whole labour of preaching devolved upon myself, I was not able to visit or converse with our people much, during the time of our meetings. Near the close of the week I requested any who desired me to visit them at their homes, to give me their names. A number of persons did so, and, in company with one of our elders, I spent a few days in visiting. In these visits, we were enabled to ascertain, to some extent, the nature of the work which the Lord has done for us. We endeavoured, if possible, to have a family altar erected in every house. Thus the work has quietly progressed. Almost every week I receive new invitations to visit sinners who are under conviction.

At our communion, which was held on the last Sabbath of February, we admitted two members by certificate, and fifteen on profession of their faith. Since then several others have professed a hope in Christ, and hope soon to profess him before men. Our little church has more than doubled its membership within the last year. There seems to be a general interest on the subject of religion.

Yours truly, C. P. T.

IMPORTANCE OF MISSIONARY WORK.

FROM NEW JERSEY.

Dear Brethren—The cause of Presbyterian Christianity in this region is in its mere infancy as yet. The only previous religious influences were Methodist and Mormon. They had no general hold upon the heart of the population. That population is decidedly irreligious. We have to contend with the opposition of the above-named sects, and with the irreligion of the people. The ground "along shore" was once occupied by Presbyterians, in the days of John Brainerd, and afterwards, but was permitted to run to waste. Presbyterian ashes sleep beneath its surface—to us it is sacred ground.

God's spirit has lately magnified his grace here in Tom's River. We received fourteen converts into our little church yesterday, and the day was the most blessed day we have seen in Tom's River. Others are under conviction. This whole region is vastly missionary ground, as much so, in many respects, as is the heart of India or Japan. It is at the very doors of our beloved Presbyterian Zion. I know of no more interesting field. Three more missionaries ought to be on the ground. They should be most able, zealous, and efficient men, well sustained, lest they should be tempted to leave the ground.

Permanency, combined with uniformity of effort, is demanded. The wretched system of sending some feeble missionary into a new field, with barely enough support to keep soul and body together; then, when he has just become acquainted with the field, and set machinery in motion, to be called away, tempted by a better living, is disastrous; like the breaking of an axle while the train sweeps along.

While a pastor of able churches, when the cause of Domestic Missions came before me, little did I understand the necessities of this heaven-approved work. Now I understand it better. Now my heart is in it. Now my remaining ministry is pledged to its support and advocacy. Our missionaries should be among the ablest men in the church, well supported and permanent in their fields. I am persuaded that many of our pastors should be thrown upon such fields for a season, that they may acquire useful experience. Truly "the harvest is great, and the labourers are few." O God, raise up and send forth an army of them!

"I, trumpet-tongued, proclaim
The one availing Name!"

With prayerful desires for the success of Domestic Missions, and distinguished regard for your Board, I am, gentlemen and brethren, Humbly and truly yours, C. M.

P. S. We have just cleared off a debt of $2500 from the church.

REMARKABLE CASES OF AWAKENING.

A——, DeK—— county, Indiana.
March 16, 1861.

Dear Brethren—As another quarter of missionary service has closed, I will report, for the time, that the regular worship of God has been kept up in all my stations. Here and there individual cases of good have come to my knowledge, whilst error and irreligion are rampant. I preached in a neighbouring town, and an old man of sixty, of high position and influence in society, who had been a confirmed Universalist for twenty years, came up to me, of his own accord, and said, "That sermon was true, every word of it, and I will serve God." I called on him the next morning, and found him engaged in reading the Bible in the connection of the text. He manifested deep interest, and I have the strongest hopes that the Spirit of God has become his teacher.

This week, in our own town, a gentleman who is a subscriber to my support, but, as a Universalist, has never come to church to hear the gospel, heard a sermon of mine at a funeral. He acknowledged that he had different views of Presbyterian doctrine; expressed himself gratified with the exposition; and promised, of his own accord, to come to church. These single-handed mercies occur now and then, to keep me from utter discouragement in the midst of abounding error and apostasy.

E. W.

ELK POINT, DAKOTA TERRITORY.

March 9th, 1861.

Dear Brethren—The first quarter of my new commission expired on the first day of this month. Through the favour of God, I am enabled to report some progress. On the third Sabbath of January, we were permitted to dedicate our house of worship at Vermillion.

This town is fifteen miles east of Vermillion, and it is on the Missouri river. It is, however, about two miles to a steamboat landing. Having been here a few days, I have succeeded in getting eight citizens of this town to spend this day in hauling logs for the erection of a Presbyterian house of worship. We shall build our house about forty rods from the hotel and post-office. I have persuaded the proprietors of this village to donate to our denomination three eligibly located lots.

The Episcopalians are this week commencing to build a hewed-log house at Yancton, which is forty miles above this. They will probably get their building finished about the time this is completed. No other denominations have, as yet, made any demonstrations towards building.

I have written to the Rev. H. I. Coe, of St. Louis, and he states that $50 shall be forthcoming, to aid us in completing our hewed-log house at this point.

To-morrow is my regular Sabbath for preaching here. I have secured the privilege of preaching in the dining-room of the hotel until our church is completed. The proprietor says that I shall incur no expense while engaged in presenting the gospel to the people here. We look for a large immigration into the territory this spring. I hope that our blessed Lord will then enable me to speak of much larger results accruing from my labours in this field. Next Sabbath week I am to preach at Vermillion.

C. D. M.

REPORT FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

W——E ——, February 27th, 1861.

Dear Brethren—My report for the present quarter will, of necessity, be very brief—doubtless its most commendable feature—not because I have nothing to communicate, but simply for the reason that I have delayed writing until almost the close of the quarter, and time will not permit me to enter into details.

At our last communion, held on the second Sabbath of this month, nine persons were admitted to the church on profession of their faith in Christ, and two by certificate. On the Saturday preceding, six children were baptized. This almost unexpected accession to our little church caused our hearts to rejoice, with gratitude to God, and filled our mouths with praises, for the gracious outpouring of his Holy Spirit among us. Of the number received, three were very young, each being about fifteen years old, but they felt that they were not too young to die, and that it was a "good thing for a young man to bear the yoke in his youth."

Notwithstanding the roads, on account of the "open winter", have been very bad, our congregation has suffered no diminution, but, on the contrary, there has been a gradual increase. As soon as the weather permits, we intend to recommence our Sabbath-school. Hoping you will still continue to remember us in your prayers, I remain, Yours fraternally, B. M. K.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Domestic Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

A FULL COURSE OF STUDY.

A full supply of water to a reservoir, a full supply of fuel to a furnace, a full supply of food to the body, are requisites universally acknowledged. We hope the day is close at hand when a full course of study for all the professions, but especially for the holy ministry, will be as extensively demanded as a sine qua non. At present this goal is regarded by many as a thing desirable, but utterly impracticable; as a beau-ideal bordering too closely upon perfection to be even thought of, or aimed at. The claims of a world perishing for lack of the knowledge of Christ, the numerical inadequacy of the aggregate of all the missionary bands of the several evangelical denominations, in presence of the teeming millions over which the gloom of heathen, or Mohammedan, or Papal darkness rests, the length of time required for the prosecution of a full course of study, the age of some who are called to the work, the straitness of their resources, and the confessed insufficiency of the provision made by the church to enable those dependent upon her aid to prosecute an uninterrupted course of study, are considerations which have great weight with many good men in determining their views in favour of an abridged curriculum. They conclude that amid such embarrassments the church ought to content herself with moderate literary and theological attainments on the part of her candidates. We rejoice to know that the views of many upon this subject have undergone a very favourable change, and that throughout the entire round of the denominations, the old Presbyterian standard of a learned ministry, is beginning to be unfurled, and that our Presbyteries are devoting special attention to the examination of candidates, requiring, in order to licensure, a very high standard of qualification.

This is right. We owe it to the candidate, we owe it to the church, we owe it to the souls of perishing men, we owe it to the Master, that we commission no man to preach who is not thoroughly qualified for the work. What greater unkindness could be done to a young man than to place him in a position for which he is unqualified? To do so, is simply to adopt the most obvious means for exposing him to the contempt, or throwing him upon the commiseration of all intelligent men with whom he may be brought in contact. To place an ambassador of the King of kings in such a position, is to bring both the man and his message into disgrace. "Let no man despise thy youth," is the counsel of Paul to his son Timothy. The aged apostle was anxious not simply for the reputation of Timothy as a young preacher of promise, but for the cause which Timothy represented. He knew that men will judge of a cause by the man, and that their opinion of the former will be as their opinion of the latter. Therefore he admonishes him with reference to his ministrations, that he should so meditate and devote himself to his work, that his profiting should appear unto all.

This is the feeling wherewith those who are in the ministry should look upon those who are seeking admission to the harvest-field. They should be filled with a spirit of jealousy for the reputation of the cause which they are to commit to the keeping of the candidate, as well as for the success of the young man himself, and the spiritual interests of those to whom he is to break the bread of life. It will be best for all the interests concerned, for the candidate himself, for the cause, and for the church, to demand a full and thorough preparation before the license is issued, or the commission filled. No pressure of pecuniary embarrassment, no cry for help from a ruined world, should be taken as an indication of a warrant to send forth, on the embassy of reconciliation, an unqualified ambassador. From such a course, there may be local and temporary advantages, but in the end, the fruit will be universal and permanent evil.

In view of the interests at stake, it is with peculiar pleasure we hear, from all quarters, of an increased attention to the all-important subject of the ministerial curriculum. And we trust that this spirit may gather strength and pervade the entire church, awakening an increased interest in the ministry, and in the beloved youth who are preparing for it, and that it may engender a liberality that will enable the Board of Education to discharge, with advantage to the cause, the high trust committed to her care.

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

Dear brethren, in the present state of national excitement, permit a word of exhortation. The occasion carries with it ample apology for the counsels we are about to offer. No man can live and breathe amid the universal commotion with which all ranks and conditions of men are stirred, without catching the contagion and enthusiasm of the hour. Against this, dearly beloved young men, you will do well to be upon your guard.

1. Remember you are separated, by your vocation, unto the gospel of God. To the work of preparation for the preaching of this glorious gospel you have, in a most solemn manner, given yourselves up. O then, keep this in remembrace. Remember the closet wrestlings, the agony of that struggle through which your souls passed from the trammels of earth's attractions, to the determination to spend your lives, your all, in the service of your Redeemer. Forget not the solemnities of that Presbyterial scene, when, in the presence of hoary fathers, you avowed this high purpose. Turn not again, either in spirit or by act, to the beggarly elements from whose entanglements you have escaped. Let not your minds be distracted by these passing commotions. Give yourselves wholly to the work of preparation on which you have so solemnly entered. The hours of youth are too precious to be wasted in the abandon and wantonness of political debate. Your present duty is to prepare to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. Regard everything, except some manifest interposition of Providence, which would thwart or hinder you in the prosecution of this work, as an enemy to your best interests.

2. Acquire the habit of viewing all things, whether of family, social, or national concern, in their relations to, and bearing upon the interests of Christ's kingdom. Family changes, social ties, national movements, are all to be judged of by this standard. How will the contemplated project affect the kingdom of my Lord and Master? is the question with which the child of God, and especially those set apart to the office of an ambassador of Christ, ought to challenge every plan, or counsel, from whatever source it may emanate. Patriotism is good, but it must not be allowed to usurp the throne. He who challenges for himself the throne of our hearts, even where a father, or a mother, or a wife, or a son, or a daughter, is the competitor, will not tolerate the usurpation. Christ and his church first, our country afterwards, must be the motto of those who are with the Lamb in his warfare with his enemies.

3. In view of any event, however disastrous it may appear, take refuge in the assurance that "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." Our Redeemer is on the throne in Heaven, whoever may hold the reins on earth. What are "the powers that be," in presence of a power that is Omnipotent? It is only as the slain Lamb opens the seals, that the record contained in the book of God's purposes is unrolled and administered. It is as the Lamb orders it, that the red horse of war can go forth on his mission of blood. O what an unfailing fountain of consolation—what a refuge in the hour of perplexity and national distress, is provided in this one precious truth! Dear brethren, drink at this fountain, fly to this refuge, and you will find that your souls will be satisfied, and your fears allayed, and a confidence and a hope imparted, that will sustain you under every trial, and strengthen you for every conflict.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

INFANT BAPTISM.

In our last number, we took occasion to meet a popular fallacy, which, of all the arguments or objections urged by our brethren of the Baptist persuasion, seems to have the most influence over their own minds, and the minds of others who have not studied the subject. We have called it a fallacy, without intending to charge our good brethren with what is sometimes implied in the perpetration of fallacies. We are charitable enough to believe that they are both earnest and sincere in the persuasion, that inability to believe is the same as the lack of the principle of faith, and that they are honest in their belief that their argument is conclusive against the baptism of infants. That it is not conclusive, we think, has been made sufficiently clear in the remarks under this head in the Record for April. In our present number we propose laying before our readers the scriptural warrant for the baptism of infants.

1. The Scriptures of the Old Testament teach that the church of God under the Old Testament was composed of "those who professed the true religion, together with their children." To deny this, is simply to reject the testimony of the word of God on this subject. The church is established in the family of Adam, and even Cain is recognized by his parents as a member of it, and acts as a professor of the true religion by appearing, together with Abel, in public worship, and continues in visible fellowship until he manifests his true character by the murder of his brother, and is formally excommunicated by God, and visibly marked and separated from the church. In this judgment and banishment of Cain, upon which some men would found a plea for the abolition of capital punishment, God acts simply as the administrator of ecclesiastical discipline, and draws a line between the righteous and the wicked, upon the only principle of separation ever recognized in his word, viz., the manifestation of character. He who tolerated Judas among professors, also tolerated Cain, until he demonstrated by his actions that he was of the wicked one. And thus, at the very thresholds of the two dispensations, has the principle been laid down, that those born within the church are to be treated as members of it, and that they are not to be cut off from its fellowship upon the basis of an Omniscient inspection, of their inward state, but upon an outward exhibition of ungodliness, such as men are competent to weigh in the balance of the sanctuary.

Years pass away after the excommunication of Cain, and the righteous seed, whose blood he had shed, is replaced by the gift of another son. To signify the relations which this child sustains, he is called Seth. Is it not singular, that in a narrative of unparalleled generality, the Holy Spirit should inform us why this child was called by this name? The reason embodies one of the fundamentals of Presbyterianism—the church membership of the seed of believers. "She bare a son, and called his name Seth: (in the margin, Appointed or Put); for God, said she, hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew." Here it is manifest that Eve refers to the first promise, receives Seth as the promised seed, and regards him as such in infancy. Nor was her hope disappointed. As from the excommunicated Cain there sprung a race of men distinguished for their wickedness, as well as for their knowledge of the arts and sciences; so from Seth there arose a godly race, who walked in fellowship with God, and who were called the sons of God. One of these attains to such eminence in piety, that he is translated from earth to heaven, without tasting the bitterness of death. Thus signally did God honour the household religion of the church before the flood. If men taunt the system which recognizes the membership of infants, by pointing to the case of Cain, we can point to the goodly fruit which it bore, and the noble illustration it received in the holy walk, and triumphant exit of Enoch.

The history of the church prior to the days of the flood, therefore, is a history of household religion. It is a history of father and son, which, whilst it bears a very striking resemblance to the old Presbyterian system under which we have been trained, cannot, by any possibility, be harmonized with the Baptist theory, which places the children of believers outside the pale of the visible church.

This view of the history of the covenant as administered in the dawn of redemption, receives a most unquestionable confirmation at the flood. When the church comes forth from the comparative obscurity of the antediluvian period, it is as a family she appears. The ark encloses not only Noah, but his entire household also. And when the waters of the deluge abate, and the "prisoners of hope" go forth to take possession of the new-born world, God enters again into covenant, not only with Noah, but with Noah and his sons. The language of the Holy Spirit in reference to the covenanting is, "And God spake unto Noah, and to his sons with him, saying, And I, behold, I establish my covenant with you, and with your seed after you." Noah's seed, together with their father, are recognized as members of the church both before and after the flood; and when the covenant is renewed with this little band, the truth comes out broadly and clearly, that the constitution of the church, in no time coming, was to undergo a radical change. As it had been a family institution before the flood; as it had been carried in the bosom of the family through the war of elements incident to the destruction of its enemies; so it was to remain for ever a household organism, embracing the parents and their seed after them.

In conformity with the terms of this covenant, God deals with Shem, and Japheth, and Canaan. The language is chosen so as to convey the idea that, in the blessing pronounced upon them, their seed is identified with them. "Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant. God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant." Neither the benediction nor the curse is pronounced simply upon the individuals specified, but the heritage of grace in the one case, and of wrath in the other, is intended to extend to their posterity. In this we have evidence that the relationship of parent and child is recognized in the administration of the covenant, as well as in the act of covenanting. Shem represents the posterity of Shem, Japheth represents the posterity of Japheth, and Canaan represents the posterity of Canaan.

Nor are we to charge the system with inconsistency, or God with unfaithfulness, because of the conduct of Ham, and the condemnation of Canaan. The principles asserted and illustrated in the transaction are positively asserted, and abundantly illustrated throughout the Divine administration. The principles are, 1. That members of a religious household are treated as members of the church until, by their conduct, they manifest the contrary, God dealing with them, not upon his own knowledge of their spiritual estate, but upon the ground of their outward behaviour. 2. That in the Divine administration the iniquity of the father is visited upon the children. The case in question illustrates both these principles. Noah and his sons are recognized as members of the church up to a given point in their history. At this point, one of his sons openly transgresses the law of God, and is in consequence visited with the Divine displeasure in a most emphatic condemnation, and excision from the church. The household of Ham, like the household of Achan, share in his sentence and punishment. And, as in the case of Cain, the descendants of the excommunicated became eminent for their might and wickedness, and for their opposition to the church of God. And thus the antediluvian period closes, and the Noachic opens upon an economy which recognizes throughout, the doctrine of infant membership and household religion.

PRAYING FOR EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

EXTRACT FROM DR. SCOTT'S ADDRESS ON PRAYING FOR EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS, IN CALVARY CHURCH, SAN FRANCISCO, LAST THURSDAY OF FEBRUARY.

Dr. Scott began his remarks by reading the resolution of the Assembly setting apart this day for special prayer, and the report adopted on the subject by the Assembly of 1859. He said there were about sixty academies and twenty-two colleges under the care of the Presbyterian church, besides others that were virtually in the interests of the church, though not nominally under any ecclesiastical control. That from the beginning, the Presbyterian church had been the friend of education, and an earnest advocate for a learned as well as a pious ministry. The Westminster Assembly, to whom we are mainly indebted for our standards, was itself a body of educated men—university men—professors and teachers, theologians and preachers of the word, and in all respects, the ripest scholars of their age; and, in many respects, the world had not yet produced their superiors. Archbishop Usher, who was himself a distinguished and most learned and worthy man, had said of one of them, that he was not worthy to walk behind him in his tracks and carry his books. Dr. Scott insisted that the ministry of the true church of God has always been a learned one, and that it is plainly the will of God that it should be learned as well as pious. In proof of this position, he referred to the history of the church, showing that when it was composed of Adam's household, that then its minister was an educated man—educated by the Almighty Father himself, who had made man in his own image, and after his own likeness—that he did not believe that primeval man was a savage, but an educated gentleman. And before the flood, Enoch and Methuselah and Noah were the educated men of their generations, and they were also their religious teachers. Noah was a preacher of righteousness. And so among the patriarchs, each father of a tribe was its teacher, priest and commander—the head of the Church and the State. And then in the organization of the Mosaic form of the church, Moses was selected, who had been brought up in all the learning of the Egyptians, which was then the sum of the world's literature, and Aaron was both well instructed and eloquent. And then the Levites and priests were appointed to offer sacrifices and to teach the law to the people. They were especially set apart for such offices, and lived in forty-eight cities, which became university cities, because of the schools they established. And then, after the Conquest of Joshua, we read of the schools of the prophets, which were full of young men, that were furnished with food and clothing by the church at large while they pursued their studies. One of these prophetic schools was presided over by Samuel, and another by Elijah, who was succeeded by Elisha, and in a word, that it was perfectly plain, that God required a learned as well as pious class of men to be the living teachers of his people from age to age, and that in no age and in no country was such a class more needed than in California at this moment.

Dr. Scott said that no institution nor enterprise could succeed without God's blessing—that his favour was its life. He regretted that prayers for our civil rulers and for our educational institutions were not more common—that indeed, he thought our present unhappy state of public affairs would not have occurred, if Christians had done their duty in praying for our government; and he regretted, also, that prayers were not offered to the throne of Divine grace, in our public services, for editors, publishing houses, and all printing establishments. These were rulers in the land, whose influence, for good or evil, was unspeakably great; and as the only possible way of counteracting the evil of a corrupt and ungodly press, was by the use of an able and sanctified one, so he hoped that God's people would hereafter pray, habitually and expressly, for all editors and publishing establishments. We must fight fire with fire. We must meet the light that leads astray with true light that leads upward, whence it comes. Editors were as needy and as worthy of prayer as any of our rulers, but that, except himself, he knew of but one other minister who was in the habit of praying for them. He earnestly desired that all good men and women would pray for the blessing of God upon the cause of education, and upon all the fountains of literature.

"HE WISHED THAT HE HAD BEEN A MINISTER."

This is one of the remarkable expressions made by the late Counsel to the Corporation, in his midnight conversation with a friend, a few hours before his death. He was, however, in no respect conscious of his approaching change, but spoke as if he had many years before him. Yet "he wished that it had been his lot to be a minister of the gospel." As this was not a late and death-extorted admission, neither was it the fruit of disappointment in the common aims of life. Mr. S—— was unusually successful, both as a professional man and as a politician. He rose rapidly. Honourable and lucrative offices were at his beck. His character for lofty integrity was universally admitted. His friends were among the pillars of society. Yet, in the first stages of his career, in the bloom of success, with many glittering prizes before him, and with a moral certainty of soon grasping them, he turns away amid the whirling tumult of an excited political canvass, to sigh after the lot of a gospel minister.

Is there no lesson, no caution here to the young men of piety who turn their backs on the ministry, because other professions hold out the prospect of a speedier and more brilliant worldly success? Mr. S——'s case reveals the magnitude of the mistake they make. They may succeed to the top of their wishes, may accumulate honours, offices, means, influence, and political station; and then, after all, feel in their hearts the irresistible desire that the holy peace, humble toil, and spiritual aims of a parish minister had been their lot.—Exchange Paper.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
April 12th, 1861.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting will be held at the Mission House, New York, May 6th, 1861, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

A Sermon for the Board will be preached on the Sabbath evening, May 5th, preceding the meeting of the Board, by the Rev. William H. Green, D. D., and a brief abstract of the Annual Report of the Executive Committee will be read at the same time.

Recent Intelligence.

CHINA.

We have letters from Canton to the 30th January, and from Ningpo to the 31st of the same. A portion of the former is published in the present number of the Record, and gives the writer's views of the insurgents, and the nature of their religious faith. It was rumored in Canton that the military occupation of that city by the British troops would be given up in May. From Ningpo we learn that Mrs. Rankin, with her children, was to sail for this country about the first of March, on account of the failure of her health, Mr. Rankin for the present remaining at his post of labour. At the last meeting of Presbytery, three young men were received under its care, with the view of preparing for the ministry. Mention is also made of the baptism of a native convert at Yiu-Yao.

INDIA.

From India our latest dates are: Futtehgurh, January 19th; Mynpurie, February 19th; Saharanpur, February 18th; Lodiana, February 2d; and Rawal Pindi, January 30th. The intelligence from Futtehgurh is of an encouraging nature. Mr. Scott mentions that five persons had just been received to the communion of the church on a profession of faith, and that a number of other applicants for baptism had been deferred. Mr. Fullerton also mentions two interesting cases of conversion. All of these letters refer to the distressing famine prevailing in the country, and especially in the districts around Delhi. Multitudes, it is feared, will die of starvation.

AFRICA.

We have letters from Niffau of the 5th of January, and from Monrovia as late as the 25th of February. The Rev. Messrs. Amos had removed their families to their new station at Niffau, and all were in the enjoyment of good health. They had commenced a boarding-school with twenty-four pupils, which promised to do well. Mr. Miller had also removed his family to his new station at "Mount Coffee," in the Gola country, and had commenced his missionary labours there under promising auspices.

SOUTH AMERICA.

We have letters from Bogota to the 18th of February, and from Rio Janeiro to the 7th of February. The missionaries at both of these places, we are glad to know, were well at the date of our letters. Mr. McLaren had small but increasing audiences on the Sabbath. He refers to the civil war now going on in that country, and expresses the opinion that a decisive battle would soon be fought between Mosquera's army and the government forces. Mr. Simonton was still absent from Rio on his tour to the interior. Mr. and Mrs. Blackford were quietly pursuing the study of the language, and performing their ordinary missionary labours.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

We have letters from the Choctaw mission as late as the 22d of March; from the Creek to the 22d of February; Omaha, March 22d; and from the Chippewa, March 22d. The schools at Wheelock and Stockbridge are doing well, except that the latter suffers from the want of a superintendent. Mr. Edwards mentions that one convert had been received to the communion of the church at Wheelock the previous Sabbath. In the Seminole mission there are evidences of the continued presence of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of souls.

CHOCTAW MISSION.

ANNUAL REPORT OF GOODLAND STATION.

In my report of this station I can say but little that will be interesting. The past year has not been marked by the manifestation among us of any special interest upon the subject of religion; not that it has been lost sight of, so much as overshadowed by other things. It is not till recently that the difficulties growing out of an attempt at change in the government have been adjusted. Even now there is not that harmonious state of feeling that there was once, and that is desirable, but there is more general satisfaction.

Death and removals have greatly lessened the number of our church members. It is hard to persuade many of our people of the evils attending a roving life. The habit, besides being natural, is encouraged by the circumstances in which they are placed. The raising of stock, which is now the dependence of a large number, has this effect: old ranges wear out, and they must seek new ones. We believe, however, that the holding of their land in common, more than any other one thing, encourages this habit; and so long as this arrangement exists, we do not see how it is to be overcome. I speak of this because we do feel that what the Choctaw people need, more than almost anything else, in connection with the institutions of the gospel, is fixed, comfortable, and cheerful homes. All who understand the difference between a place to stay, and a home, can appreciate the force of this remark. Men's character, their taste, their moral and religious principles, are shaped by the surroundings and influences of home, and it is just these that are needed to cultivate and develope the social, moral, and religious element among us. This is a matter, too, which is to be considered in connection with the present and future of our churches. This is not, perhaps, the place to say much on this point; but I cannot refrain from expressing the opinion, which is more and more fixed in my own mind, that until a change is effected in the manner of holding their lands, and the evils of frequent removals, to some extent, overcome, we cannot expect these Indian churches to become self-supporting.

The Goodland church now numbers about two hundred members. It includes, as formerly, three preaching places—Goodland, Bok Chito, and Bok Yazoo. At all of these places we have comfortable houses for worship, and meetings on the Sabbath are regularly maintained, with the assistance of the elders. Since last January, six have been received on profession of their faith; eight children have been baptized; five persons have been suspended; and about fifteen have removed into the bounds of other churches, most of whom have taken regular letters of dismission. Among this number is Mr. William Field, a licentiate preacher, and an elder in this church. Mr. Field has been for years an active man among us, and his loss will be much felt.

Schools.

We have two day-schools, and one Saturday and Sabbath school. The one at Bok Chito is a day-school, taught by a native Choctaw. Owing to the fact that the people are not united in their teacher, the school is not so large and prosperous as it would otherwise be. Near Bok Yazoo is a Saturday and Sabbath-school, taught by a young Choctaw woman, a member of this church. It numbers about twenty-five, and is doing well. There are forty children in the school at this place. Miss Greenlee, our former teacher, has returned to her home, and her place has not yet been supplied; we are expecting it will be, ere long.

Intemperance.

I mentioned, in my last letter to you, that our neighbourhood is peculiarly exposed to the evils of intemperance, owing to our nearness to Red river. In November a temperance meeting was held at this place, which, we hope, has resulted in some good. One hundred and sixteen signed the temperance pledge. A large number were present, and the exercises throughout were interesting.

Our people are industrious, and disposed to work, but it is difficult for them to find employment. This adds very much to the present distress, caused by the failure of last summer's crops.

Very truly, yours,

O. P. Stark.

BENNINGTON STATION.

ANNUAL REPORT.

Dear Sir—I now sit down to write you a brief report of my labours during the past year, and the state of things in the bounds of my field of labour. We have enjoyed good health for most of the year. Mrs. Copeland has been, and still is, troubled with symptoms of pulmonary disease. Late in September, and during the month of October, the dysentery visited us, and Mrs. Copeland, three of the children, and Miss E. A. Earls, our teacher, suffered severely. We nearly despaired in regard to Miss Earls and our little Mary; but our good Lord had mercy on us, and all were spared. We are now all enjoying a good degree of health.

My labours have been confined to the Bennington and Six Town churches. There are two preaching places connected with Bennington church, viz., Bennington and Shinuk Tohbi (Sand White). At this place we have a neighbourhood-school, with upwards of thirty scholars; also a Sunday-school. At Shinuk Tohbi the people are about starting a Saturday and Sunday-school among themselves. At both these places, the attendance at public worship has been usually good. Nine on profession of faith, and seven by letter, have been received to the fellowship of this church during the year.

There are four preaching places in the bounds of the Six Town church, viz., Nonih Takali, (mountain hanging,) Little Blue, Boiling Spring, and White

Spring. But little has been done at any of these places in the way of schools. The destitution prevailing for the last two years has seemed to cripple the energies of our people, so that they have done but little in the way of improvement. Still, all our meetings have been well attended, and good order has universally prevailed. Six by letter and two by profession have been received to the communion of this church during the year.

Collections have been regularly taken, but donations have been less than usual. Now, the destitution is so general, and there being no market for cattle, it cannot be expected that our churches will do much in the way of contributions to the various Boards of our church.

In regard to education, our people never before manifested so much anxiety. Schools are desired in every neighbourhood, and, with faithful, judicious teachers, they would be well sustained. But the General Council established no new schools at the late session.

In regard to temperance, we have done nothing except in a private way. We have had no temperance meetings, and have not urged our people to sign the pledge. There have been so many defections in the past, that this has not seemed to me the most desirable way to advance the cause. Yet there has been very little intemperance that has come to my knowledge.

Industry does not keep pace with knowledge and intelligence among this people. There seems to be a growing desire to live and get rich without industry. But still, the better class of citizens are improving slowly in almost everything—houses, fields, teams, wagons, &c., &c.

But amid all these, there is more or less defection among our church members. This gives us sorrow and pain. Many are, we hope, growing in grace; while others exhibit little evidence of such progress.

In addition to my other labours, I have made a translation of the little work entitled "Come to Jesus," published by the American Tract Society, and it would have been revised for the press before this, had we not experienced so much sickness in our family. I hope, now to be able to revise it soon.

Yours truly,

C. C. Copeland.

INDIA.

NOTES OF A VISIT TO THE JWALA MUKHI FAIRS, BY THE REV. JOHN NEWTON.

Friday, October 5, 1860.—Left Sabáthú in the afternoon at four o'clock; and proceeding in a northwesterly direction, chiefly along the right bank of the Gambhar, I reached my camp at Sákuli, distant six kos, (eight miles,) a little after sunset. My little tent, seven feet square, was pitched in the middle of the road; there being no other level spot available. As this road is not much travelled, however, few suffered inconvenience from it. The slope below the road, broken by numerous ravines, is well cultivated. The crops are Indian corn and rice—the former blighted by the drought, but the latter generally good, having been watered by small mountain streams. The slope above the road is steep, and covered with a thick jungle to the top of the mountain. This jungle resounded with the cry of the peacock, and the howl of the hyena. No doubt it is the abode of leopards too, to say nothing of other wild animals, less dangerous.

Saturday, October 6.—Went to the village early in the morning, and spoke to the few people that could be found there, about their eternal interests. The hill villages being small, and the houses being much scattered, it is always difficult, except under favourable circumstances, to get large audiences. I read a portion of the Scriptures to the coolies that carry my tent, bedding, provisions, clothes, &c., (eight in number,) and then, after breakfast, resumed my journey. Sákuli is in the territory of the Kunihár Rajah; but I soon passed his boundaries, and entered the territory of the Bágul Rajah. The next stopping-place was Sái. This is elevated, perhaps as high as Sabáthú—four thousand feet; and there is a bungalow here, built by some European official many years ago, for the accommodation of such as himself, who might have occasion to travel this road. It is kept in tolerable repair by the Rajah. Rich fields of rice, and beautiful farm-houses are to be seen in different directions from this bungalow. Indeed, these are characteristics of this whole region, except where the hills are too precipitous to admit of cultivation. The journey to-day was eight kos, (near eleven miles.)

Sabbath, October 7.—Still at Sái. Discoursed to two companies of people, one in the morning, and the other in the afternoon, in the small bazar located here; but spent most of the day in private, in the bungalow. It was indeed a season of sacred rest.

Monday, October 8.—A man who did some work for me at Sabáthú, three years ago, and who lives two miles from this place, happening to see me yesterday, brought this morning a present of milk.

My plan is to start, always, immediately after breakfast; that is, about ten o'clock, and spend most of the day on the road; stopping to preach wherever there is an opportunity of getting an audience. The first stopping-place to-day was a small bazar, where I had an audience of perhaps thirty people. They listened with great attention. I noticed in the company an old man, who pressed forward with an air of eagerness. Near the close of my discourse I singled him out, and said, "Here is an old man, perhaps eighty years of age; he can have but a few days more to live, but those who would be saved by Christ must believe in him while yet alive; when death comes, it will be too late. If this old man, in reliance on Christ, will now cry to God for mercy, he will be saved; his sins will all be blotted out; God will certainly save him." His eyes glistened with tears, but he made no reply. May the spirit of grace lead him to the Saviour.

After advancing two kos, I came to another small bazar. Here I had a smaller audience. After I had described the work of Christ, and the absolute helplessness of sinners, and urged the acceptance of salvation through him as a free gift, commending the love and mercy of God, in devising such a scheme of redemption, and offering it to sinners, on the simple condition of faith without works, I was quite surprised to hear a man behind me say, "But is not faith itself a work? It is certainly something to be done by us." I said, "Yes, it is a thing to be done by us, and is of the nature of a work; but you must understand that a sinner's faith is not the ground or procuring cause of his salvation; it is only a necessary condition, being the means of receiving what God bestows as a free gift?" He assented, and made one or two other remarks, which indicated a thoughtful and discriminating mind. In the evening, as I sat at the door of my tent, this same man presented himself again, and asked a number of questions respecting Christianity. This was near six miles from the place where I had first seen him. His manner was very respectful, and I could see no object but a wish to learn. One of his questions was about the origin of our sacred books—where did they come from? By whom were they written? Another was, "On what ground is Jesus called immaculate in contradistinction from the incarnations of the Hindus?" Another question was to this effect: "Christians have come to this country within the last four hundred years; what has become of our fathers, who knew nothing of Christ—are they in heaven or hell?" He told me he was by caste a Khattrí, and that he had before heard one or two missionaries preach at Náligarh, which is the place of his residence. He was able to read, and so I gave him a book. He expressed a wish that I might some time visit Náligarh, and gave me his name. Such cases lead one to hope that the seed scattered may not be lost, though at first such may seem to be its fate.

In one of the shops I passed this afternoon, I noticed one of our broadsheets containing the "Five Elements of Religion" in Panjábí, Urdú, and Hindí, posted up on the wall facing the road; thus serving as an advertisement to all who chose to stop and read it.

Our camp to-night is at Bhajúni, in the territory of the Káhlúr Rajah; and to-day's journey, like that of Saturday, has been eight kos.

Tuesday, October 9.—A Cooley arrived this morning from Sabáthú, with proofs from the press at Lodiana, and letters. These required immediate attention; and as they occupied every moment of my time till the middle of the day, I was unable to preach at this place.

On the way to Biláspur, the next stopping-place, six kos from Bhajúni; I stopped and discoursed for an hour to a company of Bráhmans. The discourse consisted in an exposition of the "Five Elements." They all stood, and listened throughout with unabated interest.

Wednesday, October 10.—Biláspur occupies part of a beautiful plain on the left bank of the river Satluj. Though the residence of the Rajah of Káhlúr, it is not a very large town. The distance of this place from Ropar, where the Satluj flows out from among the mountains, is said to be thirty kos, by the nearest road. The river is deep and rapid; the water is cold, in consequence of coming from the snowy ranges bordering on Thibet. It is also discoloured by earthy particles brought down from near its source; and the people here say it is unwholesome. The appearance is that of water saturated with soap. Though the town does not appear large enough to contain more than two thousand people, I was told by an intelligent Bráhman that it contained twenty-three temples. I inquired if there was a mosque. The answer was, "No." "Why not?" "Because the Rajah will not allow it." My informant was a Hindú; but such a fact, in these days of toleration, is scarcely credible. It is not to be doubted, however, that the Rajahs of this place have been great patrons of idolatry, and that Bráhmans are in high favour.

I felt too unwell to preach after my arrival last evening, and this morning I was not much better; but still I went into the bazar and addressed a small audience, and distributed a few books.

To-day's march is to Kumhár-ki-Hati—seven kos. While waiting at the river for the ferry boat to come from the other side, and be hauled up to the landing-place, I went into a neighbouring grove, in order to escape the rays of the sun; which, even at this season of the year, are, at this elevation, very powerful. And here I saw a novel sight. Hundreds upon hundreds of bats, as large as pigeons, with reddish necks, were hanging everywhere from the branches of the trees—some of them apparently asleep, though others kept up a constant chattering.

I spent the heat of the day by a spring, surrounded by huge plantain trees, in a garden belonging to an Udási monk—a follower of Nának. The spring was stocked with little fish, so tame that they came in shoals to eat bits of biscuit out of my hand. The owner of the garden brought me a present of plantains, which, however, I was not well enough to eat.

He sat with me about two hours, and I entertained him by reading from the Pilgrim's Progress; stopping now and then to give the meaning of the allegory. It was astonishing to see how well he understood the moral of the story, even with the slightest explanation. This is a very popular book; especially with men of this class. Last winter I met with a native Christian, who had originally been a Sikh, and whose first inclinations towards Christianity had sprung from the perusal of the Pilgrim's Progress, in Panjábi, as he journeyed towards a distant shrine. Before he reached it, the book had wrought such a change in his mind, that he abandoned his design, and went to a missionary, by whom, after a few months, he was baptized.

On reaching my tent, I found a large number of people assembled, among them the chief municipal magistrate of Biláspur, who was here on a visit. So, after a little conversation with him, I addressed the people on the usual topics—man destroyed by sin, and saved by Christ.

Thursday, October 11.—I preached in the morning to a goodly number of people, but there was so much noise in the neighbourhood, that there was but little chance of doing any good.

In commencing my march to-day, I passed a crowd of people, in the midst of which sat a very respectable looking man, who, I afterwards learned, was the Wazír (chief minister) of the Káhlur Rajah. There seemed to be some dispute, which he was probably settling, in his official capacity; yet the parties were vociferating lustily, and dealing out the most shameful invectives against each other; using language which a decent European would not only abstain from uttering, but be ashamed even to hear in his mother tongue. Yet the Wazír listened to it as coolly as if it had been a matter of course. This serves, in part, to illustrate the character of Hindu civilization.

The march ended to-day at Mair-kí Hati, distant nine kos from Kumhár-ki-Hati. We have now entered the British territory. I recognized the boundary line in an instant, by the sudden change in the state of the road. The road leading through the territories of the native princes, is, in most places, shockingly bad—so bad that in many places a horse can with difficulty pick his way over it, and the rider feels that he is in danger of getting his neck broken; but from the point at which it comes under British management, it is in a state of thorough repair—being smooth and good, up-hill and down-hill, and on level tracts, alike. At the same time, the road is lined on both sides, where the nature of the ground does not forbid, with a variety of trees, carefully set out and protected.

Friday, October 12.—Felt too unwell this morning to attempt much more than a private talk with a few shop-keepers. For the same reason, I was able to do but little throughout the day.

The most common object of worship in these parts being a malevolent deity named Sid, (probably a form of the word Satan—the name, with some modifications, being found in many languages,) I often inveigh against it, as a heinous sin against the God of heaven. The people worship him simply through fear. The object of their offerings is to avert his displeasure; and they sometimes tell marvellous stories of the sudden removal of calamities from those who present offerings at his shrine. These stories must be invented, for the most part, by the priests, but they are readily believed, and are cited to justify this horrible worship. Last evening I was gravely told that Mr. Erskine, British Superintendent of the Hill States, a few years ago, had been cured of a disease something like Elephantiasis, by a votive offering to this same Sid!

In a shop where I spent the heat of the day, I saw another of our broadsheets nailed to the wall opposite the door, where all had an opportunity of reading it, and learning the substance of the gospel.

The march to-day was six kos. Encamped at Hamírpur. Here I found Mr. Saunders, the Deputy Commissioner of this District. He was on a tour of inspection, at the same time carrying justice, as he said, to every man's door. He kindly invited me to dine with him, and I had a pleasant evening in his tent. He showed me a walking stick, with a head made from one of the meteoric stones that fell near Dharmsála last July. It was beautifully polished, and seemed by candlelight to be of various colours; and the surface was covered with what were declared to be particles of nickel. He mentioned a curious fact in connection with these stones. The meteor came blazing towards the earth, when it was seen to explode, and come down in four fragments. Some natives happened to be near the place where they fell; and they report that on attempting to lift one of them, it proved to be so cold as to benumb their hands!

Saturday, October 13*th*.—Preached this morning in the bazar, but had few auditors. Marched 10 kos to Nadáun. This place is situated on the left bank of the Biás. The number of dwelling-houses is said to be six hundred and thirty-six, but they are so buried in the thick foliage of the place that few of them are visible to a traveller. There is a rajah living here, who was deprived of jurisdiction when the British government began to annex the Punjab, and had a jágir* assigned him worth 30,000 rupees a year. Within the last year, however, like many others of the nobles of the country, he has been endowed with magisterial power. This is a new stroke of British policy, intended to conciliate this class of subjects, and, at the same time, to get justice administered at a cheap rate, no pay being given to these officials besides the pensions or other allowances they were already receiving. They are glad to fill the office for the power it gives them, and the honour connected with that power.

Sabbath, October 14*th*.—Spent the heat of the day in the Rajah's plantain orchard, and discoursed to a few people who assembled there, one of whom seemed very intelligent. He told me he had recently renounced idolatry, being convinced of its folly, though he had been much reviled for doing so. He also said he had heard of Jesus, but did not know exactly who he was. Was he a prophet? or was he the brother of God? or who was he? On inquiry as to where he had heard of Jesus, I found he had been among the hearers of some missionary from Lodiana, at the Jwálá Mukhi fair. I endeavoured to give him a correct view of Christian truth, and urged him, instead of abandoning the world and becoming a religious mendicant, as he thought of doing, to seek deliverance from sin by receiving Christ as his Saviour. He must now be left in the hands of God's Holy Spirit.

In the afternoon I preached to a large audience in the bazar, but suffered some interruption from an officer of the Rajah's court, who happened to be passing on horseback. He admitted of all I had said about Jesus, but insisted that all religions were good—some for one class of people, and some for another.

Monday, October 15*th*.—Reached Jwálá Mukhi, distant five kos from Nadáun, this forenoon. Found Mr. and Mrs. Carleton here. They came several days ago. Qádir Bakhsh, Scripture-reader at Lodiana, accompanied by his wife, arrived about the middle of the day. Qádir Bakhsh is a Kashmiri, now an old man. He is one of our best bazar preachers, though officially called a Scripture-reader. His wife has come, she tells me, to see what good she can do. I wish we had a large corps of wise and zealous Christian women to labour among heathen females, of whom there is always a large number at these fairs.

This is the first day of the fair, and, thus far, there are few people present. Still, we had large and interesting audiences this afternoon, and I have no doubt that throughout the nine days of the fair, we shall have as much work as we can possibly do,

CHINA—NINGPO MISSION.

INTERESTING STATE OF THINGS AT THE SAN-POH STATION.

Dear Sir—About eight months since I wrote you, giving some account of a trip made, shortly before, to San-poh. Brother Rankin kindly allowed me to accompany him to that place last week, and it may not be out of place to send you my present impressions of that interesting field of missionary labour.

The same assistants are at the various stations that occupied them last spring, and they seem to be devoted Christians, and efficient helpers. They evince this, not more in what one sees in a transient visit, than in the fruits of their labour in gathering up a native church.

Many of those who were inquirers last spring, I recognized among those who remembered Christ at his table on last Sabbath. One, two, three, or four brought in at each communion service, at intervals of two months, indicate a good degree of diligence on the part of those who have the more immediate charge of the stations. But it indicates more: it evinces the Holy Spirit's presence and power, in honouring them in the conversion of their fellows. At each of the stations the work is steadily progressing. At Yiu-Yiao, the carpenter spoken of in some of the previous letters of other brethren, is still making progress. He gives fair evidence of having met with a change of heart, but his baptism has been delayed, partly to give longer time to test him, and partly with a view to holding a communion at that place in the course of a few weeks. Mr. Burden, of the English Church Mission, is about establishing himself for the time, in Yiu-Yiao, and it is fondly hoped that this may give a new impulse to the mission work in that quarter. On Thursday evening, 6th inst., Mr. Rankin baptized the child of Loh-Deng-wô, the catechist at Siao-gyiao-deo. A few outsiders were present, and manifested a good degree of interest in the exercises. On Friday, brother Rankin and I took a walk through the villages, to visit some of the native Christians in their homes. Brother Rankin preached three times during the day, and was listened to with interest. We were well received everywhere. Saturday and Sabbath we spent in and around Yih-ko and Fu-san. The sister of Mr. Yeh, one of the new elders who lives in that place, was baptized. His wife's sister and some others of the family were before the Session, but their baptism was delayed until the next communion, as more satisfactory to the Session, and, perhaps, to themselves. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered on Sabbath afternoon, to about fifteen natives. The day was rainy, which prevented some of the women and old persons from coming out.

The Spirit of the Master was evidently with us, and it was truly a glorious privilege to sit with those who were so lately heathen, and remember Christ at his table.

The prospect of active labour here in Ningpo and vicinity, is delightful. O that the Lord would continue to pour out his Spirit only more abundantly, in his own good time.

The mission generally are in pretty good health. Mrs. Rankin has greatly improved, but is still delicate. From present appearances, if she expect to survive another summer, she ought to leave here before the warm weather comes on again. We all feel sad at the prospect of being called to such a separation and loss, but if she is to be preserved to her family, and the earthly service of the Master, a change seems necessary.

Affectionately yours, D. D. Green.

CANTON MISSION.

INSURGENTS.

The following extract from a recent letter from Dr. Happer, places the insurgent movement in a more unfavourable view than usual.

I have stood alone amongst the members of our missions in China in exposing the dangerous errors of the insurgents of Nanking. The true nature of these views I suppose will now be admitted by all. In addition to the testimony of Mr. Holmes, we have now the testimony of the Rev. G. Johns, of the London Missionary Society, at Shanghai, who spent a month at Nanking, and published an account of his visit in the North China Herald. Mr. Johns states that the insurgent chief had sent a communication to Mr. Roberts, who is at Nanking, in which he reiterates the statement, that, in 1837, he ascended to heaven and saw the heavenly father, brother, mother, and sister, and that they have all come down, times without number. Mr. Johns says: "He tells Mr. Roberts he must believe in all this, without reserve, or perish as the Israelites did who rejected Moses." He then explains that he is the son of God in the same sense that Christ is; that the matter of being born of different mothers was of no moment, as they were of the same father. After the statement of the greatest errors, he tells Mr. Roberts "that faith in these things is very important to him, and that without it, he can be neither useful here, nor happy hereafter." He wants Mr. Roberts to become his pupil. In a public document, he declares that "it is a great error to say that Jesus is equal to the Father;" that the Arians were right who taught that Christ was inferior. The man who is now styled by them Kan Wang, who was so long with Dr. Legge and Mr. Chalmers of the London mission, has written a long communication to Dr. Legge and Mr. Chalmers. I have seen but I have not read it all. But Mr. Chalmers, who has translated it all, says that from it, it is clear they do not wish missionaries to come to the cities where they are, as the teaching of missionaries that Christ is the only Son of God, and on other points, would come in conflict with the teachings of the chief. He says, also, "that they have secret and excellent rules which are not made known to outsiders." If this is not a confession that they are a secret association, and that the profession of Christianity is a cloak, it is hard to explain what is the meaning. This insurrection never looked so portentous before as it does now, with statements of their views by those of the highest authority, and in view of their present power. If they attain the supremacy, it would only be in accordance with human nature, and with the history of past errors, if the chief should then authoritatively carry out what this writer says is no expedient for the time being, viz., exclude missionaries from their possessions, because their teachings would clash with the teachings of the chief. This they do on the most vital points; as, that the Old and New Testaments are the only revelation; that Christ is the only Son of God; that he has not the smallest ground to claim any participation in the Divine nature and rule; that his professed revelations are all a deception; that his claim to be one with the Heavenly Father and with Christ is a blasphemy; that his declaration that there is a heavenly mother and sister is a fabrication. What God, in his infinite wisdom, may permit to come of this blasphemy, no one can foresee; but, certainly, no Christian man, with this present amount of evidence as to the nature and purport of their teaching, can wisely have any sympathy with them.

Yours, very truly,

Andrew P. Happer.

CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM MR. LOOMIS.

I will give some account of our work, although we have nothing to relate very much unlike what we have described in previous letters. I very much wish I was a proficient in the Chinese language—that I could read and talk fluently, so that there might be no further need for hard study all the day, and day after day; and so that I might have all the time to preach and talk; but we do something every week in this missionary work, as we have reported from time to time.

Last Saturday I visited the Chinese vegetable gardens. In one house there was a man overhauling his revolver: he had it all apart, and went about putting it together again. Another, who had lately come from the southern coast, where he had been gathering shell-fish, brought out his revolver, and fired off the charges.

Our visit there did not amount to much, except to extend our acquaintance, and invite them to come to meeting, and there learn more about how to worship God, and how to obtain salvation. But in the next shanty, amongst barrels of pickled cabbage, and bags of damaged grain, which is purchased for fattening hogs and fowls, we sat and conversed for some time. Opium smoking was the theme for a few minutes, as one of the company was refreshing himself with a pipe; he was weak and tired, and opium seemed to comfort him, he said. Now another labourer had left his work and looked in, leaning against the door post: he seemed interested, and we began talking with him. We invited him to come to meeting on the next day, which would be Sabbath. "No: he was poor, and had to work every day: he could not come to meeting." We told him of the sin and danger in breaking God's commandments, and of the blessing upon those who keep them. Then he wanted to know more about that God, about the Sabbath; whereupon he came in and took a seat, and we had a long talk. The whole subject was new and strange to him, and he had hard work to understand; but a young man who was present, frequently volunteered explanations, and I was surprised at the amount of knowledge which that young man was in possession of; I intended to inquire of him where he had gathered his knowledge, but forgot to do so. I was greatly pleased to see this young man coming into meeting the next day, and to see him listening attentively to the Scripture, and to the interesting discourse, which were read.

In search of an audience to preach to.

When the Sabbath morning came, it was dark and rainy, and the streets were wet, so the arrangements for taking a Chinese assistant, and going in search of people to talk to, would have to be changed; but between the showers I went alone to one of the Company houses, where I found about thirty people who had lately returned from Victoria. The place was wet and cheerless, and the men were poor and scantily clad, and light in purse, and all sorry they ever went to Victoria, for, if they were poor before they went, they were still poorer now; but I had a very pleasant hour's conversation with them, using the books to help convey ideas; reading a sentence, and holding it up for one of them to read, and then talking about it. All were good natured, glad to see me, and sorry they had no cleaner place for a gentleman to sit down in. I described to them the situation of our chapel as well as I could, and was gratified to notice some of them coming in at two o'clock. On Monday I took the teacher, and went to the same place, and read and explained, and gave a variety of instruction to an attentive company, till we were wearied. Some of these people were at the chapel again on Thursday evening.

Changed character of the fishing village, and causes of it.

Yesterday I took the teacher to the fishing village, but it was nearly deserted; the nets and fishing tackle are folded up and laid away, and the fishermen have wandered away, seeking means of support; for the fine of $4 per month renders it impossible for them to live by fishing; so, all that hum of business which we used to encounter has ceased: there is no more of the sorting, drying, and packing of fish, and trying out the fish oil; no more spreading of nets to dry, with the making of ropes, and mending and making of fishing boats. A few of the fishermen have turned rag-pickers, and now spread their rags where once the fish were dried.

Though most of the houses were shut, yet we sat down with two or three, and conversed awhile about that country in which there will be no occasion to fish for a living, and no fear of foreigners inflicting a license. They listened tolerably patient, but couldn't help breaking in now and then, with a growl about the hardness of the fisherman's lot at best, and the cruelty of those who had made it harder.

We left these people, and next found a company of a dozen or more, and without many preliminary remarks, I gave a tract to the teacher, which he read and explained in an animated style; and after a few words of exhortation we left them to examine the books we gave them, and to sit down to their supper, which had been cooking while we were talking.

Sailing of a ship on Sabbath—its interference with religious worship.

This afternoon, which is Saturday, I have been out again, calling into a few stores on this street. I found many people, some at work, some making arrangements to embark for China. A ship leaves to-morrow, with two or three hundred men, and another is advertised to sail as soon as she gets a cargo. I am sorry to have the embarking or sailing days come on the Sabbath: it is apt to affect our congregation.

Character of the hearers.

Monday—Yesterday morning I called for two young men, members of the Baptist church in Sacramento, and now on their way back to China. We went to the Company house of which I have already spoken, and there we talked for a long time to fifteen or twenty people. It was the last opportunity we shall have to spread before them the plan of salvation, and urge them to accept it; for in a day or two they go to the mines, seeking means of support.

In the afternoon we had more than I expected, nearly forty. Mr. Shuck came in and took a part in the exercises.

Of those present yesterday, perhaps three-fourths were never in a church before; at least, not in this one. Several of the company are waiting an opportunity to return home. One is a sprightly young man, whom I often meet on the street, and who as often has promised to call upon us. Saturday again

I found him, and begged him to come into the meeting just once, to see what it was like; and so, sure enough, he was here, and gave strict attention. Whether he comes any more, remains to be seen.

Yesterday, at the door of the Company-house we met a poor cripple, just starting out to get on board his ship, to return to friends. When I first saw him, a year ago, he was about as wretched a being as I ever saw, but, as we then thought, nearly through his earthly sufferings—he was in pain from head to foot. Friends and strangers provided enough to keep him alive while he lay on his miserable pallet from week to week, and from month to month. During that time, he many times heard the word of life, as we read and talked to little companies of people near him; and sometimes we have talked to him alone, and slipped a bit of money into his hand. He came to this land to acquire a little property to make his family more comfortable, but since he came, both his parents and his wife have died, and he returns to his motherless children a cripple, and nearly blind. His passage is paid by contribution, and the Company remit the usual fees.

I remain, yours sincerely, A. W. Loomis.

MISCELLANY.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE SAMOAN MISSION.

The group of islands, the seat of this mission, was, till lately, known only by the name of the Navigator's Islands; but this designation is now being superseded by that of Samoa, the name applied to it by the natives. It lies in the South Pacific Ocean, between the latitudes of 13 30 and 14.30 south, and the longitudes of 168 and 173 west. It consists of eight islands and a few islets, which together contain nearly 1700 square miles. The names of the islands, in the order from east to west, are, Tau, Olosenga, Ofu, Tutuila, Upolu, Manono, Apolima, and Savaii. The principal of these are Savaii, the most western, about 130, Upolu about 120, and Tutuila, about 40 miles in circumference. The rest are smaller.

All the islands are of volcanic formation. They are beautifully diversified, and of moderate height—the highest mountains rising to an elevation of between 4000 and 5000 feet. The larger islands contain some splendid valleys, and large tracts of the finest land; and they are well watered, and enlivened by numerous streams and waterfalls. They possess greater capabilities, contain a greater variety of trees and plants, and are clothed with a richer and more varied vegetation than even the lovely island of Tahiti. From whatever side you approach, they rise from the sea with their mountains covered to the summits with luxuriaut forests of evergreens, and their slopes and shores clothed with bright perennial foliage.

The inhabitants are a fine people, belonging to the same race as the Tongese, Hervey islanders, and Tahitians. They are generally above the middle size, of a reddish-brown colour, with black hair, and fine dark eyes—in features not very unlike Europeans, and capable of high intellectual and moral cultivation.

But, in their heathen state, the Samoans were awfully degraded, both in mind and morals. For though they were not such gross idolaters, and had not so many inhuman practices as some other islanders, and were in some respects even a semi-civilized and polite people, yet their social condition was characterized by much that was childish and capricious, obscene and cruel. Polygamy and concubinage prevailed among them to a great extent. Selfishness, envy, and deceit, pride, jealousy, and a disposition to revenge the least slight or wrong, excited among them continual strifes and exterminating wars, in which cold-blooded and relentless cruelties were perpetrated. They were also emphatically a people that had lost the knowledge of God. Like many ancient pagans, they worshipped and dreaded innumerable imaginary gods and genii. Of the works of God they were entirely ignorant, and they had no proper ideas of sin, or any knowledge of future retribution.

Such was their social and religious state, till the light of the gospel broke in upon their dense darkness, in 1830. Previously, from a fear of their savage and ferocious habits, foreigners shunned intercourse with these islanders; and it was not till after the missionary barque anchored at their shores, and left Christian teachers among them, that they began to be more fully known. In the month of August of that year, the lamented John Williams, and Mr. Barff of Huahine, placed the first native teachers, from the Society Islands, eight in number, at Sapapalii, on the island of Savaii. On their way to Samoa, these missionary brethren touched at Tongataboo, and there met with a Samoan chief, who had been some time on that island, and had thus obtained a partial knowledge of Christianity. This chief accompanied the missionaries to Samoa, and there employed his knowledge and his influence in strongly recommending both their persons and their religion to the favour of his countrymen. Another event, indicating that God had prepared the way for the teachers, was the death, a few days before their arrival, of Tamafainga. This person was a sort of high-priest of heathenism. He possessed almost absolute influence over the superstitious feelings of the Samoans, and combined with this, all but supreme political power; and this influence and power would probably have been exerted to prevent the settlement of the teachers. Tamafainga's death at once facilitated their settlement, and, being taken under the protection of Malietoa, then the most powerful chief on the islands, they entered upon their labours under favourable circumstances.

Mr. Williams again visited Samoa in 1832. On reaching Tau, the most eastern island of the group, he was surprised to find that the gospel had already been introduced to its shores, having been brought there by some natives of Ravavai, one of the Austral Islands, nearly 2,000 miles distant. These natives had left Ravavai in a boat, for a neighbouring island, but were driven far out of their course, and after drifting about on the ocean for nearly three months, they reached Tau, where they commenced Christian worship. A few natives had joined them, and were waiting for the missionary ship, of which they had heard, and which they expected would bring missionaries to their island. On reaching Savaii, Mr. Williams received an enthusiastic welcome from the people, and was rejoiced to learn that both the teachers and their families were well, and their work prospering. Heathenism was partially abandoned in several villages on Savaii, Manono, Upolu, and Tutuila. Many of the people had actually eaten the fish and other animals which they formerly worshipped as gods, and dreaded to injure, or even to touch. The scenes presented when these daring converts, for the first time, fed upon their gods, were both amusing and impressive. Some daringly devoured them; others, with cautious hesitancy, put the dreaded morsel into their mouths, while the astonished and awe-struck beholders waited, like the Miletans, expecting to see them swell or fall down dead. But when all passed off without any calamity, they concluded that Jehovah was the true God; and the beholders, taking courage, followed the example of their neighbours. Popo, the war-god of Sapapalii, a piece of decayed matting, narrowly escaped being drowned. The people had tied a stone to this rude form, and were about to sink it in a watery grave; but the teachers, discovering their intentions, rescued the ill-fated god, to present him as a trophy of the triumphs of the gospel.

The mission was visited and reinforced with additional native teachers, by Messrs. Barff and Buzacott, in 1834; and Mr. Platt landed in Samoa in the following year, and remained with the teachers till the European missionaries arrived, in 1836.

Previously to the settlement of these labourers, certain runaway seamen had induced some of the people to profess what they called Christianity, and had gone so far as to baptize a few individuals. One or two of these men had, however, taught a few of the natives some of the doctrines of Christianity, and advised them, when the missionaries arrived, to attend to their instructions. A Samoan, also, who had visited the Society Islands, had set up a new religious sect, and had gained a considerable number of followers. This sect was called, from the name of its originator, "Le lotu Siovili," that is, the religion of Joe Gimblet. The observances of this sect consisted chiefly in listening to a series of senseless sounds uttered by their leader, and in feasting, and firing of muskets.

But while these evils had to be encountered, God so largely blessed the labours of the teachers, that a considerable number of the people on the several islands professed Christianity, and chapels were built in many villages, in which public worship was regularly observed. Yet it will be readily supposed that these professed converts knew but little of its spiritual nature, and were, in fact, with a few exceptions, heathen in almost everything but name.

Such was the state of things when the missionaries appointed to this mission, six in number, five of them being married, arrived in June, 1836. These brethren and sisters were accompanied by Mr. Barff of Huahine, and Mr. and Mrs. Buzacott of Raratonga, who came to assist them in commencing their work, and the latter of whom, with his excellent wife, remained some months, and rendered invaluable service.

The first thing done by the missionaries after their arrival, was to convene a meeting of the principal chiefs and people. On this most important and deeply interesting occasion, the newly arrived teachers asked the chiefs if they were willing to receive them, and if they and their people would promise to place themselves under their instruction; and further, whether, in the event of war, they would grant both to them and their wives, and their property, protection, though they took no other part than that of endeavouring to become peacemakers. To these questions the chiefs readily replied that, as far as it was in their power, all these things should be done. The missionaries then made arrangements for their future settlement, and a few days afterwards removed to their several stations on Savaii, Manono, Upolu, and Tutuila.

By constant intercourse with the people, and diligent attention to the acquisition of the language, some of the missionaries were soon able to teach in the schools, and to preach the gospel to the natives. And by frequent tours round the islands, and preaching and conversing with the people in the villages, and by visiting the sick and administering medicines for their relief, the attention of the people was soon very generally awakened to the claims of the gospel. Large numbers abandoned heathenism, and were desirous to learn what the missionaries taught. New chapels were built in distant places, and the people desired to have native teachers settled among them. The congregations greatly increased, and the word preached was attended with such a divine power, that many were made to feel their utter sinfulness and danger, and seek salvation through the grace of Christ. So that as early as the 26th of March, 1837,

Mr. Hardie had the pleasure of forming, at the Sapapalii, a Christian church, consisting of eleven native members. Very soon after, Mr. Heath formed a church on Manono, and in the following year infant churches were formed on Upolu and Tutuila.

DEATH OF MR. JOSEPH P. ENGLES.

It is with the profoundest sorrow that we are called to announce the sudden death of Mr. Joseph P. Engles, late Publishing Agent of the Board of Publication. He had, for a considerable time been in a very precarious state of health, complaining of a stricture across the chest, as also of symptoms of heart disease. He continued, however, to attend to his usual duties at his office up to Saturday night, the 13th of April. On Sabbath he attended divine service, and was quite as well as for months preceding. On Sabbath night, between eleven and twelve o'clock, he awakened Mrs. Engles, and sent for a physician. Before the physician arrived, however, he was in a dying condition, and breathed his last a few minutes before twelve o'clock. He was unable, during the last struggle, to speak, but appeared to be composed and resigned.

His departure has been sudden; we have not a doubt but it was safe. Mr. Engles was eminently a good man, and a devoted servant of the Lord Jesus. He was about sixty-eight years of age. His learning was varied, extensive, and accurate. In his death the Board of Publication, and through it, the entire church of Christ, has sustained a severe loss.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOARD.

At its last monthly meeting, April 16th, the Board of Publication unanimously adopted the following minute.

1. The Board having been apprized of the recent and very sudden death of Mr. Joseph P. Engles, desire reverently to acknowledge the hand of God in this dispensation, and to bow submissively to his will.

2. They record their grateful sense of the eminent piety and usefulness of this devoted servant of God; of his diligence, integrity, and fidelity, as the Publishing Agent of this Board; of the generous efficiency with which he employed the resources of his large experience and ripe scholarship in promoting its interests; and of the signal affability and kindness which marked all his intercourse with its members, and won their personal confidence and affection.

3. While deploring our own loss, we feel the still greater sorrow which has fallen upon his stricken wife and children. We tender them our respectful and cordial sympathy, and commend them to Him who has said, "a Father of the fatherless, and a Judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation."

4. In further token of their respect for the character and memory of their deceased brother, the Board will, in a body, attend the funeral.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing minute be transmitted to the family of Mr. Engles, and that it also be published.

AN OPPORTUNITY.

As our General Assembly will this year meet in the city of Philadelphia, on Thursday, the 16th of May, a large number of ministers and elders will be coming hither from all parts of the land. An excellent opportunity will thus be afforded to all persons who may desire to forward contributions for our Colportage or Distribution Funds, or to make payments for the Sabbath-School Visitor, or Home and Foreign Record. We hope the opportunity will be extensively used.

FROM A COLPORTEUR IN DELAWARE.

I find plenty of work here, and I love it, too, although I find I must exercise much self-denial oftentimes. I have been sometimes astonished to hear persons who cared nothing about my books, say they would read a tract. We do not know the good done by this instrumentality. On the other hand, my heart is often cheered at the pleasure which beams in the eyes of some destitute mother, as she receives a little volume, granted to her for her good, and that of her family. It is also a great satisfaction to know that our work is appreciated by the community generally, and particularly by Christians. But again, there are some who hate the very sight of religious books and colporteurs; and some so-called Presbyterians think they would be doing me a particular favour by purchasing a book! One told me the other day he "could do nothing for me." I replied, I do not wish you to do that, I wish you to do something for yourself. The Lord bless our feeble efforts to do good.

Sincerely yours, W. H. E.

FROM ONE WHO KNOWS.

No persons so well understand the unspeakable value of the colportage operations of this Board, as they who have stood face to face with the destitutions of the land, and who have themselves made earnest efforts to introduce religious reading, conversation, and prayer, into the homes of the irreligious and of the neglected. The following is from such an one.

S——, Pa., March 18, 1861.

Rev. William E. Schenck, D. D.

My Dear Brother—Having been once a student colporteur myself, and having been since engaged in promoting that cause, I have become deeply interested in it, and from personal observation and experience, know its great value and importance as an evangelizing agency, in the mineral and lumber regions of this state, as well as on the prairies of the West. My brief agency, while seeking a restoration of health, one summer, convinced me, as I otherwise could not have been, of the vast numbers in our country who cannot be reached by the ministry, and can only be reached at all by just such an humble, self-denying missionary agency as colportage. The cause of Christ, and the continued liberties of our country, as well as of our own church, demand that the Board of Publication be sustained, as well as the other Boards. It cannot be spared. Nay, we cannot afford to have it crippled, nor even contracted in its operations.

I do not know that either of the Boards ever heard officially, (per remittances,) that there is a Presbyterian church here, until quite recently. Though small, it has a name, which, I hope, will be better known to all our Boards hereafter. We have just got fairly inaugurated a plan of beneficence, similar to that which works so admirably and efficiently in N——, where now they easily and promptly pay a $1200 salary, in place of $600, some few years ago. This is, in part, one of the indirect fruits. The immediate or direct fruits are, $800 a year for benevolent purposes, in place of some $200 before. It is a day of small things here, but I doubt not this present improved system will work similar results, and give all the Boards a contribution regularly every year. Yours fraternally, M. B.

A SABBATH-SCHOOL LIBRARY IN DAKOTAH.

The Board of Publication, some months since, made a grant of a Sabbath-school Library for a Sabbath-school about to be organized at Vermillion, in the new and far-off territory of Dakotah. By an excellent and enterprising missionary of our Domestic Board, the Rev. C. D. Martin, we have received the following interesting letter of acknowledgment. Although the first, we trust it is not to be, by any means, the last Sabbath-school Library we shall send to the pioneers of our church in that distant region. We earnestly appeal to benevolent individuals and to Sabbath-schools to give us contributions for our Distribution Fund, from which all such grants are made.

Vermillion, Dakotah Territory.

Rev. W. E. Schenck, D. D.,

Dear Brother—We, as the trustees of the Presbyterian church of Vermillion, Dakotah Territory, take this occasion to express our deep gratitude to you, and through you to the Board of Publication, for the valuable donation of Presbyterian Sabbath-school books received by us from the hands of our missionary, the Rev. C. D. Martin. We expect to open our school with from twenty to thirty scholars.

We have sent for ten copies of the Sabbath-School Visitor, and intend to make a vigorous effort to increase the number. We think that by Christmas we shall be able to send the money for fifty copies.

We look for a flourishing church in the course of one or two years. The prospects are very bright at this time. The Presbyterian church edifice in this town is the only one that has been, as yet, erected in this territory.

Permit us to say, that the Library you have sent us greatly encourages our hearts, and we hope to be able, through God's blessing, to make such progress as will cheer your hearts. This Sabbath-school Library is the only one in the entire territory. In a few months we will report to you our progress.

Yours in the best bonds,

S. B. Mulholland,
Ole Battalson,
W. W. Benedict,
H. D. Betts,
Trustees.

LABOURS IN MARYLAND.

ENCOURAGEMENTS.

While engaged near S——, I came to a ten-pin alley and grog-shop. I went to the man who kept it, and spoke to him, and told him I had books, religious books. "Well," he said, "they were the right kind to bring to whiskey-sellers;" adding that ministers mostly avoided such places. He thought that "ninepin alleys and grog-shops were the very places ministers should visit." I showed him "Jacobus's Notes on Matthew," which he bought for his wife, as she was pleased with it, saying he hoped it would do her good. I gave her a tract; also one to him, which he promised to read.

I was walking, on the day preceding, across some fields near to a copper mine, two or three miles from the above-mentioned place, when I saw a small house at a short distance from my path, in which I found a sick woman. She was the mother of three children, (and the eldest was not over ten,) and had been sick a year, with no other person to nurse her during the hours of her husband's absence at work. She was not able to purchase anything, but very gladly received what I gave her, and seemed to be much affected when I spoke on the subject of her soul's salvation, and prayed with her. I asked her if any one visited her; she said, No, which astonished me, there being professors of religion not far off. I felt it a great privilege to do something for her spiritual welfare. O that more of God's people could see this work aright!

I am often astonished to see with what politeness I am received amongst strangers, and asked if I will call again, even amongst those who are not religious at all. I am confident that devoted and judicious colporteurs can exercise a powerful influence for good, otherwise than by the instrumentality of the printed page, which, of course, is the chief thing. As, for example, I am able oftentimes to explain the design and working of the colportage department of the Board to Presbyterians who have never taken the trouble to read about it for themselves, and who have been inclined to rank it with book-peddling schemes. Under all such circumstances, I endeavour politely, yet firmly, to remove their erroneous impressions by stating the truth. I am sometimes questioned on the subject of religion, with regard to difficulties there may be in their minds, by those who never had the privilege of a religious education, and are willing to hear the words of a man in whom they have confidence. Thus, in various ways, I find we can do much good, much to advance the interests of Christ's kingdom in the world.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. The Beauty of Immanuel. By the Rev. Le Roy Halsey, D. D., author of "Life Pictures from the Bible," "Literary Attractions," &c. 12mo. pp. 204. Price 50 cents. Postage 10 cents.

This is a most sweet and precious volume. It will carry comfort, and hope, and joy, we cannot doubt, to thousands of believers. Excellent as they all are, we regard this as in many respects the best of Dr. Halsey's volumes. It contains thirteen chapters, of which the subjects are as follows: I. The life and character of Jesus Christ. II. His birth and early history. III. His baptism and public ministry. IV. His mighty miracles. V. His matchless instructions. VI. His immaculate virtues. VII. The manifestations of his glory. VIII. His sufferings and death. IX. His resurrection and ascension. X. His mediatorial offices and work. XI. His second and glorious appearing. XII. The saving power of his gospel. XIII. Recapitulation and conclusion. This is a rich feast; and in a most inviting manner has Dr. Halsey presented it to his readers. For clear and striking views of our adorable Immanuel; for able exhibitions of his life and offices; for warm and loving appreciation of him, the equals of this book are very few in the whole range of religious literature. We bespeak for it an extensive circulation in all parts of the church.

II. Memoir of the Rev. Jacob J. Janeway, D. D. By Thomas L. Janeway, D. D. With a portrait. 12mo. pp. 304. Price 65 cents. Postage 13 cents.

Dr. Janeway was one of the best and most useful men of his generation. In the preparation of this volume, his son has drawn largely from the copious diaries kept by his eminent father, and is thus able to exhibit more of the growth and workings of grace in his soul. It is a delightful and profitable volume.

III. Infinite Love and Endless Punishment, or the infinity of God's love a warrant for the endless punishment of sin. By the Rev. Isaac V. Brown, D. D. 18mo. tract, pp. 40. Price 3 cents. Postage 1 cent.

A little volume on an immeasurably important subject, from the pen of a vigorous thinker, and one of the most venerable ministers of the Presbyterian church.

IV. The Lost Key. By the author of "The Little Watercress Sellers." Illustrated by a number of engravings. 18mo. pp. 252. Price 35 and 40 cents. Postage 8 cents.

An interesting and excellent volume for juvenile readers, enforcing many important lessons of piety.

V. Mackerel Will. By the author of "Gilbert Gresham," &c. 18mo. pp. 190. Price 25 and 30 cents. Postage 7 cents.

Another, and an exceedingly instructive book for young readers, presenting the life, temptations, struggles, and final history of a fisher boy in England.

VI. Henry Burney, or a Talk about Angels. By Mrs. C. A. Bradshaw. 18mo. pp. 129. Price 25 and 30 cents. Postage 5 cents.

Yet another addition to the Board's series for youth. It contains much rich and precious instruction carefully drawn from the word of God, and is so written as to make it eminently attractive to children.

VII. The Hidden Treasure. An Allegory. By the Rev. Loyal Young, D. D. 18mo. pp. 67. Price 15 cents. Postage 2 cents.

A very beautiful and scriptural little book, presenting much valuable truth in a form which might, with great profit to the young, be far oftener adopted than it is. This allegory is founded on Matt. xiii. 44. "The kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field."

VIII. The Child's Mission. By Mrs. Sarah S. T. Wallace. 18mo. pp. 44. Price 15 cents. Postage 2 cents.

A sweet little tale for children, and not without important instruction for grown people.

IX. Der Kinder-Katechismus der Biblischen Geschichte. In four parts; price 6 cents each. They may be bought separately.

This is a translation, by a competent German scholar, of the "Child's Scripture History," which was written for the Board, and many thousand copies of which have been scattered through the church. It brings the Bible History from the Creation down to the death of Saul and Jonathan. If sufficient encouragement is afforded, it will be continued to apostolical times.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.

No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

CLOSE OF THE FISCAL YEAR.

The fiscal year of the Board of Church Extension closed the first of April. The state of the country has unfavourably affected this, in common with other departments of benevolent effort. The receipts from all sources were $29,892 61. This is $5457 40 less than the receipts of the previous year. If, however, the special donations over which the Board had no control, be omitted, the receipts of the last twelve months were in advance of any former year. The appropriations of the Board at the close of the year were $2441 10 in advance of the means on hand. A large number of applications are on file. A very unusual proportion of these applications are ready for the action of the Board as soon as the necessary means can be obtained. We are happy to say that every appropriation has been paid, as soon as properly due, and that, without borrowing a dollar. While the Board feel authorized to anticipate their income within ordinarily safe limits, they do not feel at liberty to set churches the example of running in debt.

THE CHILDREN'S CHURCH.

Once more, and, we hope, for the last time, we must ask the children for help to finish "The Children's Church at St. Anne." As nearly as we can now tell, we shall need about $1500 more to complete the church. If any little boys or girls doubt whether they ought to give, we ask them to read the piece printed below, entitled, "Archie's half dollar," taken from the North Carolina Presbyterian. It will do the grown-up folks no harm to read it too.

ARCHIE'S HALF-DOLLAR.

"Well, Frank, what are you going to give towards building the Children's Church?" said Mr. Horton to his little son, one day, after reading aloud an account of what other children had been doing for it.

"Give my half-dollar," was the little fellow's prompt reply, as he run his hand into his apron pocket and brought out the shining new coin.

"That's right, my son; you are giving your all to a good purpose, and I am sure you will not be sorry for it. Now, Archie, what will you give?"

"I don't know, Pa, I must think about it awhile."

"Why, wont you give as much as Frank? I think you might, for Frank is only three years old, and you are seven, and can understand more about the importance of building that church than he can."

"Yes, but Pa, Frank don't know a half-dollar from a sixpence; that's the reason he gives it so quick. Don't you think a quarter would do for me?"

"I want you to give whatever you think you ought, Archie. 'The Lord loveth a cheerful giver,' and will look at the heart more than at the value of the gift. If you think a quarter is as much as you ought to give, why it is all right."

"Well, Ma, you tell me, please, what to do. I want to do whatever is right."

"No, my son, you must decide for yourself."

"I wouldn't mind giving the half-dollar," said Archie, with a sigh, "but if I do, I am sure I don't know when I ever will get a whole dollar. Now, let me see," he said, running to his mother's worktable, and taking a little box out of the drawer, "I'll just count and see how much I have got—one quarter, seven sixpences, and three ten-cent pieces. Why, Pa, that's just ninety cents. One more shilling, and I would have a dollar! A half-dollar would take more than half of what I've got. I cant give it. I cant begin to do it, so the thing's fixed;" and Archie slipped the money back into his purse, put it in the table drawer again, and went out whistling, to his play. But, somehow, the lively tune did not make his heart cheerful, and before very long, he was back again, talking the same matter over with his father.

"If I really thought the Lord wanted me to give my half-dollar, Pa, I would do it. I want to do right; but it don't seem to me he would want a little fellow like me to give more than half he had. Does it to you, Pa?"

"I cant help you any there, Archie. You know it takes a great deal of money to build a great stone church; and you know how many poor little children, and grown people too, are looking to you Sabbath-school children to build them a comfortable church to worship in."

"I know all that, Pa, but lots of children are sending money; so many, I think a quarter would do for me. Yes, I'll give this quarter; here, just take it, and settle the matter."

Mr. Horton took the quarter, and wrapping it up with Frank's contribution, put it into his pocket, and Archie again ran out, but in a half hour came back looking sorely perplexed.

"Pa," said he, "I'm afraid I am doing wrong. May be I ought to give my half-dollar."

"If you think so, my son, you had better do it. One thing I will say, God never allows any one to lose by giving to him, but is sure to pay back double."

"Do you really think He will pay it back to me, Pa," said the little fellow, his face brightening up instantly.

"I don't know that He will ever pay you back in money, Archie, but if he does not, he will pay you back in the satisfaction you will have in knowing you have assisted in such a noble work."

That wasn't just the kind of pay Archie wanted, so he dropped the three silver pieces he had been holding in his fingers back into the drawer, saying, "I'll think about it until supper, Pa," and added with a sigh, "It seems like it is mighty hard to get a whole dollar."

Just before tea Mr. Horton walked out, and when he came in, Archie ran to meet him, his face radiant with smiles, and the little pieces jingling in his hand.

"Here, Pa," he said, "I have made up my mind to give this too. Now, don't you think God will bless me, Pa, if he don't give me back my money."

"I think he has blessed you already, my son; for I haven't seen you look so happy in a long time."

"I do feel happy, Pa, and I am so glad I gave it, gladder than if somebody had given me the shilling to make out my dollar, and I don't believe I ever should have felt right if I hadn't given it to the Lord."

A day or two passed, and Archie thought no more about his half-dollar, for the Lord he thought had paid him in happiness for what he had given, and with that he was perfectly satisfied. Now it happened about this time that Archie's and Frank's grandma promised the little boys to bring them some candy, one day as she was starting down street, and when she came in, they both ran, holding out their hands and shouting, "Where is the candy, grandma, where is the candy?"

"There now! I forgot all about it, boys, I am really sorry; but you must forgive me this time, and take this in the place of the candy." And she gave them each a bran new half-dollar.

"There now," shouted Archie, dancing around with joy, "if I haven't got my half-dollar back again already. You said so, Pa; you said God wouldn't forget to pay me, and I know he must have put it into grandma's heart to give it to me, didn't he?"

"I have no doubt of it," said his father, "and though I would not have you give with the expectation of getting your pay always in this world, I want you to be ever on the watch and observe how faithful God is in his promises, and how often he really does pay back, what, with a cheerful heart, you have given to him." A TOUCHING APPEAL.

We publish the following touching appeal from our brethren in Kansas. We deeply sympathize with them in the trying circumstances in which they are placed; and we assure them that the Board will do all in its power to sustain and relieve them. There are many other missionaries, however, who greatly want assistance in this general time of need; and the Board are anxious to be enabled to aid them all. It must be obvious, however, that this will be impossible, unless the treasury is replenished by the liberal contributions of its friends, to whom we earnestly appeal for help.

TO THE BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

The Presbytery of Highland would respectfully represent to the Board of Domestic Missions, as follows:

Deeply sympathizing with you in the straitened circumstances in which you are placed, in consequence of the fearful distraction of the country, and appreciating the disagreeable necessity which is forced upon you of curtailing your appropriations to the missionary churches throughout the land, we yet earnestly hope that you will discriminate, as far as possible, in favour of the churches within our bounds.

The reason for this apparently selfish request will doubtless at once suggest itself to the Board. On account of the fearful destitution which has prevailed and still exists to some extent in this chastened State, our people, instead of being able to support their ministers, are obliged to depend upon charity for the necessaries of life. It is sad to contemplate the possible necessity that will be laid upon many of our dear brethren, who have passed through much tribulation already, to abandon their fields to a destitution of the bread of life, and to behold the labour of their hands, instead of being established, going back to its primitive confusion.

The foundations of our Zion are yet scarcely laid in Kansas. We have endeavoured to see to it, that the work should be well done, as far as it has yet advanced; and although we have had almost unparalleled discouragements, we are still hopeful. But, to all human appearance, what has been gained will in a great measure be lost, unless our people can receive about as much as heretofore. We do therefore most earnestly hope that the Board will, as far as possible, meet the recommendations of our Committee on Domestic Missions.

It must occur to you, dear brethren, upon a moment's reflection, that Kansas ought to be the last part of our great field which should be made to feel the growing deficiency of the resources of our beloved Board. So at least it seems to us. While, however, we thus earnestly present our cause, we would at the same time most gratefully recognize the unfailing and generous kindness of the Board to us hitherto.

J. G. REASER,
J. D. PAXTON,
WM. BISHOP,
Committee.

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.

FROM A GERMAN MISSIONARY.

Rev. and Dear Brethren—The Lord be praised for his wondrous works, and for the mercy he hath shown to us, his children, and this report will prove again the depth of his mercy towards the people of the covenant.

The awakening among my members, as mentioned in my last report, is still in progress, and about fifteen persons have either found peace, or are under deep conviction of sin, and full of godly sorrow. It is the Lord's doing, and to him alone be the glory. When I consider the poor miserable worm of the dust, whom the Lord has deigned to use as an instrument to do this work, must I not exclaim, O Lord, what is thy servant, that thou shouldst call him by name? How powerfully does it prove the comforting assertion of the Lord, "My strength is made perfect in weakness!" And is not my living soul come from thee! Therefore, to thee alone the glory, not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name, be the glory.

The private prayer-meetings began about five months ago with my elders, and awakened sinners still continue. With the exception of Wednesday, when we meet for lecture in the church, I have every evening here and thither prayer-meetings in the houses of my members. The Spirit of God is moving among us, and the blessing will not tarry. The preached word is listened to with earnest attention and devotion, and our meetings are well attended. The word of life is not to all my members a savor of life unto life, still I hope, however, the best of the pardoning grace of our blessed Redeemer, who will perfect the good work begun.

During the last quarter we were under the painful necessity of excommunicating a member, on account of breaking the Sabbath. During the year, we lost three members by excommunicating them, and two by removal; but added six on examination, and one on certificate.

We lost four children by death, one of them my own, the youngest of the family.

Our whole number of communicants is at present seventy-eight.

Our Sunday-school numbers forty-two, and is in a flourishing condition. Other meetings are as usual.

As my congregation has subscribed a salary of $200, and as I live in a parsonage which is worth $50 annually, I hope with the help of God to support myself, and have to this effect announced in Presbytery, that with the expiring year, April 13th, no further aid from the Board is to be solicited, and my congregation is to be numbered among the self-sustaining.

With most devout and humble thanks to the Rev. officers of the Board, for their kind and timely help, I close my service under your supervision, and will continue to contribute to the Board, as a substantial token of my thankfulness and gratitude towards it.

The Lord has done great things in the midst of us, during the last three years. Then, we had a debt of $3000, and to-day we have only $600, of which $400 are covered by subscriptions due in September a. c. and March of next year; so that only $200 are left. And all this is paid without help from abroad, notwithstanding a great many of my people are labouring for their daily bread. To God be the praise for ever!

Wishing all my brethren in the ministry God's blessing abundantly, and especially praying for the success of the Board of Domestic Missions, I herewith close my connection with you, and may you go on prosperously in the cause of Christ.

Yours in Christ, W. C. K.

Newark, Ohio, April 28th, 1861.

AN AWAKENING AMONG THE GERMANS.

R——, Wisconsin, May 3d, 1861.

Dear Brethren—By the goodness of God I was permitted to perform my labours in the usual way for another quarter, and well I can say it was the most blessed quarter of my life. Here in R——, we have good attendance on public worship, and a great interest in the word of God; but especially in P——, there we enjoyed the most powerful presence of the Spirit of God. The whole field there has been changed from one of darkness into one of light, to speak without exaggeration. It is farther true in regard to the older class of people, and especially true in regard to children. To describe all, would lead me too far, but such an eagerness to hear the truth I have never witnessed before. I needed not to seek the people; the people sought me. For instance, after preaching in the church, most all would hitch up their ox-teams and follow me to the house where I stopped. Here I had to go on—you might call it preaching or conversing—till sometimes twelve or two o'clock in the night. It being too late to go home, a lot of straw was brought and spread on the floor, and a few hours' rest enjoyed by all. In the morning the same things were done over again, and there was no excitement, but a melting and powerful working of the Holy Spirit accompanying the preached word. I heard once, in public worship, the Calvinistic doctrines denounced as "the dead, dry bones of Calvin;" but here, where there was nothing preached but pure Calvinism, (if you choose to name Bible doctrine so,) these "dead, dry bones of Calvin" proved the power of God unto salvation.

There are also the sweet fruits of the Spirit to be seen in every respect, and in abundance. To God be all the praise! But, under all the burden of this work, my health failed, and my constitution is almost wrecked. My lungs are severely affected, I have a very bad cough, and I apprehend an early dissolution. My physician advised me to rest, by all means, for half a year, at least, while undergoing a cure. But how should or could I rest? I have no means to live six months without preaching, and so I must work and endure as long as I possibly can. As for me, I am ready to go at the Master's call. I am only somewhat concerned in regard to my family. In the Lord's hands I will lay it all.

Yours in the love of Jesus Christ,

J. T.

FAMILY VISITATION.

C—— B——, Iowa, March 20, 1861.

This quarter has been spent in this place, in labours by day and by night, in the study, in the sanctuary, and from house to house. I have enjoyed my work very much. As a large majority of the population of this place are not in habits of church attendance, I determined, from the beginning, to devote much of my time to family visitation. As I obtained access, I have gone into all classes of families—Mormons—infidels—as well as those who claim the Christian faith, whose duties they neglect. In every case, I have been courteously received, and generally kindly. This is more than I expected, and for it feel thankful. One good effect has been the filling up of our congregation, and the attendance of some not before seen in the sanctuary. The week of prayer was kept, by the union of the Congregational and Methodist churches with ours, in evening services through the week. The meetings were well attended, and solemn. The following items will give you a general view of the present state and future prospects of this congregation.

1. The Sabbath-school numbers about seventy-five scholars. Attendance punctual, especially scholars. Give book rewards for committing verses of Scripture. Two Bible-classes in the Sabbath-school.

2. I hold a Bible-class on Monday night for old and young. Study the Acts of the Apostles in course. About twenty scholars.

3. Prayer-meeting on Wednesday night. Attendance growing, and interest increasing gradually.

4. Our Ladies' Mite Society meets once in two weeks among the families of the congregation. Ten cents is paid by each attender each evening. By this society funds have been supplied to meet the contingent expenses of the church through the winter, which has prevented frequent collections.

5. A church building is now under contract—plain, to suit the times—to be completed by the 1st of May, and, when finished, paid for by the citizens of the town. This would have been the better policy three years ago, when they began a costly house; but experience was needed to teach wisdom.

6. There is some waking up in the public mind to the truth that religion is a great personal interest. God grant that the Holy Spirit may seal the truth with mighty and saving power.

Dear brethren, accept assurances of my regard, and my best wishes for prosperity in the care of the great interest over which you watch as those that must give account.

TRIALS OF A MISSIONARY IN NEBRASKA.

April 24th, 1861.

Dear Brethren—The commission from the Board came to hand in due time. I now forward my first quarterly report. I have been in correspondence with the Board for nearly six years, yet I have never addressed them a letter under so trying circumstances as at present.

The short crops last season, political troubles, great scarcity of money in this region, and sickness in our family, make our circumstances trying, more than at any former time.

Our three children were sick at one time with lung fever. The youngest died—the next youngest we trust has recovered, though weak—the eldest remained feeble and delicate until two days ago, when the fever returned more violent than at first. She is very low; I now write this report by her sick couch, while my wife is compelled to be in the kitchen. O that the Lord would spare us our dear little Fannie. But his will be done.

Our afflictions are great—it was hard to part with our little Hattie. She was ten months old, and the joy and sunshine of our home. But the Lord gave, and he took away; blessed be his name.

Notwithstanding the severe trials and straits I have just referred to, we have tokens of encouragement in our missionary work. The Lord is with us to revive his children. It has been my happy privilege to receive to membership in our church recently, two estimable ladies on profession of their faith, and another on certificate. One of the first mentioned is a convert from Universalism. We have just closed one of our most precious communion seasons. A deep solemnity characterized all our meetings. A larger number communed than ever before, and but two persons left the house at the administration of the ordinance, which was administered immediately after morning service. All remained, and seemed much interested in the service. The Spirit of God is evidently striving with the impenitent, and we hope before long, to welcome to the fold of the good Shepherd some others.

Our prayer-meetings have been better attended of late, than ever before. Our Sabbath-schools are also very encouraging.

Amid our trials and destitutions, the above tokens cheer and encourage us to hope and labour. Our hearts, a few weeks ago, were cheered by the reception of a box of clothing from the good ladies of Dr. Boardman's church. God bless and reward them abundantly.

We have found it hard to obtain bread for the past few months. We must have suffered, had I not gone in debt for flour. My only hope to pay for it, and to get money for more, is from the Board. I cannot expect much from our people until after harvest. Many of them are as hard pressed as myself for the means of living—to ask them for bread now, would be to take it from their families.

These are trying times on this frontier, and none are greater sufferers than ministers.

Yours in gospel bonds,

H. G.

PRECIOUS RESULTS.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN MARYLAND.

Z——, May 2, 1861.

Dear Brethren—In this report permit me to take a general survey of my labours in this field for the last five years, the period during which I have been acting as a missionary under your commission. During this length of time, I have preached 730 times within the bounds of my own field, and frequently out of it. I have attended 260 prayer-meetings, 40 funerals, 180 Bible-classes, and made 200 pastoral visits. I try to visit the families in my field once a year in a pastoral way. During the past five years our church at Z—— has paid off a debt of $400 on the church building; paid nearly $350 salary every year; raised for different benevolent purposes (most of it for our Boards) $380, besides $200 of incidental expenses; making an aggregate of $2530 for the past five years. This has been done by a congregation numbering about 28 families, none of which, two excepted, are in the possession of property to the value of $5,000, and most of them not $2,000. These facts will show you that we have been trying to do something, though I acknowledge with shame we have not done all we might. Five years ago we had a membership of about 43. Since that time we have received 36 members—23 on profession, and 13 on certificate—making in all 82; but by dismission and death this number has been much reduced, making our actual present membership about 64.

In addition to accomplishing work of this kind, our little church has been instrumental, under God, in doing much good otherwise, proofs of which are clearly seen this day. This little band of Christ's followers was organized about eleven years ago, in the midst of a community that had no adequate appreciation of the importance and power of the religion of Jesus. But it is vastly different now. Many have been brought within hearing of the gospel, and have learned that this Divine system affords them the best hopes, not only for time, but for eternity. They set a higher value upon all the means of grace. Again, Presbyterianism, unknown in this region until recently, is now esteemed much more highly, and is looked to as the most permanent means of good in the community, and our church has been the means of drawing out some to to the "custom" of attending at public worship; and yet we see the sad want of the Spirit's work upon such. Five years ago not more than one or two religious newspapers were received by this community for three or four miles around; now, the Presbyterian, the Record, and American Messenger, visit many a family. But one of the best works which this or any church can accomplish I think has been, to a good extent, accomplished here. She has put God's people in the way of working. Had there been no church organized here; had not the means of grace been regularly sustained, many noble and worthy Christian families would have remained comparatively idle; but, as it is, in "rank and file," they have been doing service for Jesus, and the world feels their united power (as a church) for good, while the church at large has a co-labourer, though a feeble one.

And now, dear brethren, I wish to say, that most of the good which this church, in these ways, has been enabled to do, has been almost entirely owing to your Board of Domestic Missions. For five years you have aided us, and had it not been for this aid, we could not have lived and worked. Before this time we had hoped to sustain ourselves, and do the work of Christ, but God has ordered otherwise. We were just recovering from the troubles of 1857, which drove many of our best families from us, and now heavier disasters are coming upon us in these times of war. God only knows what will be the issue; but, so long as I have a "tent," and "the whole armour of God" promised, I will not leave this post. With my hearty thanks and best wishes, I remain

Your obedient servant,

J. N. H.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

CANDIDATES.

The following statistical table exhibits the operations of the Board of Education in the department of candidates for the ministry.

The number of new candidates received has been		138
Making in all from the beginning (in 1819)		3090
The whole number on the roll during the past year has been		505
In their Theological course	191
" Collegiate "	205
" Academical "	109
		505

The aggregate number of candidates this year is thirteen more than that of last year. The report of last year embraced several candidates received, as was stated in last year's report, between the close of the fiscal year and the meeting of the Assembly. These, of course, properly belong to the present year, and ought to be deducted from the number of new students reported in 1860. The numbers for the two years, respectively, would then stand as follows:

For the year ending 1860, 163.
" " " " 1861, 156.

This increase is above the high standard of 1859, a standard far in advance of the attainments of any previous year in the history of the operations of the Board since 1839.

In order that the Assembly may be enabled to note the progress of this department, the following table is appended, exhibiting the yearly increase or diminution, both in respect to new candidates, and aggregates, for the last ten years.

Years.	New Candidates.	Whole No. of Candidates.
1853	81	370
1854	104	342
1855	125	364
1856	102	382
1857	92	383
1858	103	385
1859	141	391

In the course of the year, two candidates have left off study on account of ill health; two have been dropped by advice of their Presbytery; two have been stricken from the roll for violating a rule of the Board by marrying; two have been set aside for improper conduct; one has been obliged to relinquish study on account of the death of his father; and two have died.

Whilst the Board would make record of their gratitude for the success with which it has pleased the Head of the Church to crown their labours, they feel that there is cause for humiliation that so little has been done. The wants of a perishing world, the resources of the church, over which the Assembly presides, both in men and means, and the claims of Him who has commanded and commissioned the church to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, certainly warrant a larger annual accession of candidates, and a more liberal provision for their support.

These two things—the annual increase of candidates, and the annual provisions made for their sustentation—are very closely connected. Young men may have all the gifts and graces necessary to make them useful and able ministers of the word, and yet may not feel that they are called to encounter the hardships incident to a thorough preparation for the ministry. The history of many, who, in obedience to the call, have left and hazarded all for the Master's sake, admonishes them of the risk of health and comfort they are likely to incur by entering upon the ministerial curriculum. The privations of our young men, though borne in secret, and with patience, do eventually, in many instances, become known, and the disclosure operates to the discouragement of many a youth of piety and promise from seeking the gospel ministry.

This is natural. A man may have grace and talents which, if duly cultivated, would qualify him for wielding the sword of the Spirit with power, and yet, may conclude, in view of the inadequacy of the means available for the prosecution of the necessary course of study, to serve God in an humbler sphere. From this cause, the church is annually losing large numbers of young men who possess the requisite talents, and yet are constrained, through lack of means, to turn aside to some of the secular callings.

Some may be inclined to censure these youth for their lack of faith, but it would seem that the church is more deserving of censure for her lack of liberality. It may be a question whether a Christian youth is in the path of duty when he enters upon a course of study, under circumstances which must imperil his health and future usefulness, but it cannot be a question whether the church ought to make ample and adequate provision for the necessities and comfort of those who have consecrated and dedicated to her service their earthly all. Thankful to God for the goal now reached, and grateful for what the liberality of the churches has enabled them to accomplish in the past year, the Board would urge the brethren to renewed efforts and increasing liberality.

Balances 1861,	$8 76	$1353 69

Of the African Fund $1000 is funded.

The total receipts of the year from all sources are $51,364.46. The total receipts of the Candidates' Fund are $45,553.54, a decrease from the receipts of last year in this fund of $19,083.65.

This unusually large decrease is more apparent than real. The Board would therefore append some explanatory remarks.

1. In accordance with the directions of the Assembly, the Board have been accustomed to embrace in their annual reports, the operations, both in candidates and funds, of several Presbyteries "which prefer to retain their own organizations, and control directly the education of their own candidates." Several of these had not reported at the close of the fiscal year; and the apparent income is of course diminished by the amount of their operations. The deficiency from this cause is, perhaps, not less than $5000.

2. The amount of legacies reported last year was unusually large, exceeding the income, from the same source, for the present year, $6128.72.

Yet, notwithstanding these modifying considerations, the Board have to confess and mourn over a great decrease in their income, and enter upon the labours of another year with an exhausted treasury. Whilst they have reason to thank God that they have been enabled promptly to meet all claims during the year, without incurring debt, they feel sadly assured that they must, ere long, resort to the painful and costly expedient of borrowing, to pay the appropriations due those beloved young men to whom the faith and honour of the church have been pledged. The Board are aware that the unparalleled national distress has contributed to the production of these painful results, but they cherish the hope that the Presbyterian church will not abandon her educational institutions, or forsake her candidates in this their time of need.

The following table shows the receipts for eleven years, in the fund for candidates.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

1. SCHOOLS.

During the year, the Board has been enabled to do something in behalf of Parochial Schools. They have aided in supporting a number of these institutions. Among the many trials incident to their operations, there are few more affecting than those connected with this department. The appeals for aid to establish, or to sustain schools, which come up from the sessions of weak churches, are sufficient to move the heart, and enlist the sympathies of any intelligent Christian. Now the cry for aid is from an infant church, whose success, if not its very existence depends upon the maintenance of its school. Again, the Board are informed that a flourishing school, which had for years been blessing the entire region in which it is located, has been brought to the verge of dispersion, or suspension, through the failure of crops, or other local or temporary causes. Anon, a school ushered into existence through the patronage of the Board, a school on whose prominence and prosperity the name and character of the Presbyterian church are staked, is brought to a stand because the Board cannot furnish the promised aid. In most of these cases, an appropriation of fifty or seventy-five dollars would prevent disaster and maintain the cause of education. It is this which makes these appeals so peculiarly touching. Were the aid asked large in amount; did it require even one hundred or one hundred and fifty dollars to sustain one of these all-important institutions, the agony of a refusal would not be so great; but to be reduced to the necessity of withholding aid from a school ready to perish, whilst fifty dollars would not only save it from suspension, or final abandonment, but cause it to maintain its footing, and advance the interests of Presbyterianism, is a trial which it is hard to endure. As an adjunct to weak churches, as an indispensable part of our Presbyterian educational apparatus, the parochial school ought to be sustained. Whatever else Presbyterians may dispense with, they cannot, either consistently or safely, dispense with the parish school. It is the natural outgrowth of the Abrahamic covenant, and where this covenant is recognized and understood, this time-honoured institution will be sure to have a prominent place among the institutions of the church. They who regard their children as co-heirs with themselves of the blessing of Abraham, will, with him, command their children and their households after them, to keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon them, and upon their seed after them, that which he hath spoken. This they will do in their places around the domestic altar, and this they will seek to secure by providing, in common with the household of faith, a covenant training and supervision for their offspring, when they go forth from their own personal instruction to be subjected to the nurture and admonition of strangers. Are not Christian parents bound by the terms of the covenant to see well to it, that those who are to supply their place, as the instructors of their children, are not strangers to the covenants of promise? Who, with the fear of Abraham's God before his eyes, would think of sending forth his little ones to breathe the unhallowed atmosphere of an institution in whose curriculum the promises made to the fathers have no place? The Board have faith in Presbyterianism, and though their way, in this department, is at present encompassed with clouds, they feel assured that the genius of our system will yet assert the claims of the parochial school, and that the spirit of the covenant will yet breathe in the entire array of our educational institutions.

2. ACADEMIES.

The Board believe that they are but giving expression to a persuasion, which obtains very generally in the church, when they speak of the importance of the Academy in our educational system. It would be difficult to institute a comparison among the different orders of religious schools, and decide which of them has most to do with the spiritual, and literary, and scientific attainments of the man. The Parochial School, the Academy, the College, are so inseparably connected with the development and culture of the mind, that their respective claims must be recognized in any intelligent investigation or estimate. It would be difficult to determine, whether the soil, or the atmosphere, or the rain, or the sun, has the greatest agency in the process of vegetation. The entire round of these agencies is indispensable; and if any one be wanting, there will be a corresponding defect in the future plant. So is it with the development of these immortal minds. Not one whit more necessary are the elements just enumerated, to the germination, and growth, and maturing of the seed deposited by the husbandman, than are the institutions in question, to the sound and healthy development and culture of the souls of our beloved youth. The bosom of a Christian household is as important to the child, as the bosom of the soil is to the acorn. The air, and rain, and sun of heaven are not more indispensable to the budding germ, and expanding, maturing plant, than the influences of the School, the Academy, and the College, are to the mental and moral growth of that generation which is so soon to take our place on the great theatre of conflict. As these agencies are, so will be the coming generation, with its labourers, mechanics, merchants, counsellors, judges, presidents, captains, deacons, elders, ministers. Directly or indirectly, these institutions affect all classes and conditions of society. Other things being equal, the standing of any community, or city, or nation, or age, will be as its educational institutions are. Search the world over and it will be found that this test is infallible. The resemblance between a people and their schoolmasters will be found to be as striking as that between a people and their priesthood.

Among these important institutions, a very high place must be assigned to the Academy. By no possible arrangement can this intermediate institution be dispensed with. The Parochial, or the Public School, can never, without serious detriment, be elevated so as to render an academic training unnecessary, before entering College. And, on the other hand, the College standard cannot be lowered, so as to admit the Parochial graduate, without a sacrifice of the best interests of sound scholarship. Here are the conditions, and here the sphere of the Academy. Except the duties of the School and of the College are to be infringed, and the chief business of both neglected, the Academy must intervene, and its work be thoroughly performed. If the minutiæ of orthography and the various rudiments of an English education are to be mastered, the first and the determining conflict must be fought upon the theatre of the Primary School.

This work is not to be interfered with by engaging in studies which properly belong to the Academy. The business of the academy must consist principally of the studies of classics and mathematics. The studies of the elementary school will, of course, continue to occupy the attention of the academician, but these must be subordinate to the great end of the Academy—preparation for College.

The Board regard the vigorous sustentation and elevation of the Academy as among the most important of all the enterprises in which the Presbyterian church can engage. Their increase has its natural limitations, of population, financial ability, and properly qualified teachers; but these are the only limitations which the church ought to recognize. Wherever there is a sufficient population, the church should regard the fact as an indication of duty, and, if she possesses the men and the means, she should, at once, address herself to the work. O, what a field for academic culture does this mighty continent present. See its teeming population, its tide of living men, as with the rush and voice of many waters, meeting and mingling in one broad, deep, impassable sea, they roll onward, overtopping every mountain covering every plain, planting villages, and towns, and cities with a rapidity and an enthusiasm unprecedented in the annals of the race! If ever church had her mission indicated, it is the church around whose very altars this tide is rising and gathering, and from whose doors its waters are flowing forth. Whether these waters shall be bitter or sweet, whether they shall bear on their bosom life or death, whether they shall be permitted to stagnate where they settle, and breed pestilence and war, depends, under God, upon the founding and sustentation of sound, religious, and scientific institutions, and especially upon the establishment of Christian Academies. And the Board are persuaded that it is not claiming too much for the Presbyterian church, in view of her acknowledged national position, and the apostolic purity of her doctrines and polity, to say, that of all the evangelical sisterhood, there is no single church upon whose agency the future of our beloved country so much depends. That church whose history is a narrative of academic trials, and academic triumphs, may well claim a front rank in that vanguard of gospel agencies which are now determining, and shall yet shape, the destinies of our land and world.

The year just closed has witnessed many conflicts on this great field. Noble-hearted men have stood up for the cause of Christian education under circumstances of peculiar privation. The Board have been enabled, in some cases, to prevent an absolute abandonment of some of their academies, and in some measure to promote and advance the general cause. They have been mindful of the recommendation of the Assembly in reference to the Pacific Coast, and have to record their gratitude for the success wherewith God has crowned their pioneer institute in San Francisco, California. That institute has now, under the Divine blessing, and through the munificence of the brethren at San Francisco and New York, effloresced into a college, under circumstances of peculiar popular favour, and with a field and a future into which it is rarely the privilege of the church to look.

The number of Presbyterial academies under the care of the Presbyterian church is fifty-nine.

This is one less than last year, owing to the growth of the academy at San Francisco into a college.

3. COLLEGES.

Through the benevolence of the churches, and of individuals, whose deep interest in the cause of collegiate education has been long and thoroughly proved by the most substantial evidences, the Board have been enabled to maintain their footing in this department, and to continue the usual amount of aid to several institutions of this class. The method of affording aid is two-fold. 1. By supplementing the salaries of professors. 2. By aiding the friends of a given collegiate enterprise, in effecting an endowment, in whole or in part, upon the field in which the enterprise may be located. These two methods are closely allied. The former is temporary, and diminishes in amount in proportion to the success of the latter, ceasing altogether, when, through the income of the endowment, or the proceeds of tuition fees, the institution becomes self-sustaining. These remarks apply as well to the method pursued by the Board in aiding academies, and it is their privilege to speak of a goodly measure of success in both cases, and according to both methods. Through the aid furnished, both in agency and money, several institutions, both academic and collegiate, have been helped through crises in which their very existence was endangered, whilst others have been placed upon a comfortable basis of sustentation. In this field, however, much remains to be done. Many colleges which have been honoured of God in preparing young men for the ministry, and which still enjoy refreshings from the presence of the Lord, colleges which can report no fewer than twenty-three revivals in the course of their history, (which is almost a revival to a year,) are struggling under heavy burdens, and trammelled with debts, which must interfere with their usefulness and mar their prospects for years to come. The Board know of no way in which our noble-hearted Christian men of wealth could better advance the cause of science and religion, than by aiding in the endowment or sustentation of these institutions.

It is not the policy of the Board to encourage the multiplication of colleges in the older States, or the establishment of colleges in the new States or Territories, until a sufficient academic basis for supplying them with students has been laid. Their motto is, the academy first and the college afterwards. The wisdom of this rule is illustrated by the entire history of their operations in this department. They are thoroughly of the opinion, that, with some exceptions, such as San Francisco, in a community whose growth in all that contributes to civic greatness, places it beyond the sphere of historic comparison, and beyond the application of ordinary rules, it is wisest and best that the college should be preceded by a wide and thorough academic basis.

THE CITY COLLEGE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The Trustees of this Institution are now a body corporate. The certificate of incorporation has been filed according to law, in the County Clerk's Office, and the Trustees are prepared as a regularly constituted corporation to receive books, money, lands, and any other bequests for the use of the College, and design to do all in their power to make it a blessing to the country, and an honour to the city. The regular college year is to begin the first of June next (1861), when the classes will be formed. The new chapel is now in the course of construction, and will be ready for use in a short time. There are now over ninety students in attendance. May we not confidently expect the citizens of San Francisco to aid this Institution in that prompt and liberal manner that has ever characterized them? A great enterprise has now been happily commenced in their midst, and for their benefit, and for the honour of the city. Every possible guarantee for the faithful execution of the trust confided to its Trustees can now be given. Who will be the first to make donations for the University of San Francisco, in lands, books, or apparatus? Who are to be the favoured individuals that are to embalm their names on the great Pacific coast for all ages to come, in scholarships and professorshi -?

It is with feelings of deep gratitude to God, the Board transfer this Institution from the Academic to the Collegiate roll. All the expectations—even the most sanguine—which have been cherished by the friends of this, our first attempt to supply the educational wants of California, have been exceeded. In 1859, Dr. Van Rensselaer, in recommending the action of the Synod of the Pacific, in which it was resolved to establish an Academy at San Francisco, made the following remarks:—"That the plan proposed was under the right auspices, having originated with the Synod; that the Synod had begun in the right way, having commenced with the Academy; that the Academy was in the right place, being located at San Francisco; that the work was undertaken by the right men, Dr. Burrowes; and that the Academy was established at the right time, as things move quickly in California, and there is no time to be lost on such a coast." As yet, two years have not passed away, and the truth of these remarks, and the wisdom of the brethren, are more than confirmed.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
May 14th, 1861.

Recent Intelligence.

AFRICA.

We have letters from Corisco to the 20th of February; from Niffau to the 1st of March; and from Monrovia to the 23d of February. From Niffau we receive pleasant intelligence. The Rev. Messrs. Amos had removed their families to that place, and had fully entered upon their missionary work. There were twenty pupils in school, who were doing well. Religious services on the Sabbath were well attended, and the missionaries were much encouraged in view of the prospects of usefulness before them. Mr. Miller had also taken his family to his new station at Mount Coffee, and was encouraged in view of the prospects of usefulness around him. At Corisco there had been some sickness in the mission families, but all were well again at the date of our letter. On the 1st of January, Miss Jackson, the female teacher of this mission, was united in marriage to the Rev. Walter H. Clarke, of the Gaboon mission. Mr. Clarke has since been appointed a missionary at Corisco. Mr. Ogden mentions that four individuals had been received to the communion of the church on the last sacramental occasion.

INDIA.

Since our last, we have letters from Allahabad of March 5th; and from Lodiana of March 19th. At the former place mention is made of the hopeful conversion of a native woman, from the hill country. The newly arrived missionaries, Rev. Messrs. Johnson and Wykoff, were diligently engaged in the study of the language. The weather was unusually warm, and the effects of the famine were very distressing, especially in the region of Lodiana. We have also letters from Calcutta, from the Rev. Messrs. Barnes and Morrison, the former of the 3d of February, and the latter of the 12th of the same month. Mr. Barnes and family were expecting to embark for this country on the 7th of February, and Mr. Morrison and his on the 16th. Both of these brethren have been compelled to return on account of impaired health.

CHINA.

We have letters from Ningpo of February 15th, and from Shanghai to the 21st February. One of our letters from Ningpo furnishes an interesting sketch of the history of the mission church at that place. The native membership of the church at the present time is one hundred and ten, of whom thirty-six have been received during the past year.

Our Shanghai letter mentions the hopeful conversion of a man at that place, who was received to the communion of the church on the previous Sabbath. Two other individuals had applied for baptism, but their application had been deferred to a future time. In relation to the general affairs of the country, Mr. Culbertson writes: "The prospect now is, that the rebellion ere long will triumph. They have received an accession of fifty thousand men from the rebels in Canton. Hang-chau is closely invested—the province of Shantung is in a great measure overrun by them, and everthing points to success." Mrs. Rankin and her children were about to sail for this country, on account of the failure of her health, whilst Mr. Rankin remains at his post of labour.

SIAM.

We have a letter from Bangkok, of the 7th of February. The missionaries were all well at that time. Mr. Wilson makes the statement that one native convert had been received to the communion of the church, and he entertains the hope that one or two others are not far from the kingdom of heaven.

INDIAN TRIBES.

We have letters from the Creek mission to the 17th of April, and from one of the Choctaw stations as late as the 24th of April. There had been one severe case of typhus fever in the mission family at Tallahassee, but all were well at the date of our letter. At Stockbridge, the mission family were well, but they were feeling the need of more help to sustain the school. Provisions were still very high in most parts of the country, but the people were planting their crops earlier than usual, and the prospects were favourable for a plentiful harvest.

END OF THE MISSION YEAR—MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The mission year ended on the 30th of April. The general condition of the missions, as described in the Annual Report of the Executive Committee, is one of great interest—especially in some of the fields of labour. No former report gives more encouraging evidence of the work of conversion and of hopeful labours; but for details we refer to the report itself, which will hereafter be placed in the hands of our readers as an extra number of the Record.

The receipts of the Board, we regret to say, were not equal to the expenses, though the accounts were nearly squared by using certain special funds, as will be seen by the report. Under ordinary circumstances, this deficiency would cause much regret; but in the present state of our public affairs, and in view of the existing engagements of the Board, and also of the calls for enlarging the missions, and the offers of qualified men as missionaries, the state and prospects of the mission treasury awaken serious concern. The Committee made a special report on the subject, which was considered with much care by the Board, and referred to the General Assembly for direction. This paper we insert in another column of the Record.

A sermon for the Board was preached on Sabbath evening, May 5th, in the church on University Place in this city, by the Rev. W. Henry Green, D.D. on Isaiah xlix. 3. This sermon will appear in the Foreign Missionary of this month.

At the meeting of the Board on the 6th of May, the Annual Report of the Executive Committee and other usual matters received consideration and appropriate action. The Special Report above mentioned occupied a large share of the time. The executive officers were re-elected, with one exception. This was in the case of our friend and colleague, the Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, D.D. who, we much regret to say, felt constrained to decline a re-election—intending to return to his native state, South Carolina. A successor was not appointed, and the question of appointing one was deferred, but the following resolutions were unanimously and cordially adopted in reference to Dr. Wilson:

"Resolved, That the Board deeply regret the resignation of Dr. Wilson, as presented in his letter.

"Resolved, That this resignation be accepted.

"Resolved, That the Board assure Dr. Wilson of their sincere wishes for his happiness and continued usefulness in that great work, to which with so much zeal and self-denial he has devoted his life."

The new year of the missionary work of our Church is entered upon, at home, in the midst of dark clouds. Faith will be tried, self-denial will be needed, prayer never before was more indispensable; but "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever," will surely be with his people, both in the churches here and at the missionary stations, while they go forward in his work.

PRESENT CRITICAL CONDITION OF THE MISSIONARY WORK OF THE CHURCH.

[The following paper was considered with much care by the Executive Committee, at a special meeting on the 3d of May, and then approved and directed to be laid before the Board of Foreign Missions.]

The Executive Committee feel called upon, by the special circumstances which deeply affect the work of missions under their charge, to lay before the Board the following statements and suggestions. These are made in view of the fact, that the Committee must, within the next two or three weeks, take definite action on the estimates for the support of the missions; this action has indeed been delayed longer than is convenient, in order to obtain counsel and direction concerning the path of duty.

The Annual Report of the Committee shows that the missions of the church are mostly enjoying evident tokens of the Divine blessing, and in some cases these are of very marked and encouraging interest. It is a proof of this, that there is a loud call for more labourers in several missionary fields.

In the next place, the Committee are thankful to be able to state, that at no former period were there so many approved men under appointment as missionaries. No less than thirteen of the young brethren, who have lately finished their course at four of the theological seminaries, have been appointed, besides three missionaries of experience who will soon be ready to return to their stations. Four of the former and one of the latter, it is expected, will be sent out at an early day; two to the Corisco mission for reasons of great urgency, and three to the Ningpo mission for reasons of equal weight, but by a special arrangement as to funds for the expense of sending them forth and supporting them for a year. Eleven others remain, therefore, who were expecting to be sent out in a short time, and whose services are greatly needed in different missions.

But the financial condition and prospects of the Board are such as to fill the hearts of the friends of missions with anxiety. Notwithstanding the door is open, the labourers waiting, the Holy Spirit carrying on the work of conversion with signal power, and the large pecuniary means of the church, the financial year of the Board ended with a debt, although unusually earnest efforts were made to press the claims of this cause on the attention of our Christian people. And now the lamentable condition of our public affairs threatens continued and increasing difficulties in this matter. Indeed, the Committee are led at times almost to despair of receiving such pecuniary support from the churches in the coming year as will save this cause from great embarrassment; and yet they would be far from distrusting the faith, self-denial, and sympathy of their Christian brethren, and they rejoice in the power of the Lord of the harvest to provide means for sending forth labourers. After carefully considering, however, the state of things now existing, and the prospect of continued embarrassment in public affairs, the Committee have felt constrained to contemplate the idea of a temporary retrenchment in the expenses of their work, as a result which seems but too likely to be unavoidable, though its effects must be deplorable; while yet they are not without hope that this painful measure may be averted by the liberality of the people of God. And in order to bring the subject practically before the Board, they would point out some of the ways in which a reduced expenditure may be effected, if it become unavoidable, and also some of the things which they hope might be done to provide for the support, and even the enlargement, of the missionary work.

1. The eleven brethren under appointment may be kept at home, at least for the present. As a measure of economy this, in its injurious influence, would be second only to the actual recall of missionaries from the field. It would, however, effect a saving in the expenses of the year of about $15,000.

2. To some extent, the work of the missions may be conducted on a reduced scale, without changing its general outline. This would be a sad discouragement to our missionary brethren, and a real injury to the work itself; but it might lessen the expenses of the Board from $9000 to $11,000.

3. As the Board will learn with much regret, one of the executive officers feels constrained to decline a re-election, though not from diminished interest in the missionary cause, nor from want of cordial and pleasant relations between him and his co labourers. In the view of this event, some change in the administrative work of the Board may be regarded as worthy of consideration. For the thorough and minute supervision of the work, as now conducted, a less amount of executive labour will not be sufficient; nor could such service be obtained at less expense. But it is practicable to modify the supervision of the missions, making it less particular, without destroying its value—especially if the number of labourers is not to be increased for the present. In some of the Indian missions, moreover, it is probable that some reduction of work will become necessary—at least for a time—thereby lessening the labour of executive supervision. It may be found practicable, also, as a temporary arrangement, to obtain assistance in editing the missionary publications from members of the Committee, or others, not receiving salaries from the Board. Before passing from this point, it is due to the other executive officers to state, that they consent to remain in their stations under a sense of duty, so long as the church desires their services, and Providence seems to make it their special obligation to serve the cause of Christ in this way. With this understood, they are willing to undertake the performance of additional labour, so far as they are able to fulfil it.

4. After these things, retrenchment can proceed only by discontinuing missionary service in the most direct way; by recalling missionaries, or, short of this, by cutting off all their auxiliary agencies—such as native assistant missionaries, the circulation of the Bible, the Christian instruction of heathen children. This is the last and fatal step, to be taken only when the church falls away from the work which the Lord has given her to do. The Committee will not now enter upon the consideration of this general measure. It would involve a careful judgment of the relative claims of different missionary fields, and the qualifications of the labourers.

These changes effected, the expense of the work would be reduced in the aggregate about $26,000 to $28,000. This reduction, however, cannot be made without inflicting serious injury on the cause of missions, and the Committee wish this to be carefully kept in view. Full information will be found in the general report of the Committee, and particularly in the Treasurer's statement appended to that report, to show the financial condition of the Board. To this reference is here made, and it is needful only to add in this place, that the amount contributed to the Treasury last year from the churches, including the gifts acknowledged under the title of "Miscellaneous," was $149,674, or about $10,000 less than was needed. If, in addition to this, from the same sources, $25,000 could be received during the present year, none of these retrenchments need be made, the receipts would equal the expenses of the missions as they now stand, and the brethren under appointment as missionaries could be sent out. This should be regarded as a moderate sum for the Presbyterian church to devote to the work of missions. This surely can be no oppressive burden to a church of 300,000 communicants; even half that number could bear it without difficulty.

The Committee gladly turn from the discouraging thoughts thus presented, to brighter, and, they trust, more correct views, which they would now briefly state. Some of these are suggested by the reference just made to the members of our communion. Three hundred thousand consecrated Christian men and women, or even the one half of that host, highly favoured as most of them are with this world's goods, ought to be able—nay, they are able—to support and extend this work of God for a dying world, by the Divine blessing on their prayers and gifts. On this point there seems to be no room for doubt. An average contribution of but a few cents a week from the one-half of this great company would lift the cause of missions, so far as pecuniary support is concerned, quite above the troubled waters now threatening to overwhelm it. This fact suggests, then, the first and main thing in the case, so far as human means are concerned—that a general support ought to be given by our Christian people to this cause, and it ought to be given now, if never before.

In order to secure this end, but one thing chiefly occurs to the Committee to be further suggested; which is, that each one of their brethren in the ministry will take up this cause as his own—and it is his own, because it is Christ's—and then plead for its interests as God gives him ability and opportunity. Earnestly, therefore, do the Committee wish, that the approaching meeting of the General Assembly may be divinely guided to such measures as will bring the great question of Christian duty home to the hearts of all our ministers and members. The favour of God towards this work in former years, which has often been wonderfully displayed; the doors now widely open, and the calls for more men; the grace given to so many of our brethren, making them willing to say, Here are we, send us; the deep and prayerful interest in this cause in the hearts of many members of our communion, prompting them to make such generous gifts for its support; the times that are now passing over us, admonishing the people of God to do with their might what their hands find to do; above all, the glory of our exalted Redeemer, to be promoted by preaching the gospel to every creature—these all point to higher missionary purposes and larger efforts. Do they not also point to the speedy success of this work of our hands?

The Committee desire, therefore, in conclusion, to recommend to the Board, that a general liberty of retrenchment should be sanctioned, unless it become manifest within a short period that the churches will come forward and save this cause from so great a calamity. The meeting of the General Assembly will give the opportunity of ascertaining, to some extent, what is the mind of the Church on this subject.

The foregoing paper was laid before the Board of Foreign Missions at their meeting on the 6th of May, 1861, and after protracted remarks it was directed to be printed and referred to the General Assembly for further action; the Board authorizing the Executive Committee to use their discretion in the premises in the meantime.

SYSTEMATIC BENEVOLENCE SIMPLIFIED.

This communication, from a respected brother in the ministry, contains important suggestions on the subject to which it refers.

This subject has engrossed much attention of late. We propose now simply to state an experiment which has been in operation for the last year, in one of our churches. The idea of the plan was derived from the apostolic injunction, "Let every one lay by on the first day of the week, as God hath prospered him." If this be the Bible rule, then let it be laid by in the collection-box every Sabbath—let the people have an opportunity of contributing every week. This was agreed to in the Session, and the entire year divided between the different objects—so many consecutive Sabbaths to each, varying the number of Sabbaths somewhat according to our idea of the relative demands of the objects, and also, according as the season of the year might seem to favour or hinder a full attendance of the people. The plan was then explained to the congregation. (a) It is scriptural. (b) It is simple. (c) It is systematic. (d) Easily remembered—no possibility of any body's forgetting. (e) It accommodates those who are sick, or absent, or not ready to-day. (f) It makes giving a part of our regular worship. (g) It trains people to giving. (h) It catches up a great many odd shillings and quarters, that otherwise would not come into the treasury of the Lord. (i) It avoids all pomp or show, or subscription, or private solicitation, putting it directly on the conscience or benevolence of the individual, &c. The embarrassments of other plans was also stated, and then the experiment began. Some thought it good; some did not care. Some thought it unwise. But it was tried; and the result of the year is an increase of about thirty-three per cent. on the previous average contributions of the congregation; this too, notwithstanding the great financial embarrassment of the last half of the year.

In addition to the above advantages, there is also great flexibility about this plan. It secures the largest part of our contributions to the regular and most important objects. It shuts off inferior applications with the plea, the day is appropriated to another object. And yet, when a really desirable object is presented, it has but to turn one of its Sabbaths into that channel, and then revert to its regular course. This has been done for Syria, and for Kansas, during the past year, and will be done for other objects, if they seem to call for it. One Sabbath annually, it is hoped, will be appropriated to a pastor's library, which ought to be in all our parsonages. It is believed that our people do not complain as much now of frequent collections as they did formerly. A collection is as much a matter of course as a sermon. It will not dwindle into a mere penny collection if the pastor does his duty—prays for the object, and for the spirit of benevolence, and then informs the people as each new object arises, what they have done for the former, and also, at the close of the year, of all that has been done. In the church above alluded to, the annual report to Presbytery is read every spring to the church, as a matter of information which all are concerned to hear.

LETTER TO THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

Mission House, Saharanpur, December 1, 1860.

Very Dear Young Friends—A month ago I had the pleasure of forwarding to you a letter from the Rev. T. W. J. Wylie, the native ordained minister here, who takes a deep interest in "the school of the prophets," in connection with our Synod in America. He longs to see a number of devoted young men coming out to proclaim the glorious gospel, which has done so much for him, to the immense masses of blind idolaters around us, before they sink down to eternal wo, without a knowledge of the only true God, and of Jesus Christ, who came to save sinners, and I hope his warm appeal to you will not be in vain. If you saw the dignified and sweet-tempered man, with a countenance beaming forth the happiness within, and the peace of God he has obtained through the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ, you would, I am sure, say that the conversion from heathenism of even one such Christian, is worth all the labour that our church has bestowed upon India. But we have many others in our mission, whose Christian character ranks high also, and are an honour to the gospel. We have been trying to raise up a native ministry here, but, as you may suppose, the materials are yet scanty, and we require many more foreign missionaries to become centres of usefulness, and to aid us in gathering up the men to be educated for Christ's service among their countrymen. India must be evangelized by her own sons; but for many years to come these men must be educated and superintended in their labours by Christian ministers from the west, full of zeal and heavenly wisdom, of far-reaching views and wide philanthropy. I do not know a field of greater prospective usefulness than the broad theatre of foreign missions. I do not believe that superior talents or extensive acquirements are more requisite in any part of the world, than among the subtle Brahmins and Pundits of Hindustan, who must be hunted out of their lying refuges behind the ramparts that thousands of ages have raised around them. I mention these things to show you the falsity of the opinion too prevalent at home, that any kind of a man will do for India, or for a foreign mission, and that superior talents should be reserved for the great cities of Christendom, or for the domestic field. Those who talk in this way are ignorant of what the work of a foreign missionary is. No one who has lived long among the heathen, and has had to contend with false systems of religion, will join in this opinion. I wish, therefore, that such of you as think of coming to India—and I trust many of you will come—will make thorough work in your education while you enjoy the great privileges of a Seminary such as that now so well organized, and so ably conducted for your benefit. Those of you who come here will need all the acquirements you can make, as well as all the grace and spiritual strength that may be given you, in the discharge of the varied duties that will devolve upon you. When you come here you are not going out of the world, but coming into its very centre, and to a people that were comparatively civilized, when our forefathers were bloody and ferocious savages! Come out, therefore, well armed. You will have to contend with spiritual wickedness in high places. You must "stand fast in the faith, quit yourselves like men and be strong." Come in the strength of Him who calls you into his service, and will not send you on a warfare at your own charges. The struggle with the powers of darkness may be long and difficult, but the victory is certain and the reward sure. I trust I may live to meet and welcome many of you as fellow labourers with us here. All the other brethren will give you an equally cordial reception. No one of us has ever regretted having joined the missionary work, nor will any of you who may come out in a proper spirit, and with right views of the labours you undertake. Self-sacrifice, and a renouncing of all worldly prospects, there must be, but all these, and more, will be made up to him who is willing to leave all for Christ and his cause. See the reward promised, and as sure as heaven can make it. See Luke xviii. 29, 30. Excuse this hasty note, written after bed-time. May I hope to receive a letter from you before you separate at the end of the session? With much love to all,

Yours sincerely,

J. R. Campbell.

CHOCTAW MISSION.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE STATION AT LIVING LAND.

My report to you at this time will, of necessity, be short, for there has not been any changes worthy of note since I made my first report. The churches under my care are the same, and my labours are the same. There has been but one added since that time, and that one was received by letter to this church, making nine in all added this year.

Total number in Living Land church - - -	83
" " " Mayhew " - - -	40
" " " Chish Oktak " - - - -	40

The Mayhew church is nearly broken up. The best and most substantial members have moved away, and their influence for good has gone with them. There has been no increase during the year. The Methodists and Cumberlands have got most of the stray sheep of this flock.

The church at Chish Oktak stands quite fair, and is doing very well. Five have been added to it this year. The members, with two or three exceptions, maintain a good standing as Christians. Thirteen have been received on examination, and one by letter, making fourteen in all.

I have four preaching places, and the attendance is good at all save one, that is within the bounds of the Mayhew church. If my health permits, I visit each of these places once a month. The people listen to the word preached, but there is not that unction attending it that we have seen in former years. In fact, there are quite a number of circumstances that are calculated to occupy their minds at the present time. One is their destitute and suffering state. Indeed, if they do not get help from some source within the next month, their condition will be deplorable. If all the corn in the Nation was divided out, it would not sustain them till the first of March. Many have not an ear at the present time; those who are out live on those who have; but this cannot last long. We have seen hard times before, but nothing like the present.

We have a day-school at this place, which is now taught by Mrs. Mary J. Hotchkin. The whole number in attendance is twenty-eight; but they do not come regularly—they do not have food regularly. I have known some come without breakfast or dinner. Those who are regular in their attendance are doing well. Within the bounds of this church there is another day-school, of twenty-five, who are taught by a native female. This school is doing very well. There is a fine of twenty-five cents for every day absent, without a good reason; this law works admirably there. If we could get suitable teachers, the day-schools would do great good amongst this people.

The intemperate part of our people are wasting away. Last Monday one was shot dead by a grocery keeper near here. A short time after, the man who shot the Indian was also shot, and, it is supposed, mortally wounded. I do not know of any who have reformed who have gone back to their cups, but those who never reformed are fast passing away.

Affectionately and truly yours,

E. Hotchkin.

JAPAN.

The following letter from Dr. Hepburn, dated Kanagawa, January 4th, will be found interesting and instructive.

My Dear Sir—I am a great walker—I love to roam over this beautiful country. I generally strike for the woods; its stillness is congenial. There is no difficulty in finding a path; they are innumerable, and running in every direction, almost always ending in some more travelled road, or in a farm-house. I avoid the Tokaido, and the streets of the town as much as possible, there are so many annoyances. The principal one is from dogs, of which there are a great many, and all without owners. They look well fed, however, and are very much at home with the people. The moment they see a foreigner, they commence to bark, and run to get out of the way. This barking extends from one to another, along the whole street, and I am glad to get out of the din. In the streets, too, we meet the curious and the endless salutations of the children, "ohaiyo," "onata," "jiki-jiki," "tojin," "baka," "yeka," which, being translated, mean literally, "good morning," "you," "quick, quick," "Chinaman," "fool," "good," but which in spirit are, perhaps, nine times out of ten, impertinences, and unmeaning familiarities, which they never think of using to one another, especially to those above them. To be sure, we meet with the same thing in the country, but not to such a degree of annoyance. To-day, I took my umbrella, as it looked like rain, and made for the hills, passing through a street built upon the banks of a little stream which runs near our temple. Just at the end of this street are two places under a clump of large trees, where the dead bodies of priests and nuns are burnt. I once witnessed such an operation at this place, and several of them at Hakodadi, where I believe, all dead bodies are burnt. Passing through the paddy fields, I passed within twenty yards of a large flock of storks, white and grey, when erect at least four feet high, very tame. They were quietly feeding, and evinced no signs of alarm. In my walks through the woods I meet, just at this season, with persons cutting fire-wood, women raking leaves together, and piling them into large baskets, which they carry on their back into the town, to burn—women with large bundles of sticks, and small bamboos, to be used in the same way—men leading horses loaded with fire-wood, or carrying it in baskets attached to the ends of a pole, across the shoulder. Sometimes I meet farmers sitting on their horses, returning from town, occasionally with loud laughing, or a merry tune, especially if they have been taking a little too much sake, (Japanese rum), to which they are too generally addicted. These country people are very civil; if they salute, it is politely done, and give the way. I find they are generally afraid of foreigners, and often seem relieved, and take a long breath when they get past. My old black cane is an especial object of attention. They think it is some kind of fire-arm, and if I stop and talk to them, it is the first thing they examine, and seem quite surprised when they find it is only a stick. I expect that I am myself a great puzzle to these simple country people. They wonder at my walking so much, and in such out of the way places—the object they cannot divine. I expect they think I am surveying the country, and searching out all its intricacies, in order to besiege it at some future day. I have a small pocket compass which I use to map off some places, but I take good care not to let them see me use it, or all their fears would be confirmed. I find it is quite a common belief among the Japanese, even the most intelligent and better informed, that foreigners wish to seize the country and change their institutions. This feeling has taken such a strong hold of them, and is apparently so confirmed by the war and conduct of foreigners in China, that it is difficult to disabuse them of it.

January 7th. We are again in the midst of another excitement, something similar to the one we had last spring. There seems to be the greatest agitation amongst the Japanese officials, but what it is about, is very hard to find out. They seem to be seized with a kind of panic. There is some great trouble amongst them. One of the Governors of Foreign Affairs in Yedo, has committed the harakiri (suicide.) Many and various reasons are given for it, but the truth cannot be d scovered. One thing is certain, however, that it is something connected with foreign matters. This is not the whole trouble. It is said there are some five hundred men in arms, who are disaffected with the present government, and endeavouring to annoy it, and involve it in war with foreign nations. These men are banded together, and are defying the government, living in a place some eighty miles to the north-east of us. They have secret emissaries in Yedo, and in Yokohama, and in this place, so they say, ready to assassinate all the foreigners they can get hold of. The government have been very anxious that all who live in Kanagawa, should remove over to Yokohama, for our greater security. They say they can protect us there, but the Consuls refuse to go. They have doubled the guard at all the houses of the Foreign Minister residing at Yedo, and increased the military force in this region, by several hundred men. They have manned the new fort constructed last year at Kanagawa, moved two small war ships they have, a little further out into the bay. They have also some three hundred soldiers, with two field-pieces, stationed in the custom-house at Yokohama. There seems to be quite a stir and anxiety amongst them, but it seems all uncalled for, to us. We see no enemy. They seem to be taken by some imaginary panic, which we cannot account for. Some think it is all a ruse to get foreigners away from Kanagawa, over to Yokohama, where they can have us more under their thumb. I am inclined, however, to think they are sincere, and are really concerned for the safety of foreigners. They perceive some danger which we do not. We know so little about the country, the government, or the people, that a civil war may be impending, though unperceived by us. Of one thing I am more and more convinced, the longer I live here, that the government is almost powerless against the Daimios, or nobles, and that it would take but a small determined force to overturn it. The lower classes are ruled with a rod of iron, and have but few privileges. The Daimios are too powerful to be interfered with. The government might almost be called an oligarchy. They have a strange system, and I doubt whether any foreigners yet understand much about it.

Jan. 19th. I did not intend when I commenced this letter to be always telling you about troubles; but just now, these seem to be the only interesting subjects. Poor Mr. Hewskin, Mr. Harris's interpreter, has been cruelly murdered at Yedo. This occurred on the night of the 14th inst. He had been acting as interpreter for the Prussians, who are now here making a treaty with the Japanese. After a late dinner, he was returning home, about nine o'clock at night, when he was waylaid, and murdered. He was on horseback, had three Japanese policemen riding with him, and four men carrying lanterns, and yet he was murdered. He was attacked by some seven men, it is said. This is a very sad affair. It deprives Mr. Harris of a most useful assistant, who has been with him through all his residence here, and been almost his only companion. The cause of this murder is involved in mystery. Mr. Hewskin was a most amiable and inoffensive man, and very popular with all the Japanese who knew him. He was better known than any man in Yedo, nor is it known that he ever gave any one offence, that he should thus take revenge on him. This affair has greatly shocked the whole foreign community, and made us again feel uneasy. What Mr. Harris will do in this matter we know not. I do not believe the government are at all implicated, or had anything to do with it. They sincerely regret it, and sympathize with Mr. Harris; but that they can do anything to catch the offenders, and bring them to punishment, no one believes. They could not, or have not done so in the case of the Russians, or Dutchmen who were murdered some time ago, nor will they be more fortunate, I think, in this case. It only confirms our fears that there is some reason for the vigilance which the government now exhibits, which we cannot sufficiently estimate. It is another proof, too, of their weakness.

Jan. 28th. All the foreign ministers have left Yedo, excepting Mr. Harris. Mr. Alcock, the English minister, has gone to Yokohama; Mr. Bellecourt, the French, has come to Kanagawa; the Dutch minister goes to Nagasaki. They leave Yedo because of the danger of living there, and the inability of the Japanese government to protect them. They have come down here, and protect themselves with their own marines and ships of war. The English consul has gone over to Yokohama, and is now living with the minister. The English, Dutch, and French consulates and legations are all protected by marines with muskets. Mr. Harris believes he is in no more danger in Yedo now than he has always been, and is as safe there as he would be here, and remains at his post. He is the only foreigner now in Yedo. The English and French ministers have made some protest and demand upon the Japanese, in which Mr. Harris cannot join them. There is a want of unanimity amongst them; but we plebeians are not in these state secrets. We all feel, however, that things are coming to a crisis between the Japanese and foreign governments—what the result will be, we cannot foresee. War seems to be threatening; if so, this will be no place for us. One thing, however, we feel sure of—that the Lord reigns, and will bring good out of all this seeming confusion. We try continually to commit our lives, and our work, and the interests of his kingdom in this empire, to him, without much anxiety, believing that he will make the wrath of man to praise him.

Our dear brother Nevius and wife leave us in a few days for Shanghai, to return to Ningpo. I do not wonder that he wishes to return to his old field of labour. His heart is there; he is fully qualified for the work, and he can be perhaps far more useful; and that mission needs him. We are sorry to lose him.

I am still making the language my principal work. My Japanese patients are increasing; and I have got to a stage in which I might be more actively useful amongst the people, if the door was opened. I am sending to Shanghai for a supply of Chinese books from our press, to distribute as I find opportunity. I should like to open a dispensary, but I do not think there is any prospect of my succeeding in so doing.

Jan. 31st. Mr. and Mrs. Nevius leave us to-morrow, and will carry this letter as far as Shanghai. We are all quiet just now. We hear that an English fleet is coming over from Shanghai, both for protection to foreigners, and intimidation to the Japanese government.

Please remember us affectionately to all our friends in the Mission-house. Yours, truly,

J C. Hepburn.

The following letter from Mr. Nevius, of the 20th of February, who has just returned from Japan to Shanghai, gives his views of the prospects of the mission at the former place, and will be read with interest.

Yours of December 1st reached us day before yesday, the next day after our arrival in this place. The reception of it at such a time was very opportune, on account of the help it gives us in forming our plans for the future.

Mrs. Nevius has returned with health very much improved, but it is evident to all that anything more than a temporary residence at Ningpo or Shanghai would soon bring back her old disorder. The brethren here seem desirous that I should go to the North with Mr. Gayley, whose removal from Shanghai seems to be imperative. I had expected, in case of not being able to return to Hang-chow, to spend the summer in the hills near Ningpo. I hope, wherever I go, to spend most of my time in getting ready for the press some books which I have been employed about for several months. I expect to go to Ningpo next week, and hope that our way of duty will soon be made clear before us.

Dr. Hepburn's letters by this mail will no doubt inform you of the present state of things in Kanagawa. I do not apprehend any immediate danger, but the future of Japan is very uncertain. I think the time is not far distant, however, when Japan will be one of our most interesting fields. In many respects, it has decidedly the advantage over China. The people are curious and inquisitive, ready to receive and adopt anything foreign. They have not the self-complacency of the Chinese, who regard themselves as already possessing everything that is worth knowing about religion and philosophy, and they have no aversion to regarding foreigners as their teachers. At the same time, the fact that Christianity has been interdicted, may, in the end, prove an advantage rather than a hindrance. Our religion has thus been brought prominently before the public mind, and invested with an interest which would not otherwise attach to it. In Japan we will probably meet with much less of the indifference and apathy which are so discouraging here. There are evident signs of progress in the missionary work in Japan already. Missionaries cannot only reside there, but distribute Chinese tracts, and converse privately (as far as they are able) with persons interested to know more about the truth. A good deal of interest has been manifested in some particular cases, and a knowledge of the missionaries, and of our religion, has already begun to be diffused among the people. When our missionaries are able to prepare and print religious books in Japanese, a great deal may be expected from the distribution of Bibles and tracts, as there is, perhaps, no heathen nation where so large a proportion of its inhabitants, male and female, can read intelligibly. The character which is best understood, and most in use among the common people, is, however, of such a form, that it will be very difficult to print it with metallic type. This is what is called the Hivigagana form of writing. The characters run into each other, and the shape of each is determined, in a measure, by the characters which precede and follow it. There is a good deal of hard work to be done in Japan, in studying the language, before much can be accomplished, and I trust it will not be long before other men are sent out to assist in it.

We came back by the inland sea, by way of Nagasaki, and were very much struck with the beauty and resources of the country. The new port which is next to be opened at Osaca, is a beautiful and thriving place, and will probably combine the most advantages for a mission station.

At Nagasaki the people seem more communicative and friendly, and there seems to be fewer hindrances to missionary work. Both merchants and missionaries are far less subject to annoyances from officials than at Kanagawa. This is probably owing to the latter place being nearer the capital.

Leaving it to others to inform you of the Shanghai and Ningpo news, I am,

Yours very truly and affectionately,

JOHN L. NEVIUS.

INDIA.—ROORKEE STATION.

The following letter, though published in another journal, will not be less acceptable to our readers, and will make a good impression of the state and prospects of the mission at this place.

Rev. J. N. McLeod, D. D.

My Dear Brother—I herewith forward a copy of my Annual Report for the past year. It is brief, and not very interesting. Had there been more assiduity in the Lord's work on my part, during the last twelve-month, his blessing would, no doubt, have been more abundantly granted. At a moderate calculation, four or five thousand in this place have, during the past year, learned, more or less, of the plan of salvation, and we hope that some of this number will, in time, declare themselves on the Lord's side.

As my report mentions, I have made a commencement of itinerating in my own District. I am spending, at present, a few days at home, in order to send my Annual Report to our Mission, which meets this year at Sabathú, and also to despatch the accompanying copy to America. A few days hence I intend (D. V.) to go out again on the same errand, and hope to be able, during the present cold season, to visit a good number of the towns and villages in my parish. I here append a sample of my Journal.

"*Manglaur, Nov. 8th, 1860—Came out last evening at sunset in order to be ready for work here at an early hour this morning. I rose at daylight, and after getting matters adjusted, set off, in company with my Scripture Reader, to the bazaar. He soon collected an audience, and Samuel having expatiated some time on the nature of sin, &c., I followed with an explanation of the manner in which God can be just, and yet justify the sinner. After presenting the doctrine, as I thought, in the clearest light possible, I inquired of a bystander, a respectable looking Hindoo, what he understood of the matter. His reply rendered it very evident that he had not the most remote idea of the truths just announced. I then repeated the substance of what I had said, and inquired a second time of the same individual whether he yet understood the doctrine. His reply now showed that he had a slight impression of my meaning, and only a slight one. Surely, 'line upon line, and precept,' are needed in preaching to the heathen. A young Mohammedan in the crowd seemed very much dissatisfied with what had been advanced in reference to an innocent person's suffering in the room of the guilty. Nor did he relish the doctrine of man's inability to perform what God requires of him. I endeavoured to enlighten him on both these points. He was silenced, but still gave evident signs of dissatisfaction. Thus labouring until I became weary, I retired for a few hours to my tent. After dinner, Samuel and I sallied forth again, and took up our position in a different part of the town. We had a long discussion with some Bramins with regard to pantheism. It was, of course, the same old story over again—Brahm was in everything, and everything was Brahm. I endeavoured to refute them by proving that they themselves, in practice, were diametrically opposed to this theory. When they were, in a measure, silenced on this point, they urged that it would be a dreadful sin to leave the religion of their forefathers—a very favourite argument with the Hindus. To this I replied that they had, to all intents and purposes, forsaken the system of their forefathers; that the religion inculcated in the Veds, (Vaids,) which their ancestors followed, they had absolutely discarded. They were quite nonplussed by this argument, and embracing the opportunity, I endeavoured to make known to them the only system by which the sinner can find acceptance with God, his Creator. Before finishing what I had to say, one of the Bramins began to interrupt me with their grand objection to Christianity—its granting liberty of taking life. In reply, I intimated to them that the same objection would lie against Hinduism. The Bramin Sepoys, during the mutiny, were foremost in the slaughter of women and children. As an example, I gave them instances of what Bramins would do, in the conduct of thier brethren at the Cawnpore massacre; that they not only took life, but evinced the most horrid barbarity in transfixing little infants with their bayonets, and then held them aloft in the air, exulting in their own fiendish cruelty. This argument had its due effect on the large crowd that had collected around us. They seemed, for the first time, to open their eyes to the fact that the practice of their Bramins was totally at variance with their teaching, on the subject of taking life. I was now permitted to proceed with my discourse, and I trust that some present were persuaded that Christianity is a more excellent way than Hinduism.

Nov. 9th—This morning, as Samuel and I were proceeding to our daily work in the bazaar, we passed an old Bramin at his puja—Hindu worship. Several implements employed in his mummery were lying before him. Among other things, there was a large conch shell, which he blows before commencing his puja, by way of calling the attention of all around to himself. On the present occasion, however, there were no witnesses of his piety but a single individual sitting by, who evidently cared very little about the process. When Samuel and I came forward, he was muttering something to himself, and every few minutes throwing a little water into his mouth with a small spoon he held in his hand. Two or three times he put his right arm over his head, and with that hand closed his left nostril. Several other manœuvres were performed by him equally significant. The whole thing was so utterly silly and stupid, that it was really astonishing that a human being could be found so devoid of common sense as to engage in it. It is worthy of remark that pujaris (worshippers) are seldom found these days, even amongst the Bramins. In my address to the crowd this morning in the bazaar, I took occasion to refer to the present scarcity of provision as an evidence of God's displeasure against the inhabitants of this part of the country. This was readily acknowledged. They were then told of the danger of their incurring the displeasure of God in a far greater degree in the next world, and urged to "repentance towards God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ," while the door of mercy was still open to them. In the afternoon we preached to a large crowd in the outskirts of the town, many of whom seemed to be really impressed with the truth of what was spoken. To-day the young Mohammedan, mentioned in yesterday's entry, came to my tent with a view of discussing the respective merits of Christianity and Mohammedanism. I really felt an interest in the youth. He seems to possess considerable intelligence, and little or none of that disgusting hauteur so generally displayed by his class, especially towards missionaries. As I sit in my tent, I am disturbed by the funeral cry, 'Rám nám sat hai! Rám nám sat hai!' Rám is one of their names for the Supreme Being. The above may, therefore, be translated, 'God's name is true! God's name is true!' The original idea, no doubt, was that God had not done wrong in removing the soul of the deceased from time to eternity. It is quite possible that some such idea may still be attached to the expression."

The above may suffice for the present.

During my absence from the station, the school, preaching in the bazaar, &c., are conducted by M'Leod. He is really becoming a very useful man, and I trust he may have grace given him to qualify him still further for the Lord's work amongst his fellow-countrymen.

J. CALDWELL.

THE JEWS.

The rule of the Sultan over Syria was virtually at an end when the French entered it last summer. No one believes that the Sultan's rule will ever be restored. To give Syria back to him would be the signal for outbreak and massacre among its hostile tribes. What, then, is to be done with it? Shall the French be permitted to retain it? This is impossible. To deliver over Palestine to France would be to put into her hand the key of India. Shall Russia be permitted to occupy it? This is equally impossible. Britain must keep open her road to her Eastern possessions. She cannot permit her empire to be cut in twain. Shall we colonize Syria ourselves? Though we were willing to do so, neither France nor Russia would permit it. And yet inhabitants must be found for this country. War threatens to embroil the nations if it is not peopled. A neutral and friendly power must possess it; for such only can fulfil the conditions of the problem. We look from east to west, over Europe and Asia. We can discover but one race on the face of the earth that answers all conditions—but one race which the powers interested would consent should occupy this land, and whose occupation of it would accomplish the end sought. That race are the Jews, its rightful heirs.

For two thousand years, and more, prophecy, as we read it, has pointed to this issue. Man was not driven out of his first paradise till he had the promise of another and a fairer. And so the seed of Abraham, before being cast out of their land, had the promise given them of a return. This prophecy has burned like a beacon light upon its hills all through the long ages of its desolation. Its echoes followed the Jew into the most distant lands of his dispersion, upholding him under the world's opprobrium and oppression, and implanting inextinguishable hopes in his breast.—Free Church Home and Foreign Record.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLICATION ROOMS

No. 821 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, donations of books and tracts, the appointment of Colporteurs, the editorial department of the Record and Sabbath-school Visitor, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to the Rev. William E. Schenck, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 821 Chestnut Street.

All communications, reports, remittances of money, and orders, to be addressed to Mr. Winthrop Sargent, Superintendent of Colportage.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. Engles, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to James Dunlap, Esq., Treasurer.

OUR COLPORTAGE FUND.

There are times when a little aid for our Colportage Fund is worth more than a much larger sum at an ordinary time. Our Colportage Fund is now largely overdrawn, and we are obliged continually not only to refuse the services of good men who desire to work as colporteurs, but to let men who have been doing good service to the church in this department, go out of the field for want of money to pay their small salaries. We know how hard it is, in these times, for pastors to keep their people's attention directed to the great benevolent schemes of the General Assembly; but we do earnestly appeal to them to put forth unusual efforts, if necessary, in order to furnish us with the means to keep our colportage work from stopping.

THE LAST YEAR'S WORK.

The abstract of our Annual Report, printed in this number of the Record, will show the encouraging extent to which this colportage work was carried during the last year. Had not the distractions of the times prevented the continuance of the work on the same scale during the last four months of the year, the progress made during the twelvemonth would have been unexampled in the history of the Board. As it is, we have much cause for gratitude to the great Head of the Church that so much has been accomplished.

The coming year now looks unpropitious for the prosecution of this good work, but, confiding in Him who has the hearts of all men in his hands, we shall press forward in the efforts to do whatever may be in our power.

ABSTRACT OF THE TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

The Board reports to the Assembly that its affairs are in a safe condition, and as prosperous as could be reasonably expected at the present time. The sudden death of Joseph P. Engles, Esq., for nearly nineteen years past the Publishing Agent of the Board, is felt to be a great affliction and loss.

During the first part of the year, from March to November, every department of the Board's receipts and operations was largely in advance of the same months in the previous year. Had the same state of business continued to the end of the year, the Board would probably have come out with a very large per centage of increase on the receipts and operations of any previous year. During the remaining four months everything was depressed and set back by the condition of our national and business affairs. Yet, even in these dark times, the Board's plan, to which it has invariably adhered, of so conducting all its affairs as to owe no man anything, has saved it from any loss, save such as is incident to a contraction of its business.

I. Department of Production.

During the year there have been published

44 new books, of which have been printed	70,500	copies.
13 new 12mo. tracts,	35,000	"
3 new 18mo tracts	4,000	"
12 French books and tracts	12,500	"
5 German Catechisms	11,000	"
1 package 32mo (16 small books),	2,000	"
The Presbyterian Almanac for 1861,	21,000	"
Total copies of new publications,	156,000
The reprints of former publications during the year have been
Of books	409,500	"
Of tracts	245,000	"
	654,500

Total number of copies of publications during the year, 810,500

Total number of copies of books and tracts issued by the Board since its organization, 9,600,688

Special notice is taken in the report of the Letters of John Calvin, the fourth volume of which will soon be issued, and will complete this interesting work. Many French books and tracts have also been published this year.

The Board continues to add to its Sabbath-school Library and apparatus. This Library now contains 273 volumes, and is sold for cash, in plain binding, at $43.88.

Of the Home and Foreign Record 15,400 copies are now issued. The number has been considerably reduced by striking from the list a number of persons who had made no payment for several years.

The circulation of the Sabbath-school Visitor has increased within the year from 60,000 to 75,000, and still continues to increase. The improvements made last year receive warm testimonies of approbation from every part of the church. Pastors, Sabbath-school superintendents, and teachers, are earnestly requested to aid in promoting its circulation.

II. Department of Distribution.

1. SALES AT THE DEPOSITORY.

The sales during the year in the Depository have been 225,508 volumes, and 646,951 pages of tracts. The net value of the volumes and tracts thus sold is $35,714.37, which is $4,357.40 less than the amount sold during the year preceding. The Board has sent from the Depository to Theological Seminaries, by order of the General Assembly, and to editors and authors, publications to the additional value of $607.69, making the net value of issues from the bookstore $38,391.78. This is, of course, exclusive of sales and other distributions made by colporteurs, which may be found stated in a later part of this Report. The total catalogue value of the year's issues from the Depository as above, has been $41,247.78.

2. DISTRIBUTIONS BY THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

During a portion of the year, the Distribution Fund, from which all grants are made, was utterly exhausted. It was, however, happily replenished afterwards by the private liberality of several Christian friends.

Within the past year the Committee has granted

To Mission and other needy Sabbath-schools,	2925	vols.
To ships, humane and literary institutions,	663	"
To ministers,	364	"
To feeble churches,	650	"
To individuals for gratuitous distribution,	1081	"
Total of volumes granted	5683
Pages of tracts granted	263,068

The amount received during the year for the Distribution Fund was $2406.46. The amount expended in making the above grants was $1520.30.

Benevolent Christians are asked to remember this Fund. Especially are Sabbath-schools invited to use this appropriate channel for giving libraries to needy and mission Sabbath-schools.

3. DISTRIBUTION BY COLPORTAGE.

In no former year have the colportage operations of the Board been so extensive or so effective. The number of colporteurs in commission during the past year has been 242, an increase of 40 over the number last year reported. During the earlier part of the year, while the resources of the Board permitted it, the number was greatly larger than during the same season of any former year. Owing to the want of funds, their number has been much smaller during the latter part of the year.

These colporteurs have performed within the year, 25,016 days, or, (allowing 313 working days to a year,) 79 years, 289 days of labour. This is an advance of 6,526 days, or nearly 21 years, upon the report of last year. They have sold 154,522 volumes in the course of their itinerations, an increase of 29,884 upon the number sold last year. The number of volumes given away has been 23,733, an increase of 8813 over the year before. The tracts sent out to colporteurs for gratuitous distribution have amounted to 2,372,016 pages, an increase of 209,422 pages upon the preceding year. The number of families visited has been 184,810, a most gratifying gain of 49,426 visits.

All the aspects of colportage work show not only an increase of results accomplished over any former year, but that the colporteurs had given more prominence than usual to the missionary part of their work.

The colporteurs of the Board have, during the year, extended their labours over thirty-four states, territories, and British Provinces. In Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and the Canadas, the work has gone forward prosperously as in former years. In Washington Territory a colporteur has been in commission. In Oregon, a zealous and useful elder has been extensively at work.

The Board having engaged the Rev. S. T. Wells as a District Superintendent of Colportage for the Pacific coast, he was sent out to California some months since, with a large and valuable assortment of the Board's publications. Unfortunately, the state of the times, and the deficiency of our Colportage Fund have greatly retarded his plans since his arrival, but he is making preparations for carrying forward the work vigorously at the earliest possible day.

Evidences of the accompanying power of the Spirit of God are scattered through the reports of the colporteurs.

Total of Distribution.

The distributions of the year from all the statements given, we find to be as follows:

Sales of volumes at the Depository, -	225,508
Sales of volumes by Colporteurs, -	154,522
Volumes given by Colporteurs, - -	23,733
Granted by the Executive Committee,	5,683
Total of volumes distributed,	409,446

Increase of volume circulation, 22,737.

The distribution of pages of tracts has been as follows:

Sales at the Depository, - -	646,951
Distributed by Colporteurs, -	2,372,016
Granted by the Executive Committee,	263,068
Total pages of tracts distributed,	3,282,035

The Board has likewise issued about an average number of 16,000 copies of the Home and Foreign Record monthly, and 72,000 to 75,000 copies of the Sabbath-school Visitor monthly, besides a variety of Reports, Forms for Systematic Beneficence, Sessional Minutes and Registers, Sabbath-school class-books, &c., in considerable numbers.

The net value of these issues of the year is as follows:

Sales in the Depository, - -	$37,784.09
Sent to Seminaries, Authors, Editors, &c., - - - - -	607.69
Sales by Colporteurs, - - -	54,149.75
Home and Foreign Record, -	4,527.37
Sabbath-school Visitor, - -	6,678.21
Total of net value,	$103,747.11

The Catalogue value would be about one hundred and thirteen thousand dollars.

III. Department of Sustentation.

THE TREASURER'S REPORT.

The aggregate of receipts into the Treasury from all sources, excluding of course the balance on hand at the beginning of the year, has been $125,240.76, which is $153.69 less than was received the preceding year.

The aggregate of expenditures has been $137,988.55, which is an increase of $11,955.51, over those of the year before. This increase of expenditures has been chiefly owing to the increased number of colporteurs in the field.

The amount of cash received from sales of books, tracts, and periodicals, has been $93,054.65, a decrease of $527.07.

The balance in the Treasury at the close of the year, (February 28th, 1861,) was $8,750.91.

THE COLPORTAGE FUND.

The amount received for Colportage has been $28,433.97, which is larger by $675.58 than the amount received the year preceding. During the first eight months of the year, the receipts for Colportage were very largely in advance of those received during the same months in any preceding year. So rapid, however, owing to the state of public affairs and of business, was the diminution, that before the end of the year this earlier gain had almost disappeared.*

The expenditures for Colportage during the year have been $38,146.47, a sum exceeding by $9,712.50 the total of receipts. This has increased the balance against the Fund from $3,271.01 to $12,983.51.

The number of contributing churches has been between eight and nine hundred, an increase of more than a hundred on the year before.

The average salary of our colporteurs has been $269.68 per year, or 87 cents per day. This is less than half the average wages of intelligent mechanics and other workmen in any part of the land, and shows that pecuniary gain cannot be the impelling motive in these self-denying labours. The entire cost of the Board's colportage work to the church, including the salary of the colporteur, travelling expenses, freights, cost of books and tracts given away, office expenses in Philadelphia, and everything else connected with the work is, on the average, $476.83 per annum, or $1.52 per day. If we calculate the cost of the work by the visit, instead of by the day or year, it will be found that the colporteur is paid the average sum of 11¾ cents per visit; or that the visit, including all other expenses along with the colporteur's salary, as in the annual cost given above, is about 20¾ cents. The cost of colportage as conducted by the Board, compares very favourably with the same as conducted by other religious bodies.

* Last Report.

NEW BOOKS.

I. Adam and his Times. By John M. Lowrie, D.D. author of "Esther and her Times," and Pastor of the First Presbyterian church, at Fort Wayne, Indiana. 12mo. pp. 291. Price 60 cents. Postage 13 cents.

This is a volume rich in theological instruction, yet every page is level to the comprehension of the unlearned reader. The author discourses ably and impressively upon such themes as the relation of the Old Testament to the New, Adam in Paradise, institution of marriage, the origin and perpetuity of the Sabbath, the origin of evil, the temptation and fall, labour, death, the second Adam, and a variety of kindred topics. The former work of Dr. Lowrie entitled, "Esther and her Times" received high praise from intelligent critics. We are satisfied that this new work is fully equal to its predecessor, if not superior to it.

II. The Child's Pilgrim's Progress. Part First. 32mo. pp. 192. Price 25 cents. Postage 3 cents.

This little volume is merely a simplification of the Pilgrim's Progress, for the use of little children. The editor says:—"No endeavour has been made in this little book to improve Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. To do so, would be simply absurd. To bring prominently into view scenes supposed to be most attractive to children has been attempted, and, while the Dreamer's narrative is preserved, others of less striking character have been thrown into the back ground. The quaint, simple language of the incomparable Bunyan is for the most part retained."

III. The Child's Pilgrim's Progress. Part Second. Christiana and her Children. 32mo. pp. 192. Price 25 cents. Postage 3 cents.

This is a companion volume to the preceding. "A mother leading her children through a sinful world up towards Mount Zion, presents a picture of touching interest. Our great limner (Bunyan) here shows it to us in hallowed light, reflected from the word of God.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ——, (or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c.) to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.

No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

In the present state of the country, the Board of Church Extension deems it proper to confine itself to a very brief statement of its operations during the year.

APPLICATIONS.

The number of applications for aid put on file from April 1, 1860, to April 1, 1861, was one hundred and twenty-one. These applications were from churches in the bounds of thirty Synods, seventy-three Presbyteries, and twenty-seven states and territories. These one hundred and twenty-one churches ask for aid amounting in the aggregate to $55,555.10, averaging $459.13 each.

Besides these new applications filed during the year, there were on file and undisposed of, April 1, 1860, one hundred applications calling for over $43,000. The Board, therefore, had before them during the twelve months under review, two hundred and twenty-one applications, calling for nearly $99,000.

The applications filed during the year, do not, however, so fully and fairly represent the demands made on the Board as the applications duly prepared for its action, some of which had been filed in previous years. The number of applications thus prepared, on which the Board were called to act definitely in the period under review, was ninety-seven, calling for $46,792.41.

During the year, five applications, calling for $7250 were declined for want of funds, and forty-six applications calling for $10,725 were stricken from the file, because the requisite information had not been furnished in the two years allowed for that purpose.

There remained on file and undisposed of, April 1, 1861, applications from ninety-four churches, calling for $36,116.75. A very unusual number of these were ready to be acted upon when the year closed.

APPROPRIATIONS.

During the year ending April 1, 1861, appropriations amounting to $26,863.91 were made to seventy-five churches, in the bounds of fifty-four Presbyteries, and twenty-four states and territories. Leaving out of view "The Children's Church at St. Anne," the average amount appropriated to each of the remaining churches was $218.86. Their names and localities, together with the names and localities of the seven churches from whom appropriations amounting to $1150 were withdrawn during the year, may be found in the Appendix to this report.

From April 1, 1860, to April 1, 1861, seventy-seven churches received their appropriations. The amount paid to them was $28,421.08.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

The appropriated balance in the Treasury, April 1, 1860, was $15,585.71. The receipts during the year were $29,892.61. Of this sum, $23,317.76 was from churches, Sabbath-schools, and children, and $6574.85 from legacies and other sources. The available means of the year, therefore, were $45,478.32.

The expenditures of the year, as shown by the Treasurer's statement in the Appendix, were $31,603.77, leaving in the Treasury, April 1, 1861, an appropriated balance of $13,874.55. There were, however, unpaid at that date, appropriations amounting to $16,315.65. The liabilities, therefore, of the Board exceeded the means on hand at the close of the year $2441.10.

COST OF CHURCH EDIFICES.

The Board have continued to act upon the conviction that the gifts of the benevolent should not be used to build expensive churches. Since its organization, July 1855, appropriations have been made to four hundred and eleven different churches. Of these, fifty-three were special appropriations, for which the Board is not responsible. As nearly as can be ascertained, the remaining three hundred and fifty-eight church edifices cost $728,740, or $2036 a-piece.

If the Children's Church, and the special donations the Board did not control be left out of view, the average cost of the churches the Board aided during the year was $1670 each.

THE CHILDREN'S CHURCH.

In obedience to the directions of the last General Assembly, the Board entered promptly on the work of furnishing the necessary church-edifices to our Canadian French people in Illinois. St. Anne and the surrounding points were visited and examined in the month of June last, by the Secretary. He found all with whom he could consult, clear in the conviction that a church ought at once to be erected at St. Anne, capable of seating at least one thousand persons. Those in charge of the colony had already begun to quarry and haul stone for the church, in order to furnish employment and food for the people until their crops could ripen. This state of affairs, with the expensiveness of lumber, and the general impression that a very large frame building would not be safe in such an exposed prairie locality, led the Board to undertake the erection of a stone church at St. Anne. To secure the necessary means, a special appeal in behalf of this enterprise was made to the children and Sabbath-school children of the church. Most nobly have they responded, the Board having received $9333.01, for this object. As the various contributions for the Children's Church at St. Anne, as the building has appropriately been named, have been fully acknowledged elsewhere, and the house is not yet finished, we reserve a more detailed statement for a future report. Great difficulties have for some months beset the work among the Canadian French in Illinois, but the indications of the will of God have been such as to make it clear that the church ought to be completed as soon as possible.

CONCLUSION.

In closing this Report, we must express our gratitude to God, that he has put it into the hearts of his people to contribute, through us, more than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in the last six years for the work of Church Extension, and that with this sum more than four hundred churches have been aided in securing suitable sanctuaries. It is our conviction that the same amount of money has seldom accomplished more for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom, and that, when the results are fully manifest, every contributor will greatly rejoice in his gifts to this work of the Lord.

By order of the Board,

John F. Cowan, President.

H. I. Coe, Secretary.

The Rev. Alsace Nash, of the Presbytery of Grand River, the Rev. W. N. Cleaveland, of the Presbytery of Brooklyn, and the Rev. J. Sinclair, of the Presbytery of Long Island, N. Y. were received into the Presbytery of Long Island at its late meeting.

The Rev. E. P. Noel and the Fairmount church, St. Louis, were received into the Presbytery of St. Louis at their late meeting.

The Rev. Heman H. Allen, owing to a disease of his throat, has been compelled to resign his charge as pastor of the Bethel church, and has accepted the appointment of financial agent of Danville Theological Seminary and Centre College. Letters addressed to him at Danville will reach him.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met in the Seventh church, Philadelphia, on Thursday, the 16th of May, and was opened with a sermon, by the Rev. J. W. Yeomans. D. D., the last Moderator, from the text, John xviii. 36. "My kingdom is not of this world." After the sermon, the Committee on Commissions reported the Commissioners present, and proceeded to the election of a Moderator, which resulted in the choice of the Rev. John C. Backus, D. D., of Baltimore. The Rev. D. J. Waller, of Northumberland Presbytery, was chosen Temporary Clerk. Our space will not permit us to give any outline of the business before it. The next General Assembly is appointed to be held at Columbus, Ohio.

FORM OF BEQUEST FOR DISABLED MINISTERS OR FAMILIES OF DECEASED MINISTERS.

I give and bequeath to my executors hereinafter named, ——— dollars, in trust, nevertheless, that they shall within ——— months after my decease, pay the same to George H. Van Gelder, Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, or to his successor for the time being in said office, for the use of such disabled ministers, and their families, as the said, The Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America shall or may designate.

NOTA.—This form will do for a pecuniary bequest. If stocks, or land, or other property is given, the phraseology should be modified to suit the case.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST

TO ANY OF THE

BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Is the organ of the Boards of Domestic Missions, Education, Foreign Missions, Publication, and the Board of Church Extension, and is issued monthly in newspaper form at Fifty Cents a year for a single copy, and in pamphlet form at One Dollar. Fifty copies or more to one address, at Twenty-five Cents a year: and all churches of less than fifty families at the same price, provided not less than twenty copies to one address are ordered. Payment in advance.

Address, Mr. Peter Walker, 821 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia."

POSTAGE, in Pennsylvania, 3 cents per annum, and all other States 6 cents, paid in advance at office of delivery.

Packages of the Home and Foreign Record are delivered free of charge in New York, Baltimore, Louisville, Cincinnati, Wheeling and Pittsburgh.

AN OFFER.—Any missionary, colporteur, or other person, procuring new subscribers to the Record at 50 cents each, shall be entitled to 20 per cent. for each such subscription procured and prepaid.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The annual meeting of the Board of Domestic Missions was held on Tuesday, June the 4th, and was largely attended. The following officers were elected:

President, Rev. JOHN MCDOWELL, D. D.
Vice-President, Rev. HENRY STEELE CLARKE, D.D.
Recording Secretary, MATTHEW NEWKIRK.
Corresponding Secretary, Rev. THOMAS L. JANEWAY, D. D.
Treasurer, SAMUEL D. POWEL.
Superintendent of Missions on the Pacific Coast, Rev. R. HAPPERSETT, D. D.

ABSTRACT OF THE FIFTY-NINTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

FROM MARCH 1, 1860, TO MARCH 1, 1861.

In the performance of their duty, the Board of Domestic Missions respectfully present to the General Assembly their Fifty-ninth Annual Report. Whatever of good may have been effected by our instrumentality, we desire humbly and thankfully to ascribe to the Almighty, and to invoke his continued guidance and blessing in all our future operations. In exhibiting the doings and results of the past year, we shall follow the order of arrangement heretofore observed, as this method will facilitate a comparison with former years.

OPERATIONS OF THE YEAR.

OF MISSIONS.—Statistical Details.—The number of missionaries in commission March 1, 1860, was 499, to which have been added, to March 1, 1861, 298, making the whole number 797, and more by 106 than the year previous.

The number of churches and missionary stations wholly or in part supplied, (as far as reported,) by our missionaries, is 1,239.

The number of newly organized churches is 52.

The number of admissions on examination is 2,429, and on certificate 1,689; making a total of admissions of 4,118.

The number in communion with churches connected with the Board is 29,013.

The number of Sabbath-schools is 438; of teachers 3,712; and of scholars 23,208.

The number of baptisms is 3,255.

Of the 797 missionaries who have been in commission during the year, 251 have sent in no special report for the Assembly—a little less than one-third of the whole number; consequently we must increase all the returns one-third to make them correct.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The appropriations made to our missionaries from March 1, 1860, to March 1, 1861, have been, at the office in Philadelphia, $76,126.25; at the office in Louisville, $39,179.50; and on behalf of the South-Western Advisory Committee, at New Orleans, $15,561; making a total of $130,866.75.

The appropriations made to our missionaries, from March 1, 1859, to March 1, 1860, were, at the office in Philadelphia, $75,011.57; at the office in Louisville, $48,580.58; and on behalf of the South-Western Advisory Committee at New Orleans, $2,212,50; making a total of $125,804.65.

From this statement, it appears that the appropriations made at the office in Philadelphia, were greater than those made the year before, $1,114 68; at the office in Louisville, they were less by $9,401.08; and on behalf of the South-Western Advisory Committee they were greater by $13,348.50; thus making the total appropriations this year greater than the year preceding by $5,062.10.

For the purpose of further comparison we may state that the average appropriations made during the preceding eight years, from 1852 to 1860, were, at the office in Philadelphia, $54,055.84, and at the office in Louisville, $33,982.34; making a total average of $88,038.18.

From this statement it appears that the appropriations made from March 1, 1860, to March 1, 1861, at the office in Philadelphia, exceeded the average of those made during the eight previous years $22,070.41; and at the office in Louisville, $5,197 16; thus making a total excess of appropriations this year, in these two fields, above the average appropriations of the eight preceding years, $27,267.57.

As the missionary appointments are made for six or twelve months, and are scattered over the whole year, of course a large number of the appropriations made during the year have not yet fully matured, but will be falling due as the present year advances.

RECEIPTS.

The total amount of receipts from all sources, from March 1, 1860, to March 1, 1861, is $113,393.87, to which add balances on hand in the different treasuries, March 1, 1860, $29,911.29; making the available resources of the Board during the year $143,305.16.

The amount paid out at the office in Philadelphia, including the Presbyterial treasuries, was $96,094.37; at the office in Louisville, $18,929.76; and at the office in New Orleans, $17,387.30; making the total amount of payments during the year $132,411.43—leaving in all the treasuries, on the 1st of March, 1861, $10,893.73, which is a smaller sum by $19,017.56, than that reported on the 1st of March, 1860. Of this balance of $10,893.73, only $16.70 can be appropriated by the Board to the general field, as all the rest belongs to, and is held by the South-Western Advisory Committee and the Independent treasuries, for disbursement within their respective fields. The amount due the missionaries, on the 1st of March, 1861, including $7,449.80 for services which had been rendered and actually reported, was $28,332.71, which is more by $17,438.98 than the whole sum remaining in the various treasuries at that time.

From the above statements it appears that the aggregate balance, in all the treasuries, on the 1st of March, 1861, was less by $19,017.56, than on the 1st of March, 1860. The balances in the treasuries at Philadelphia and Louisville on the 1st of March, 1860, was $17,291.66; and on the 1st of March, 1861, there was in both treasuries only $16.70, while at the same time there was a debt unpaid of $7,449.80 for missionary services reported. Thus showing that with regard to the treasuries at Philadelphia and Louisville, the financial condition of the Board was worse by $24.724.76, on the 1st of March, 1861, than at the same date the preceding year.

The aggregate receipts, from March 1st, 1860, to March 1st, 1861, have been less, as compared with the receipts from March 1st, 1859, to March 1st, 1860, $5,510.34. There has been a decrease, in individual or special donations and legacies, at the office in Philadelphia, of $13,499.06, an increase at the office in Louisville of $1,561.80, and a decrease at the office in New Orleans of $1,693, making the total amount received from individual or special donations and legacies, less by $13,630.26 than the preceding year. There has been a decrease in receipts from churches, at Philadelphia, of $342.58, an increase at the office in Louisville of $3,865.12, an increase at the office in New Orleans of $4,195.28, and an increase in the Independent treasuries of $402.10; making the total increase of receipts from churches $8,119.92. The receipts at the office in Philadelphia, from all sources, were less by $13,439.54; were greater at the office in Louisville by $5,426.92, and greater at New Orleans by $2,502.28 than the preceding year.

OUR MISSIONS.

During the year, the Board have established new missions in various sections of our country, as well in larger cities and towns, as in smaller villages and rural districts. They have also, to the extent of their ability, reinforced our missionaries in the newer States and Territories. One missionary has been added to the number in Arkansas, three in California, one in Delaware, one in the District of Columbia, seven in Illinois, nine in Indiana, two in Kansas, ten in Kentucky, fifteen in Louisiana, two in Maryland, one in Massachusetts, two in Michigan, six in Minnesota, eight in Mississippi, one in Missouri, one in Nebraska, nine in New Jersey, four in North Carolina, six in Ohio, eleven in Pennsylvania, three in Tennessee, nine in Texas, and four in Virginia. The number of missionaries in Alabama has been reduced one, in Florida one, in Iowa two, in New York one, in Oregon one, in Washington two, and in Wisconsin two. Thus we have a total increase of one hundred and six missionaries.

As the receipts of the Board have not been in proportion to the expanded operations of the Board, it has been found necessary to commence a gradual reduction of our appropriations, and this must be continued from necessity, unless the receipts are augmented.

We state in this connection, as heretofore, that we have continued to employ a number of missionaries among our foreign population. Three have laboured among the French, one among the Welsh, and twenty-seven among the Germans. Many of our missionaries labouring in the Southern States devote a portion of their time to the coloured population.

During the year, sixty of our missionaries have been employed as itinerants. A large portion of our missionaries perform more or less of such service, but the above number are either wholly or almost entirely thus employed.

CLOTHING.

Clothing valued at $19,832.73 has been received during the year, and distributed among the missionaries who needed it. Of this amount, $12,119.71 was received at the office in Philadelphia, $4,140.73 at the office in Louisville, $1,457.45 at the depot in Pittsburg, and $2,114.84 at the new office in New Orleans.

SALARIES OF MISSIONARIES.

The Board have, during the year, increased the average appropriation to our missionaries, as compared with the year preceding. The people have, also, during the year, increased the average salary paid by them to their ministers. The increase in the average appropriation made by the Board to the missionaries, during the year, is $12.68; and the average increase in the salary paid by the people is $16.73; making a total average increase of $29.41.

The total average salary from the Board and the people amounted to $566.04.

SYSTEMATIC BENEFICENCE.

As the General Assembly have invited the Boards of the church to co-operate with the Presbyteries in carrying into effect the plan of Systematic Beneficence, we deem it eminently proper that we should report from time to time, the results to this Board, of this Systematic Plan. Seven years have elapsed since this scheme was inaugurated. It may now be regarded as the settled policy of our church. Almost all the Presbyteries have adopted it, and resolved to carry it into effect. So far as we can learn, it has met their cordial approbation, and wherever it has been faithfully carried out, the results have been most happy. Our whole ecclesiastical organization is admirably adapted to its efficient working. Nothing can be added to it. And yet we are persuaded that unless Presbyterial supervision, and its collected wisdom is constantly brought to bear upon all the ministers, elders, deacons, and churches, to stimulate them to repeated and active efforts, the end contemplated will not be attained. Much, doubtless, will have been accomplished, when a contribution to each of our Boards shall have been secured from every church in our connection: but infinitely more precious and happy in its results will it be, when in all these churches some plan has been adopted, by which all connected with them, both old and young, rich and poor, shall have the opportunity afforded to share in the blessedness of giving.

We are not always to judge by the aggregate results of any one year of the efficient working of this plan. Disturbing causes, such as financial prostration, partial failure of the crops, agitations and commotions which may affect the whole or any part of the country, must be taken into consideration. In the year just closed, all these causes seemed to combine to prostrate business, produce want, and destroy confidence to a degree unparalleled in the history of our country. These facts must have their weight when we look at the summary of results, and judge of the efficiency of this scheme by this standard. And yet notwithstanding all this, we are happy to be able to report a very encouraging increase of contributing churches, and quite a large increase in the aggregate amount. The increase of contributing churches over the preceding year has been one hundred and seventeen, making in all one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two churches from which contributions to this Board have this year been received.

This, of course, does not embrace the whole number of churches which have contributed during the year to the general cause of Domestic Missions, but those only whose contributions came through this Board. That the number of non-contributing churches is still very large, is a fact over which the whole church ought to lament. It calls loudly for vigorous exertions on the part of Presbyteries. That very many of these churches, if not all, could have contributed something, there can be no reasonable doubt. Nor in any reasonable mind can there be a question that they ought to have done so.

The Board, acting upon the recommendation of the General Assembly, have endeavoured faithfully to co-operate with the Presbyteries, and, as far as possible, to give efficiency to the scheme. Several Synods and Presbyteries, and many churches, have been visited, and by kind and fraternal correspondence and circular letters, we have endeavoured to impress upon the ministers and officers of the churches that the responsibility of making collections for the Board devolves upon them. If we can succeed in this, the end contemplated by the General Assembly will be attained.

The following table will exhibit what progress has been made in this matter during the last seven years:

Year.	Number of Churches contributing.	Increase.	Whole number of Churches reported in the Minutes of the Assembly.
1854	1207		2976
1855	1256	49	3079
1856	1350	94	3146
1857	1503	153	3251
1858	1702	199	3324
1859	1608, decrease 94		3487
1860	1705	97	3531
1861	1822	117

It will be seen from this table that during the last seven years the number of contributing churches has increased six hundred and fifteen.

ACTION OF THE BOARD, AND ITS RESULTS.

The Board beg leave to state to the General Assembly, that they have endeavoured to shape their course of action to the exigency of the times, as well in reducing their liabilities, as in endeavouring to increase their receipts. For the first nine months of the year the receipts were in advance of the corresponding time the year previous nearly $10,000, which very nearly corresponded with the increased appropriations for the same time. The Board had good reason to suppose that the remaining three months would be quite equal, if not in advance of the corresponding time the previous year. In this they were disappointed. The decrease in the receipts during this quarter was $15,660 60. No human foresight could discern the sudden and unparalleled revulsion that was so soon to sweep over our whole country. No sooner, however, was it perceived than the Board indicated the policy to be pursued, and passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in view of the already extended operations of the Board, and the present financial condition of the country, the Executive Committees be, and they hereby are, instructed until otherwise directed, to curtail their operations, so far as may be consistent with the safety of the domestic missionary work in its present position."

In carrying this resolution into effect there are two results to which we beg leave to call the attention of the Assembly. 1st. The decrease in the appropriations in the offices at Philadelphia and Louisville, compared with the corresponding three months of the year previous. This amounted to $15,722.50, which is a fraction more than the decrease in the receipts in the whole field during the same time. And,

2d. The plan adopted to carry this into effect, without seriously embarrassing the missionaries by reducing their salaries, which, under the circumstances in which many of them were placed, the Board were anxious to avoid. We are happy to be able to state that by referring the applications back to the churches, with the request that another effort should be made to raise more themselves, and thus enable the Board to reduce their appropriations, was as successful as it was apparently satisfactory to almost all concerned. With very few exceptions, the Board were enabled to reduce the appropriations on an average of about 25 per cent., and at the same time secure to the missionaries their full salaries. This gratifying result encourages the Board to hope for the continued co-operation of the churches and Presbyteries in this matter; and if this is secured, we trust that it will not be long before the Board will be in funds to occupy new and important fields, now white and ready for the harvest.

NEED OF FUNDS.

It will be seen by reference to the statements already made that the churches have increased their contributions $8,119.92 over last year; that there has been a falling off in legacies and individual donations of $13,630.26, and that the balance in all the treasuries on the first of March last was $10,893.73. When we state to the Assembly the fact that nearly the whole of this balance is held by the South-Western Advisory Committee, for disbursement within the field under their care, it will at once be perceived that there is a pressing necessity to provide means to meet the liabilities of the Board that are constantly falling due in other portions of the country. Had the balance in the treasury of the South-Western Advisory Committee at New Orleans been at the disposal of the Board during the past year, as the receipts from that whole field formerly were, it would have greatly relieved the Board in promptly meeting its obligations. It is, however, subject only to drafts for missionaries in that particular field.

These facts suggest two things:

1st. The necessity of prompt efforts on the part of the friends and patrons of the Board to replenish the exhausted treasury.

This is absolutely necessary in order to enable the Board to meet promptly the present and constantly maturing liabilities, and, at the same time, carry along the faithful missionaries now in commission. The Board have felt that they would not be justified by our Church, or the Christian public, if, in these trying times, they did not to the utmost extent of their ability stand by this noble band of Christian ministers, who have made sacrifices and endured hardships with a moral heroism and an undying faith worthy of the Christian name. For liabilities thus incurred we confidently appeal to the friends of the Board for assistance in this their time of need. Let remittances be forwarded with as little delay as possible, as the appropriations to these brethren are constantly maturing, and their wants very pressing.

And 2d. The great importance of placing at the disposal of the Board a sufficient amount of means to enable them to prosecute this work with still greater vigour in new and important fields.

There are churches in certain sections of the country so enfeebled by the partial failure of the crops and the financial embarrassments of our country, as to find it utterly impossible to retain the ordinances of the gospel without an equal or greater amount of assistance from the Board. And others, that had come to the condition of self-support, have been obliged again to seek the helping hand of the Board. These, under the peculiar circumstances, strongly appeal to the Board and the whole Church for assistance. They ought not to be left without the bread of life, and their ministers and those dependent on them, of their only means of subsistence.

But in addition to this, there are new fields coming up with unwonted urgency, asking for men and assistance in supporting them. Never before were these appeals more earnestly pressed, or the fields more promising. All along our frontier settlements, and particularly from California, Oregon, and Washington Territory, there comes up the cry for more faithful heralds of the cross. Under these circumstances we ask, What shall be done? Of necessity the pecuniary resources of the Board must guide their future action. In their behalf, therefore, in behalf of a great multitude scattered abroad as sheep without a shepherd, and in behalf of Him who gave himself for the sheep, we earnestly appeal through your venerable Assembly to the churches, and Christian sympathy of all the friends and patrons of this Board, for assistance to send to them the bread of life. Brethren, shall we have it?

As we close the review of another year, we would not be unmindful of God's painful admonitions. Several of our coadjutors in this work have fallen during the year. Their names are written in the list of the dead. Could we now but hear them speaking from the unseen world, of the wonders of redeeming love, they would, with trumpet-tongues, call upon the Board, and the whole church, to sleep not in this glorious work, but to awake, and arise, and work while it is called to-day.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THE SUCCESS OF THE LABOURERS A PLEA FOR THEIR INCREASE.

In discussing the question, "Has there been a failure at all in Christian missions?" one of the speakers at the great Mission Conference held last year at Liverpool furnished the following statistics:

"He found that the Bible had been translated, during the last sixty years, into upwards of 100 languages. There were 100,000 professing Christians in New Zealand; 100,000 in Burmah and Pegu; 112,000 Protestant Christians in India; 5000 or 6000 in Mesopotamia; 250,000 in Africa; 40,000 in America; and 250,000 in the islands of the Pacific. There were Christians in China, Madagascar, Mauritius, and many other parts of the world. There were 200,000 or 300,000 Negroes under the care of Christian pastors, in the West Indies. There are more than a million and a quarter of living Christians who, but for the labours of the missionaries, would all have remained idolaters. We are apt to compare the missionary successes of the present time, in disparaging terms, with the successes which attended apostolic labour. He had inquired, however, from the most competent authorities, as to how many individuals, in their opinion, were gathered out of heathendom by the labours of the inspired apostles during the first sixty years of mission work after the ascension of the Saviour; and he had been assured that, as far as they could judge, not more than one million of living Christians were found after those first sixty years. They must remember, also, the hundreds of thousands who were now sleeping in their graves round the mission churches; and how many had gone to their heavenly home from far-distant recesses of heathendom, who were never known to the missionaries, but who had learnt from tracts, Bibles, and other means, of the salvation which is in Christ. Then, again, the 1600 missionaries who had gone forth from Europe and America were now accompanied by more than 16,000 native ministers, religious catechists, Scripture-readers, and schoolmasters, who were evangelizing their own fatherlands. The native ministry, moreover, had passed into the second generation; and from our schools and orphan asylums the native apostles would arise, whose crown of rejoicing would be multitndes of Christian converts. They ought not, therefore, to indulge in a spirit of despondency, but rather lift up their hearts in devout gratitude to Almighty God for the great success with which he had so far blest missionary labours; and indulge in the joyful hope of still greater blessings in days to come."

It is to be borne in mind that these statistics exhibit the results of missionary labours alone, and do not include the harvest gathered by a settled ministry operating in Christian lands. If 1600 missionaries can point to a living membership of a million and a quarter gathered in the last sixty years out of the realms of heathen darkness, what must be the number gathered by the ministry and other evangelical appliances of Christendom within that period, where the ratio of success so far exceeds that of the purely missionary field?

Thus viewed, with what importance is the ministry of reconciliation invested! If we are to judge of it by its works, what must be our estimate? Who can look at these statistics and remain at his ease in Zion? Who can weigh them, and yet conclude that it is a matter of comparatively little importance whether more labourers be sent forth into the harvest? If these statistics are to be relied on, then we must conclude that it was a matter of as much importance to a ruined world that those 1600 missionaries were sent forth in the last sixty years, as that the twelve apostles were sent forth at the ascension of Christ. The results are as large and as intimately connected with missionary labour in the one case as in the other. It is just as true that the conversion of these men in the past sixty years was instrumentally dependent upon these 1600 missionaries as that those who received the word in apostolic times would not have been saved had not the apostles and their associates proclaimed to them the tidings of salvation.

The uniformity of this instrumental connection between the missionary and the extension of Christ's kingdom is singularly illustrated by these statistics. They take in a wide range of both time and space. They cover sixty years and eleven mission fields. Every field visited and occupied by these ambassadors has furnished its thousands of sheaves to the sickle of the labourer. Oh! to what a conclusion does this fact point! Wherever the ambassador goes, Christ, in fulfilment of his promise, goes with him, and will render his mission successful. Whether he takes up his abode with the swarthy sons of Ham, or the savage children of New Zealand, or the red men of the forest, he is sure of success!

Here is encouragement for the missionary, and obligation for the private member of the church of God. If the work of the labourer is so uniformly and inseparably connected with the salvation of men, then it must be the duty of every Christian to increase, send forth, and sustain these labourers. To neglect this duty is to neglect the use of the heaven-appointed and heaven-recognized agency for the extension of that kingdom, for whose advent all Christians pray. A man ought to have a good reason before he ventures upon the neglect of this duty. Better that a man should be straitened in "his means" than that he should withdraw his hand from the work of raising up and sending forth ambassadors for Christ.

This is the work of the Board of Education. Brethren, must it come to a stand by reason of the present national distress? Who is there in our Zion who cannot give to this cause as much as he has given during any former year, and yet suffer nothing the more for his liberality?

THE DUTY OF CHERISHING A HOPEFUL SPIRIT IN TIMES OF TROUBLE.

This is a duty binding on all Christians, a duty founded in the most unquestionable truths. The providence of God, his wisdom, his fatherly care over his children, his power to protect them, all conspire to assert the duty, and to enforce it upon the people of God.

The prominence given to this duty in the teachings of our Saviour is very marked. He counsels his disciples to take no thought for tomorrow, and argues from the universal providence of God, which extends even to the fowls of heaven, to the lilies and the grass of the field. From such considerations, the Saviour would urge upon his disciples the duty of an absolute confidence in God.

Such counsel is eminently appropriate in the present time of universal distress, when men's hearts are failing them through fear. There is great temptation to give way to forebodings of evil. The mind naturally fills the dark unknown future with spectres of evil guise. This is wrong. Why should we paint such scenes in advance of God's providence? Have we not grounds for believing that he will do exactly what ought to be done? Have we not the assurance that nothing will be allowed to occur that will be adverse to our best interests, or to the glory of God? If we really believe that neither life, nor death, nor angel, nor principality, nor power, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, why should we stand trembling on the brink, afraid to look at the coming events as they are landed on the shores of time? Animated by the assurance that no foe can sever us from the embrace of that love, let us rather rejoice as the chariot-wheels of God' providence roll forward toward that goal, after which the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. What are these throes of the nations, these upheavings of earth's peoples and tongues, these national earthquakes, that are making the stateliest political edifices to totter, and tremble, and reel, as if doomed to destruction? What are they but the signs of the coming of the Son of Man, the rush and conflict of those who make war with the Lamb, as they stagger under the touch of the omnipotence of Him who is King of kings, and Lord of lords?

Is this a time for those called, and chosen, and faithful ones, who are with this mighty conquerer in this conflict, to hang their heads in despondency, and fear to look out upon the field as the smoke and dust of the battle roll away? Is it not, rather, a time for us to lift up our heads, with the assurance that the year of His redeemed has come—that our redemption draweth nigh?

Young men, candidates for the holy ministry, these words are addressed especially to you. Shrink not from duty in this day of national distress. Prosecute your studies, and trust the Master. He will make provision for you; his people will not forget you.

"Your ways to God commit;
Him trust, it bring to pass will he."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

INFANT BAPTISM.

As has been already shown, the idea of the visible church, during the antediluvian and Noachic periods, was, that it consisted of all those that professed the true religion, together with their children. It is our purpose, at present, to prove, by reference to the word of God, that this continued to be the idea of the visible church during the entire patriarchal period.

1. The first consideration, confirmatory of this position, is the general one, that there is no intimation of any change in the organization of the church. There is certainly nothing on record that would warrant the conclusion, that the children of those who professed the true religion were henceforth to be excluded from membership. This merely negative consideration carries with it great force; for we are certainly warranted in assuming, that so important a change would not be ventured on, without an express revelation, and that if a change had been made by Divine direction, some notice of it would have been left on record. In the absence of any such record, we conclude that no change was made.

2. The second great consideration in this connection is, that there were transactions between God and his servants, during this period, of such character as to render such an intimation not only proper, but necessary, on the assumption that a change involving the exclusion of children from church membership had been introduced. Some of the most important communications made to the church under the Old Testament—communications affecting the class now in question, were made during this period. It was during these eventful times that God made covenant with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob. These covenants had reference not only to themselves, but to their children also. If a change in the organization of the church, based on the Baptist doctrine, had been resolved on, here was certainly a fitting time for making it known. If children were no longer to be recognized as members of the church, as they had been from Adam to Noah, surely it was not only fitting, but necessary, that those with whom God communicated in reference to the covenants which were to affect their posterity, should be informed of the change. In the absence of such information, they would, beyond all doubt, regard their children as their fathers had regarded them. They would look upon them as fellow-heirs with themselves of the covenants of promise. Such a conclusion—a conclusion which, on the Baptist theory of the church, is a grievous and dangerous error—could be prevented only by express revelation; and as no such revelation was made in the transactions referred to, we are warranted in believing that no change, by which the children of believers were to be excluded from the church, was made in her organization during the patriarchal period.

3. Our third point is, in our opinion, conclusive. It is this, that children are embraced in all these covenant transactions. The covenant with Abraham, which underlies those made with Isaac and Jacob, is in these words:—"I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God." Gen. xvii. 7, 8. We need not quote this covenant as renewed with Isaac and Jacob. In each instance, the seed are embraced with the parent, and the promises made to the children as well as to the parents. Now the obvious conclusion from these facts is, that the children were in covenant with God.

The only possible way of avoiding this conclusion, is to prove that by seed we are not to understand infants. But this is rendered impossible by express revelation to the contrary. After making covenant with Abraham, God proceeds to expound it, and in this exposition he shows what is to be understood by seed. Here is the Divine exposition—"This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you, and thy seed after thee: every man-child among you shall be circumcised. . . . . He that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations." There is no need for additional comment by man. God has spoken, let man be silent. He has expounded seed to mean infants in the very dawn of existence—let men beware of framing, or adopting expositions which exclude this class from covenant relationship with the God of Abraham. If, as the apostle Paul informs us, (Rom. iv. 11), "the sign of circumcision was a seal of the righteousness of faith," let men take heed how they regard those to whom God commanded that seal to be applied. To despise those whom God delights to honour, to reject those whom He receives, is to dishonour him, and provoke him to wrath.

Our conclusion, therefore, is, that the patriarchal period proclaims the Presbyterian doctrine, that the children of believers are to be regarded and treated as members of the church of God.

THE PAROCHIAL SCHOOL IN MINNESOTA.

The following letter will speak for itself. It is from the pen of one of our most valued ministers, who has sacrificed much to the interests of Christian education in a most important centre of present and prospective influence. We have often treated the subject of Parochial Schools en thesi, in the abstract, and, we presume, with but little effect. Here it is presented in a practical form, and our hope is that the presentation will have a practical and powerful effect upon the readers of the Record. If all the members of our churches were pervaded with the self-sacrificing spirit which nerved the writer of this letter, and sustained him in the initiation and maintenance of this school, what might not the Board of Education accomplish for the Master through the agency of the parochial school?

June 1st, 1861.

Dear Sir—Necessity is laid upon me to address you in reference to a subject in which I know you feel, not merely an official, but a deep personal interest—Education. To avoid troubling you with a long letter, I will just state facts, and let them speak for me.

In the fall of 1853, I opened, in the basement of the Central church of ———, not then completed, a parochial school, in support of which I received some aid from the Board of Education. That school continued, without any interruption, until July, 1858, with a good attendance, and good results. I depended for its support, for three years, upon tuition, making up what was deficient from my own resources. In this school we had, all the time, several pupils unable to pay tuition, and, at times, as many as six or eight children of Roman Catholic families, of the better class.

In the spring of 1858, I commenced the erection of buildings for a female seminary, which was opened in August of the same year, and has been in operation ever since, growing in usefulness and extending its influence in the State, drawing young ladies from different parts of the State to enjoy its advantages. This is now the best and highest school in Minnesota. It is, in fact, a Presbyterian school; all who are boarders in our family attend the Presbyterian church, weekly prayer-meetings, lectures, and a Bible class taught by myself. Three teachers are constantly employed, besides the teachers of modern languages. All this you will see by the Catalogue herewith sent.

In this enterprise, so important to our church in this State, I invested all my available means. I measured the extent of the outlay by the means I thought I could so command as to incur no debt. But a subsequent loss of $3000, together with interest that I have been compelled to pay, finds me now with a debt of $2000 upon me, for which I am paying $350 per year of interest. The school was born in, and has lived through these hard times, and it is not strange that it has not yet reached a paying patronage. My object has been to make it an institution that would secure the confidence of all its patrons as a good school, and one that should do good service to the interests of our church in this region. In this I have been successful, and there is but one cloud in the future, that is, the want of means.

Whether this enterprise shall succeed, and secure to our Presbyterian Zion a large share in the education of the daughters of Minnesota, I feel, depends now upon my ability to secure or furnish the means to hold it up a while longer, until it can go alone.

So far, I have not received one dollar of aid from any quarter. It is my own enterprise and sustained with my own means. The building and grounds in the city of ——— are now worth $10,000, upon which is a debt of $3000. The favour that I ask from some friend of education is a loan of $3000 to pay off this debt, which loan I will secure to the lender by a mortgage upon the property; this will make the amount perfectly secure. I want the loan without interest, or at a very low rate; will bind myself to pay back annually $300 of the loan, and as much more as I may be able. This request is, of course, made upon the presumption that whoever might make such a loan would be willing to give the interest on that amount to secure the success of the enterprise.

Now, my dear brother, you have all the facts before you, and, in view of the fact that there are many wealthy friends of religious education in our church, does it seem unreasonable to ask this much upon these conditions? Can you find a friend who will come to our relief, or shall we be compelled, for the want of a little timely aid, to abandon an enterprise so full of promise, after having brought it through the trials consequent upon the beginning of a new institution. I beg pardon for thus appealing to you, and do most earnestly solicit your kind offices in our behalf. Praying the great Head of the church that he may, in his good providence, enable us to go forward in a work that, we trust, shall be for his glory, I am,

Fraternally yours in Him.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL, LEEDS POINT, N. J.

June 4th, 1861.

Below please find report of Leeds Point Parochial School, for term commencing March 11th and closing May 31st, 1861.

Whole number of pupils	47
Average " "	40
Average attendance	33
Families sending	36

The Catechisms have been regularly taught; we find the exercise pleasant as well as profitable. So far as we know, the school is no less satisfactory than heretofore. It is going on peacefully and harmoniously.

We are not privileged to report any marked religious feeling, but are encouraged by being able to say, that one or two of the pupils manifest interest in the welfare of their souls. There is frequently much tenderness of feeling manifested by the school generally. That it may prove the premonition of a plentiful shower of Divine grace that shall gather in all these souls, is our prayer to God.

Very respectfully,

D. B. Snow, Clerk of Session.

Such is the spirit, and such the genius of the Presbyterian Parochial School. Its aim is the culture of man's entire nature, moral and religious, as well as intellectual. It recognizes as its chief instrumentality in this work, the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. Happy is that neighbourhood whose families are trained under its hallowing influence; and happy is that country whose counsellors and rulers have received in its simple curriculum the great fundamentals of self-government.

CHILDREN.

A house full of little children composes as powerful a group of motives as ever moved a heart or hand; and the secret of many a gallant struggle and triumph in the world's battle may be found throned in its mother's lap at home, or done up in a little bundle of white flannel. A nation's hope before now, has been found in a basket of bulrushes. Get ready to be afraid of the man whom children are afraid of, and be sure that he who hates them is not worthy the name of a man. Blessings upon the dear little children! The Lord has tender love for them, "for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

MARTYR FIRES IN SCOTLAND.

More than a hundred years before the Reformation, there came to the North an Englishman who had fled for his life from the priests in his own country. This Englishman, John Resby by name, went about teaching the Scottish people the truth as it is in Jesus. Many heard, and some believed. But the priests seized this good soldier of Jesus, and burned him alive at Perth, the first of our martyrs. Far away in the city of Prague, in Bohemia, the people of God heard what had been done to the preacher of the cross in dark, fierce Scotland. They found a man who was willing to come here, and risk his life to tell perishing souls of a Saviour. The name of this noble, generous man, was Paul Crawar. He was a doctor of medicine; and while he healed the diseases of the body, he told his patients of Him who alone can heal the soul. The good which this blessed stranger did among our benighted fathers the last day will only reveal. But the priests got hold of him also. They kindled his death-fire at St. Andrews, and there they burned him to ashes. They forced a ball of brass into his mouth, lest he should speak to the people who gathered to see him die; and thus, among cruel strangers, far from his fatherland, he endured his great dumb agony. Such was Scotland's welcome to the messenger of peace.

From the time of John Resby, there never ceased to be a little hidden flock of Christ in Scotland. They met in great secrecy, to encourage one another in the faith and hope of the Gospel. The fear of discovery forced them to use many strange concealments. For example, one Murdoch Nesbit, an Ayrshire man, had a written copy of the New Testament. He dug a vault below his house, and there, by the light of a burning splinter of bog-fir, he was wont to read his precious book—a few trusty friends, who were in the secret, creeping into the murky den to hear.

As printing came into use, copies of the English Bible were secretly brought into the country, and eagerly read by hundreds of little clubs like that which met in Murdoch Nesbit's hole. In this way the word of God grew mightily, and prevailed. The priests raged against it with all cruelty and blood. One most meek and gentle preacher of the truth, Patrick Hamilton, was the king's own kinsman born. Not the less for that was he burned at the stake. The fierce priests burned the bones of God's people to lime. But they could not stop, they only hastened God's work by that. The smoke of the burning martyrs infected all on whom it blew. When one blessed voice was silenced amid the roaring flames, God sent another messenger to declare his truth. The ashes of Patrick Hamilton might be trampled by the feet of his murderers; but Wishart came and spoke as one who sees heaven open. Wishart, too, was burned. Fire, fire was the argument of the priests. But Knox was ready to lift up his mighty voice. He preached, and the hearts of his countrymen were moved as the trees of the wood are moved by the wind.—Rev. James Mackenzie.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

Recent Intelligence.

INDIAN TRIBES.

We have received letters from the Creek Mission, dated May 6th; Seminole, April 22d; Chickasaw, May 6th; Choctaw, to May 15th. These letters contain some pleasing notices: the ordination of Mr. J. E. Dwight, a Choctaw, by the Presbytery of Indian, and the admission of several new members to some of the churches—among the Seminoles, four; Chickasaws, one; Choctaws, three at Good Land, and four at Bennington. On the other hand, the Creek Council have concluded to suspend the schools in their country, a step which will close for the present, if not permanently, the school at Tallahassee, which has been long under the care of the Board. The political troubles of the times are likely, moreover, to interfere seriously with the Choctaw schools, which will probably have to be suspended, partly for want of funds from the Indian Council, and partly on account of the difficulty of keeping up communication with that part of the country. Two female teachers, who were under appointment, found it impracticable to make the journey, and returned to their friends. We regret still more to mention that the Rev. J. R. Ramsay does not expect to return to the Seminole mission. His services are greatly needed there, and would be invaluable to the Seminoles; but reasons chiefly connected with the disturbed state of public affairs make the path of duty plain, as here stated. The kind regards of the Committee will follow Mr. Ramsay wherever he may be called to labour in the church.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Full and interesting letters have been received from Mr. McLaren, at Bogota, to the 13th of April, and from the brethren at Rio de Janeiro, to the 9th of the same month. Mr. McLaren is not able to speak in encouraging terms of the prospects of missionary work in New Granada, though much will depend on the issue of the existing war in that country. In Brazil, a more favourable state of things invites missionary labour. We hope to give extracts from these papers in the Record or Foreign Missionary of next month.

AFRICA.

Letters from Liberia have reached us, dated to the 10th of April, but they do not contain news of special interest.

INDIA.

Our letters from this country are dated at Allahabad, to the 5th of April; Saharunpur, April 15th; Kapurthala, April 18th; Lahor, April 17th; Rawal Pindi, March 30th; Peshawur, April 16th. We learn with great regret the death of the Rev. Gopeenath Nundy, at Futtehpore, on the 14th of March, after a short illness. Mr. Nundy has been so long connected with the missionary work, and so useful as a missionary, that his death must be regarded as a great loss; though doubtless it was great gain to himself. Mr. Walsh intended to forward a biographical sketch of our lamented friend, and we therefore omit further reference here to his life and labours. Mr. Walsh had baptized a hopeful convert at Allahabad, and Mr. Orbison expected to baptize another on the next Sabbath, at Rawal Pindi. The Rajah of Kapurthala was about to build a church at that city. Mr. Lœwenthal was steadily at work on the translation of the New Testament into Pushto, and was engaged on the Epistle to the Hebrews at the date of his letter. Afflicting accounts are given of the dreadful famine—see Dr. Campbell's paper in another column.

SIAM.

Our advices from Bangkok are dated to the 28th of March. We regret to learn that Mrs. McDonald was seriously ill, so that apprehensions were felt as to her recovery, but we trust these fears have been removed before this. Messrs. McGilvary and McFarland would probably remove to the new station at Petchaburi about the middle of May, but there were some contingencies to be considered. Dr. House was to have gone there, but on his meeting with a severe accident, which caused lameness not yet removed, this change in the plan was deemed expedient.

CHINA.

We have received letters from Canton, dated to the 29th of March; and from Ningpo, March 12th. The brethren at Canton were much interested in a successful effort to form a station at Fat Shan, a large city near Canton. They had procured a house suitable for a chapel and dispensary; Dr. Kerr visited the dispensary regularly, and prescribed to large numbers of patients; the gospel was preached to large and orderly crowds of people; and the missionaries earnestly desire the arrival of two new missionaries, so that two of their company can take up their abode at Fat Shan.

We may here mention that special funds having been given to send out three new missionaries, the Committee have concluded to send them to the Ningpo Mission, where there is a very urgent call for more men; but we trust two men will also be sent, before long, to the Canton Mission.

Mr. Samuel Dodd, a licentiate preacher of the Second Presbytery of New York, and a recent graduate of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, who is one of the three above referred to, embarked at this port for Shanghai on his way to Ningpo in the ship Kathay, on the 1st of June. We would ask for him, and for a large company of missionaries of other churches who go out in the same ship, the prayers of our readers.

JAPAN.

A letter from Dr. Hepburn, dated March 26th, speaks of himself and wife as enjoying excellent health, and able to improve some opportunities of usefulness. They are anxious to have another missionary sent to their station.

"VISIT EVERY MEMBER OF THE CONGREGATION."

The late General Assembly took a forward step, we think, and one that will result in great good to the cause of missions, when it adopted the sixth resolution in the series relating to the Board of Foreign Missions. The whole series will be found in the extra number of the Record of this month, and will be found to repay not only perusal, but study. We have room here to ask attention only to the one above mentioned, which sets forth the earnest recommendation of the Assembly, that every member of the congregation should be personally called upon for his or her missionary gift.

Nothing is here said about the amount of that gift, and nothing ought to be said concerning that, beyond the comprehensive injunction of the apostle, "as God hath prospered him." But the Assembly earnestly recommends that every member should have the opportunity of giving. This, certainly, is but right. The Assembly recommends, further, that this opportunity should be afforded by a simple arrangement, under the direction of the church session, by which a kind personal call should be made on each member for this purpose, thus bringing the matter home to every one.

Now concerning this, it may be understood as not designed to supersede any existing methods, in some of the churches, which are found by experience to work well; but it is a measure which, if adopted, would reach large numbers of our Christian people who do not now give anything, or who give but a very partial support, to this cause. The Assembly's minute recognizes the province and supervision of the church session in the matter, and recommends this particular measure, in such cases as are not already as well or better met by existing plans; thus we understand it. And we cannot doubt that in hundreds of our congregations it would be an admirable measure. It would require consideration as to the best persons, and the most suitable times, for making such calls. It would, indeed, cost some trouble to make them. But if this measure, or some other not less effective, is adopted in our churches generally, we are sure the next General Assembly will not be grieved at hearing the old story, that less than half the churches have made contributions to the missionary treasury, and that the average amount given to this cause does not reach two cents a week to each communicant.

We ask our Christian brethren, ministers and laymen, to read carefully the general and the special reports of the Executive Committee, and then to think over the information therein contained, and the statements there made about the present critical condition of the missionary work. We earnestly ask them to pray over these things, and to pray more for the perishing souls who are the objects of our missionary zeal, that the glory of our Saviour may be advanced in their salvation; and then we feel assured that effectual measures will be taken to send forth every qualified missionary. This is not a time for standing still in the work of the Lord, much less for going backward. In the open doors for missionary labour; in the offer of devoted brethren to go as missionaries; yes, even in the sad calamities that have fallen upon our beloved country, we hear the same voice that was heard on the shore of the Red Sea, when "the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT ALLAHABAD.

The Annual Report of this station for the year 1859–60 is before us. We learn from it that the Rev. J. Owen laboured most of the year at that city, and, "besides preaching, he has been engaged on a Commentary on the Psalms, which is being printed for the North India Tract Society at Mirzapore. He has also performed the duties of Secretary to the North India Bible and Tract Societies." Since the report was prepared, Mr. Owen has taken charge of the important station at Agra. The Rev. R. E. Williams, the efficient and successful Superintendent of the High School at Allahabad, as our readers are aware, has returned to this country on account of health; this school is now under the superintendence of the Rev. J. J. Walsh. The Rev. Messrs. Wikoff and Johnson reached this station after this report was prepared. Two native catechists and a native Scripture Reader are mentioned as assistants in the work of the station. With these notices prefixed, we now insert the greater part of the Report as drawn up by Mr. Walsh, who says:

During the year I have been engaged in preaching and the Superintendence of the Bazar Schools.

Preaching.

The services usually reported, with the exception of English preaching, have been regularly maintained. Mr. Williamson, the Presbyterian Chaplain, appointed to this station, has relieved us of all English preaching and thus enabled us to devote our whole time to the Hindustáni. We are also happy to report that we have found in him a hearty and valuable co-operator in our Mission work, and we cannot but express the hope that his labours may long be continued at this station. On his arrival here we placed Kuttra chapel at his disposal for his English services. This chapel has been greatly enlarged, and newly furnished at an expense of rupees 3,484–5–0, [or about $1742,] of which rupees 2213–5–0, were received in donations, and rupees 670–13–0, were obtained from collections, and a monthly rent of 50 rupees sanctioned by Government; leaving a debt of some 500 rupees, the one-half of which Mr. Williamson requests may be met by the Mission, in consideration of the more than 1000 rupees worth of furniture in the Chapel, and now our property.

Two Hindustáni services have been kept up during the year every Sabbath at the Jumna church, and two at the Kuttra chapel. There have been received into the church five adults and six infants, and one adult has died; making the whole number of communicants thirty-seven. The congregation of the Jumna church has been steadily increasing, and includes a few East Indian families living in the bazar. An evening service has also been held every Wednesday, and an effort made to impart careful and systematic instruction. At this service we have reviewed the whole of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and eighteen chapters of Matthew's Gospel. A weekly service has also been held at the Kuttra. Bazar preaching has been almost daily kept up by myself and assistants, though I regret to add that this branch of labour has not been either so abundant or efficient as it might have been: and this has not been owing so much to a want of, or even an imperfect appreciation of, its value and usefulness, as to a real apprehension of unfitness for the work. The language spoken in Allahabad is so different from what I have been accustomed to use, that I have frequently found it difficult to express myself so as to be fully understood. And consequently I have (instead of frequenting the bazar so much) been paying more attention to the acquisition of Hindi.

During the whole of January I was daily engaged in preaching and conversing with the people assembled at the great mela held at this place. The large tent purchased for this use, answered the purpose most admirably, and a large crowd was in almost constant attendance. Mr. Ziemann, of Ghazeepore, greatly assisted us in our labours. Portions of the Bible and a large number of tracts were put in circulation, but given only to those who could read. The Poor-house and Jail have also been visited, and instruction given to those who felt disposed to hear.

An interesting case.

Our missionary brethren are sometimes much perplexed to know how to deal with persons who profess to be converts to Christianity. It often occurs that such professions are made from unworthy motives, and of this there is no room for doubt. In such cases the path of duty is plain. Mr. Walsh here mentions a case which was somewhat open to suspicion, as the man was a prisoner, and might hope for interposition in his behalf if he became a Christian; and yet there was something hopeful in his history. "The Lord knoweth them that are his."

An interesting case of a prisoner in the Jail, who was there on the charge of aiding and abetting the mutiny, may be mentioned more particularly, as showing the difficulties which we are frequently called upon to encounter, and also the possibility of an error in this particular case. We were informed of the strong desire expressed by this man for baptism and admission into the visible church, through the doctor in charge of the Jail. We visited him several times and found him persistent in his desire and anxiety to follow Christ, but as we feared this anxiety might be caused by some possible worldly advantage which he fancied would result from his baptism, we felt that it was due to him and the cause, to be particularly cautious in all our interviews and dealings with him. To test him thoroughly, we kept somewhat aloof, and each time of more than usual absence we were sure to receive either a letter or message, begging for our presence and baptism. In one of these letters he threatened to report us to the Bishop, and when he found that we were not subject to his jurisdiction, he told told us that he would report us to the Lord Jesus Christ, the great Bishop and Master, as refusing him the badge of his service, and the honour of publicly professing his faith and attachment to the only Redeemer of mankind. He renounced in the most public manner Islamism. What interested me more in this man was our recollection of him in 1844 whilst at Futtehgurh, where he was in the habit of visiting Mr. Rankin of our Mission for religious conversation. He was intelligent and thoroughly acquainted with all the controversial works on Christianity and Mohammedanism. He died very suddenly, and since his death I have felt as though an error had been committed in not complying with his request for baptism. He recanted all his error before prisoners, and constantly declared his faith in Christ as the only true Saviour.

Besides my regular preaching, I have devoted my mornings frequently to conversation with different individuals whom I have endeavoured to enlist in the service of Christ. In this way I have visited a number of native gentlemen and others who could not be reached in any other way. Before concluding this part of my report, I wish to express a hope that the bazar chapel destroyed in the mutiny will soon be replaced, and better facilities be granted for the prosecution of this great work. With these restored, we feel that our usefulness would be greatly increased. As directed by the Mission at their last annual meeting, I have visited Futtehpore three times during the year, and preached each time both in English and Hindustáni. I have also visited the native Christians, and as far as possible ascertained their state and character. It was my privilege, on one occasion, to baptize, at the request of the Rev. Gopee Nath Nundy, several converts. The church at Futtehpore under the pastorship of our native brother, the Rev. Gopee Nath Nundy, has greatly increased, but of this he will himself give an account. I am happy to add that he has been abundant in labours, and is doing a good work at Futtehpore. I wish that we had many more like him at our out-stations.

Bazar Schools—Orphan Asylum—High School.

During the year I have restored the four bazar schools in existence before the great rebellion, and for which an appropriation had been made by the Board at home.

These four schools contain about one hundred boys, all of whom commit to memory the smaller Catechism, and those able to read fluently study the gospels. The boys of these schools also attend the Sabbath-school, which is held immediately after our morning service. The amount of religious instruction received in these schools more than equals the expense, as each school costs less than seven rupees, inclusive of rent and everything else.

Mrs. Walsh has also had under her care a bazár school composed of about seventeen girls in daily attendance, all of whom have been taught to read and sew. They have also committed to memory a good number of hymns, and all of the Smaller Catechism.

The Orphan Asylum contains only nine boys, one of whom is a mere child, and the others very young. One boy ran away. He was an incorrigible lad, and all efforts to train him proved fruitless. They have been entrusted to the care of some of our native Christians, but I am sorry to add that the plan has not been very satisfactory. I have made another arrangement that will give more satisfaction. The time of the boys is wholly given to study. They have attended the High School, and received also separate instruction in Hindi.

The Allahabad High school was revived a year after the mutiny, and has since had to contend with many difficulties, especially in obtaining suitable books and teachers. Mr. Williams, under whose charge the school has been, has given no detailed report regarding it, but it may here be stated that he has devoted to it a large share of his time and attention, and that his labours have been rewarded by an average attendance of nearly four hundred boys, many of whom are sons of the most respectable class of the inhabitants of Allahabad. The present head teacher had before the mutiny an appointment under Government as inspector of Schools, and it is a pleasing fact, that he and most of the other teachers in the English department are graduates of the school. In this respect, as well as in many others, the institution has borne good fruit, the teachers being more or less imbued with the truths of the Bible, and familiar with our mode of instruction.

The school consists of two departments, English and Vernacular. These are conducted in separate apartments, but every boy learning English is required to devote a part of his time to the acquisition of his own language as spoken and written.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT MYNPURIE.

The Rev. A. Brodhead and his wife are stationed at this city, and they are aided by three native Christians, one as a Catechist, one as a Scripture-reader, and the third as principal Teacher in the school. We insert all of this report, which is from the pen of Mr. Brodhead.

Although the missionary was designated to Mynpurie at the annual meeting of the Mission in November 1859, owing to illness in his family, and to the want of any accommodation at Mynpurie, he did not reach his station until the 10th of February last. Since that time there have been no serious interruptions to the health of any of the families connected with the station.

Work of re-building—Religious services.

The work of re-building had been before under the superintendance of Mr. Fullerton. The missionary is glad to report that the buildings which were dismantled during the disturbance of 1857–58, are now restored, with the exception of the old school-house in the city. The missionary's house, with its out-buildings, has been substantially re-built: the house of the head teacher of the school and those of the catechists, of which nothing remained but the walls, have been enlarged and re-built, and necessary repairs put upon the chapel and school-house. The whole cost of re-fitting the station will fall under four thousand rupees, and this amount would have been considerably reduced, had not much of the wood used been bought at another station, when the high prices following upon the mutiny were ruling.

The Catechist and Scripture-reader came to the station as soon as their houses were ready; previous to that time, and after their appointment, they were labouring under the superintendence of Mr. Scott, at Futtehgurh. Since their arrival at Mynpurie, they have preached regularly in the bazar to good and attentive audiences, and have visited the adjoining villages with the message of salvation. Their preaching has often provoked discussion, and in a few cases has led to further inquiry as to the things whereof they affirmed.

Until our occupancy of the chapel on the 13th of September, one service had been held each Sabbath in the school-house; since that time we have had two services each Sabbath. A weekly evening prayer-meeting, and the monthly concert for prayer have also been observed. The Sabbath services have been well attended, there being an average attendance of forty at the morning service. The number is composed of the mission families, an irregular attendance of the Christian members of the police, the teachers, and some of the scholars from the school, together with a few each Sabbath from the city. At our communion season in September, a young man was admitted to the church, on profession of his faith, and was baptized with the name of James Wylie. His daily life, so far as the missionary has had an opportunity of judging, his regular and attentive attendance upon the services of the Sabbath and at the prayer-meetings, and the detail of his experience, all give hope that he is born of the Spirit. The infant child of Hulass Roy was baptized shortly after our coming to the station.

Hindi, Persian, and English school.

From the restoration of order after the mutiny, until February, the school was carried on by Hulass Roy, under the supervision of Mr. Fullerton. It had been gradually increasing, and in February numbered one hundred and thirty-eight scholars, of whom forty-six were in the English department, thirty-nine in the Persian and Urdú, department, and fifty-three in the Hindí department. The present number is two hundred and twenty-five. Of this number, seventy-two are in the English department, forty-six in the Persian and Urdú, and one hundred and seven in the Hindí. A government school was established in the city in March or April last, with the avowed object of giving greater facilities for learning accounts in Hindí. Finding that this branch of study was neglected in the mission school, a Pandit was employed to give instruction in it. From the number in attendance at the school it will be seen that the establishment of the government school has not operated against it. The missionary has had direct charge of the larger class of boys in some of their studies, and has spent some portion of each day with them. Their progress, while it is hopeful, is by no means extraordinary. While they excel perhaps in such studies as require the exercise of memory chiefly, they are greatly deficient in the power of thinking and of expression. The Bible and catechism are read and studied by all of the scholars who are able to read. One of the civilians at the station takes a hearty interest in the welfare of the school. He has authorized the procuring of prizes to the amount of fifty rupees for the present year, and has offered scholarships to the same amount for the next year.

The missionary would suggest the importance of introducing a larger Christian element into the school. Of the five teachers, only the head teacher is a Christian. His time is necessarily taken up with the English department, and one teacher is entirely inadequate here. But this represents only about one-third of the school. In the Persian and Hindí departments there are young and quickening minds whose future must be shaped to no small extent by the influences under which they are now brought. What might not be hoped from the careful and prayerful instructions of those who themselves had been to the fountain of all wisdom?

The missionary takes pleasure in mentioning the continued efficiency and active co-operation of Hulass Roy. He remains devoted to the interests of the mission, notwithstanding he has had good offers to engage in government service.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

Distressing accounts—Large liberality—Orphan children.

The painful details of Dr. Campbell's paper convey a deep impression of the great calamity, the terrible judgment which is now falling on the people in the Northwest provinces of India. A noble degree of benevolence has been shown by Europeans in the country, and by the Government, as well as by some of the wealthy natives; and large donations have been made in England for the relief of these famishing multitudes; but their chief hope must be in that God of mercy, whom, alas, they know not. Yet this great evil will be overruled for the extension of the gospel in India.

No doubt the readers of the Home and Foreign Record have already heard of the severe famine that has prevailed, for nearly a year past, in the north-west provinces of India, and where several of the stations of our mission are located; but it is presumed that few of our Christian friends, dwelling in gospel lands, and so generally provided with the means of support in times of scarcity, can form any adequate idea of the awful sufferings of the heathen during the periodical seasons of dearth and utter destitution that prevail so frequently in Hindustan; and where the great mass of the people are, at all times, in poverty, and dependent for their daily bread on their scanty earnings. During a famine of this kind which occurred twenty-three years ago, I witnessed scenes of suffering from starvation that can never be forgotten, and the distress of multitudes is not less at the present time. Millions are trying to support life on one scanty meal in the twenty-four hours; many more cannot obtain even that, and are reduced to mere walking skeletons; or, not able to walk, have to be carried to the places where Christian charity provides food for such. Many are going about offering their children for sale, without finding purchasers in such hard times. Many have died from pure starvation; and after all that is being done to sustain life by the different relief societies, by which millions of rupees will be expended, many more must die from want and hunger. Most likely pestilence will succeed the famine, and sweep off millions more to an eternity for which, as heathens and Mohammedans, they are not prepared. And O! what are their sufferings in time, destitute as they are of every earthly comfort, to those which await them, unsanctified and unsaved, in a world of unending woe! The horrors of heathenism are bad enough, but what are these to the horrors of an eternal hell, to which these miserable people are hastening in such vast multitudes! For their temporal wants human benevolence makes some provision; but, alas! how comparatively little is done by Christian philanthropy to evangelize these dying mortals, and prepare them for a happiness that would more than make up for all their earthly miseries—a happiness as lasting as eternity!

It is somewhat remarkable, but most significant, that the districts where the present famine prevails most severely are those in which the late rebellion raged most fearfully, and in which the blood of Christians flowed most freely by the hands of the very men who are now supported in life by the unbounded liberality of the friends of the martyred. This has given an opportunity of doing good for evil, and of showing these people the true spirit of the gospel of Christ. Another thing it has done, and which we are happy to mention, is, that the liberal example set forth by Christians in India has drawn forth numerous and large donations and subscriptions from wealthy natives, who would not otherwise, most likely, have given a single copper to this good cause, while they would have lavished thousands of rupees in public shows, and displays of their own wealth and greatness, which could benefit nobody. The amounts already contributed to relieve the poor are enormous, and the sums given by the benevolence of Christians and natives are equalled by a donation from government. It is supposed that this famine, caused by a want of the usual periodical rains, must continue, at least, for another year, as the crops now being gathered in are almost a total failure, except where the land has been irrigated by the canals that exist for that purpose. So many of the oxen have died, or are in such a weak state for want of provender, that the usual irrigation from wells by leather bags, or the Persian wheel, worked by these animals, has almost entirely ceased.

God's judgments are indeed abroad in this land of idolatry. By the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, he is showing the miserable inhabitants that there is a God who ruleth over the nations, and that they have incurred his righteous displeasure; and yet, for all this, they have not given up their idolatries, and turned to the true and living God, and so "his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still."

There is one advantage that will result from this state of things, and thus good be brought out of evil. The orphan schools of the different missions will be filled up with hundreds of pupils to be trained up in the principles of Christianity, and to become, through Divine grace, instruments of spreading the gospel of Christ through the length and breadth of this benighted land. And here is another opportunity afforded to wealthy and benevolent Christians at home, to help in feeding these orphans, not only with the bread that perisheth, but with the bread of life, and making them the agents of distributing this bread to thousands who are perishing for want of it. Surely our Christian friends will not allow this most favourable opportunity of aiding the missionary cause to be lost for want of those pecuniary means which they can so easily afford, and which their redeeming Saviour has placed in their hands for the spread of his kingdom and the salvation of the heathen. Depending on the assistance of those who, we know, will not fail to assist us, we are taking in all the suitable boys that are sent to us at this station, and, provisions being now so high, it requires large sums to feed and clothe them. Surely God's goodness to the American people, in giving them abundance of temporal, and, above all, of spiritual blessings, and of elevating them so far above the pagans of other lands, will dispose many to assist us in this undertaking and to be glad of an opportunity to promote the best interests of the missionary cause.

AFFAIRS AT RAWAL PINDI.

The town; its location and people—The Nirakarees and their worship.

Could the readers of the Record visit Rawal Pindi, they would see strange things, and many scenes sad as strange. In the long, straggling, irregular city, which contains about twenty or twenty-five thousand inhabitants, they would find one or two streets tolerably wide and straight, paved with bricks, and lined on both sides with shops and stores; but, for the most part, they would see narrow, crooked, dirty alleys, instead of streets. Here and there are large brick buildings, and the fronts of some are covered with wood minutely and beautifully carved, but by far the greater part of the city consists of low, misshapen mud houses, plastered over with a mixture of clay and cow-dung. In the suburbs they would see a neat building of brick, "the Dispensary," built and supported by the English Government, for the benefit of the natives; at the principal entrance to the city, a spacious brick building, with a well and garden attached, once the property of Government, now our mission school; and, at a short distance from this, just outside of the city, the mission house, which stands out conspicuous as the only European dwelling near the city.

But, perhaps, very few in America have ever heard of Rawal Pindi, and fewer still have any idea as to its "whereabouts." If your readers care enough to look on the map of Asia, they will find the extreme northern part of India somewhat in the shape of a wedge running into the heart of Central Asia; and though they may not see the name, they may find the spot where Rawal Pindi is situated, not far from the point or "little end" of the wedge, somewhere near the range of mountains which separates the Punjab from Cashmere, (about latitude 33° 35′ north, and longitude 73° 8′ east,) on the Great Trunk Road, between Lahore and Peshawur, at a distance of one hundred and sixty-seven miles from the former, and nearly one hundred miles from the latter, which is the last station, and the frontier post on the boundary of the Punjab and Afghanistan. The inhabitants for the most part are Punjabees and Hindustanees, but there are many Cashmerees, with a sprinkling of Afghans, Persians, &c. There is a great variety of sects and religions—Hindu, Sikh, Mohammedan, Jain, Nirakâree, &c. Some rough, informal sketches of men and things here, drawn from daily experience, may not be uninteresting or useless.

The Nirakârees are an interesting sect—I never met with any of them anywhere else. This new religion or sect had its origin in Rawal Pindi, about forty or fifty years ago. The founder, Gûrû Diyâl Dâss, died only four or five years ago, after the mission work was commenced here. He taught his followers to give up idolatry and caste, and worship the one living and true God, who is without form, or image, or parts, and hence called Nirakar. It was at one time thought that the worshippers of Nirakâr would be very favourably inclined to embrace Christianity. For a time they were persecuted by Hindus and Mohammedans. In order to form their acquaintance, and make them acquainted with the gospel, I have visited their Dharmsâla, that is religious house or place of worship. It is entered from the street by a fine lofty gateway of brick masonry, above the arch of which there is an inscription in the Gurmukhî language on a tablet set in the wall, and covered with glass. Passing through this gateway into a court-yard, on the other side you see a long, low building, by no means imposing, plastered over with the mixture so commonly used in this country. This house is open in front, showing a long room, the floor of which is covered with coarse cloth. At one end there are several monster books on low wooden stands, some of which lie open, while others are shut, wrapped in embroidered silk covers. In front of what seemed the principal book was a brass lamp burning, and over all a square, coloured cloth suspended from the roof, perhaps to keep particles of dirt from falling on the sacred books, or Grunths, as they are called. Behind some of the open Grunths were seated Gûrûs—religious leaders and teachers—who read for their own benefit, or that of their followers. Some of them had chowries, or fly brushes, made of the long, white hair of the yâk's tail, in their hands, and kept waving them to and fro over the books, to signify reverence, and keep off unholy flies. These books are nothing more nor less than the Grunths of the Sikhs, composed long ago by the Sikh Gûrûs, Nanuk, Arjun, Govind Singh, &c., founders of the Sikh religion. They are poetical, in the Punjabee language, and Gurmukhî character, and all written by the hand. When I went on to the platform in front of the Dharmsâla, one of the Gûrûs politely requested me not to come there with my shoes on, and spread a mat to one side, where I could sit, shoes and all, without defiling holy ground. As it was evening, the time for their services, a number of people had assembled, and I had an opportunity, with frequent interruptions, for conversing and preaching until they commenced their worship. Then they ranged themselves all around the room, sitting on the floor, and following the Gûrû who began to chant their hymns, in which the names of Nirakâr and Nanuk occur very frequently. For awhile they sang, swinging back and forwards, and bowing every now and then to the Grunth, and kissing the floor fervently. Then they rose, and marched around the room many times, singing and bowing, and often burst out into strong exclamations of "Blessed be Nirakâr!" While the men were thus engaged, several women came one after the other, bearing lighted lamps, from which they poured each a little oil into the large lamp which stood burning before the Grunth, then bowing, kissed the ground, and repeating the name "Nirakâr" went away. This is the only part the women seem to take in the worship.

The Nirakârees pride themselves much on being free from idolatry, and being purer and better than Hindus, Mohammedans, and other Sikhs. But in vain I tried to convince them that it was wrong and idolatrous to bow to the Grunth. They make the excuse that the name of God is in the book, and it is only reverence for this name which causes them to bow thus. On further intercourse and inquiry, I found that they consider themselves to be the true followers of Nanuk and the Grunth, and hence, the true, orthodox Sikhs, and not a new sect. When I preached Christ to them, they replied Nanuk will save us, he is our Mediator. From this, it appears that they have not made much progress in reformation, and, indeed, they are not much more inclined to embrace Christianity than others. There are several hundreds of them in this city, perhaps four or five hundred, and a few scattered in some of the neighbouring towns. Perhaps this movement may be considered as another struggle of the human mind towards the truth and a pure religion. And it is likely that it was caused incidentally by the influence of Christian missions, as a similar tendency to reform has been thus caused in different parts of India. It may be that the minds of these people are better prepared for the reception of the gospel, although it does not appear very evident as yet. There does seem to be a slight ray of hope and encouragement at times.

NINGPO MISSION, CHINA.

SKETCHES OF THE CHURCH—LOSSES WHICH ARE GAINS.

Thankful review of the year—The influence of the church extending.

Ningpo, February 16, 1861.

Last Sabbath, the 10th inst., was the beginning of the Chinese New Year, which I endeavoured to improve in our native church service by a sermon appropriate to the occasion. The subject was "Thankfulness"; and it was a grateful labour to collect and present before our native brethren and sisters some of the chief reasons for the full outpouring of our hearts, in the exercise of this grace of God.

The past year has been one of great changes both in our little church, and in the condition of the country. Many parts of this Province, including its capital, have been distressed by civil war, and fears have been felt over and again, lest Ningpo should be the scene of bloodshed; but the Lord has heard prayer, and delivered us from all evil. The means of grace on the Sabbath have been continued—the noonday prayer-meeting has been kept up every day—a spirit of charity has prevailed among the Christians—and above all, we have been permitted to welcome a goodly number of hopeful converts to the ordinances of the church. Thirty-six adults and ten children—all of them Chinese—have been baptized, and one has been received on certificate. This accession of communicants is larger than in any previous year. Indeed, it is about twice as many as the whole number of native church-members six years ago. The total number of native communicants now is one hundred and ten, including four ruling elders and two deacons. There are some others, too, whom we regard as inquirers.

These thirty-six converts have been gathered from various places. One is a native of Hangchau, the provincial city; two of the district city of Yuyau; several are from Ningpo, including seven pupils from the female, and three from the boy's boarding-school; there are representatives from five or six villages in the Sanpoh district, towards the northwest, and some are from the opposite direction in the village and neighbourhood of Bao-kô-tah, another out-station of the Mission. Christianity has thus been spreading, and a wider door of usefulness has been opened. The officers of the church, and other native assistants have, as a general thing, evidently grown in grace and knowledge; and besides the three previously received, three others have applied and been welcomed by Presbytery as candidates for the ministry. The treaties of peace with foreign powers having been signed and promulgated by the rulers of the land, opening the whole empire to evangelical effort, a deeper sense of responsibility to propagate the faith seems to rest upon the hearts of some, and is the burden of many prayers.

The blessings of salvation through Jesus Christ—of the church with God's appointed ordinances and officers—of an open Bible translated and printed in the Chinese character, and mostly in the vernacular also—the blessings of the holy Sabbath, of Christian sympathy, of a place not only, but freedom also to worship God according to the dicates of conscience—and many others common to countries where religion and social liberty prevail, have been largely enjoyed here, and they formed the subject of special remark. These call for the warmest thanks, when we look back a few years, and as we contrast our present situation with that of many parts of China.

Answers to prayer—Death of church-members—Grace displayed in a Chinese village.

We have also had cause to notice marked instances of answer to prayer during the year, especially in the recovery of some from severe sickness. And although the mortality of our little church has been much larger than usual, yet in this, mercy has been mingled with our grief. In almost every instance the disease has been consumption or some other protracted sickness, during which time grace has been in most cases given to the sufferer, to testify by patient example, as well as by words of piety, of the Saviour's presence and love.

Of the eight church-members who have died during the year, five were natives of Sanpoh. Among them was the oldest of the first seven in that district who made a profession of faith in Christ. From that period, May 1857, Nyün-pang (as he was familiarly called) has been a consistent praying Christian. Though chiefly dependent upon the scanty avails of a very small shop, he has been faithful in the observance of the Sabbath, and in attendance upon the means of grace, and, in many respects, has been an example to others. His sickness was tedious, but he remained uncomplaining, and enjoyed almost uninterrupted peace. I visited him several times, and found it no slight privilege to hear his expressions of self-loathing on account of sin, and yet of full reliance upon Christ as his Saviour, and of readiness to depart. How wonderful God's grace, which could reach this remote village in China, and light up the humble chamber of a poor unlettered man, with the same radiance which is so often witnessed in our more favoured country. But we know that this glorious gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," whether born in China or in happier America. Another worthy church member in Sanpoh, who died last April, was a farmer named Kong Zi-paw.

Another peaceful death-bed—Happy death of youthful believers—Me-li's life and death.

A third was Kong Kweng-niau, one of our beloved native assistants. Two years ago he, on one occasion, visited elder Zia, (who was then labouring in his native village) and expressed much solicitude respecting his personal salvation. Zia went out with him to a retired spot in the neighbourhood, and though the weather was severe, these two men passed the day together in fasting and prayer. From that time his conversion may probably be dated. His religious experience and progress in Divine knowledge were such as to secure the confidence of the mission, who shortly afterwards placed him in company with a more mature Christian brother in Hangchau, to be to some extent an assistant under Mr. Nevius's charge. There he gave satisfaction, and upon his return to Ningpo last winter, he was active both in the chapel and hospital as long as strength continued. Towards the close of the summer he went back to Sanpoh, and there on the 25th of October last, after witnessing throughout his sickness a good confession, he fell asleep in Jesus. He was preceded a few weeks only by a nephew who died in the hospital here, having been baptized a few days prior to that event. These four were carried to the grave by weeping relatives and friends, who buried them in a Christian manner. The remaining Sanpoh church-member who died, though a man of considerable reputation among the Chinese for a high moral character, was more unsatisfactory in his life and death. There is reason to fear that he had never tasted of the grace of God, though we dare not decide.

Last July one of our oldest and most devout pupils in the female boarding-school was attacked by fever, and after a very brief illness was removed from her sorrowing companions. Though not twelve months a professor of religion, she left a lovely example of humility and prayerfulness, and when death came, it was stripped of its terrors. A younger pupil died a few weeks later, who, though not received to the church, had applied for baptism, which had only been deferred because of her extreme youth. Still another has, within these few days, been called away to a brighter home. She was received as a pupil in the early history of the mission, and was called Mary (Me-li) after her old teacher, Mrs. Loomis. She finished her time and was married six years ago. A year later, she was admitted to the church and baptized, and her two little ones have also received the administration of this sacred rite. She was naturally possessed of many excellent traits of character, and these were greatly improved by grace; especially from the time that consumption seized upon her, her religious experience has greatly improved. She passed away as quietly as an infant falling asleep, but the expressions of full reliance upon Christ and submission to his will from her feeble lips during sickness, her calm resignation of her children to God, and her affectionate appeals to those out of Christ; together with her grateful sense of little acts of kindness shown by others, can never be forgotten by those around her. It was a privilege to have her spend her last days in the school where she had for many years been a pupil, and to minister in any degree to her personal comfort.

Happy death of the oldest ruling elder—Rejoicing in bereavements.

Our severest loss during the year was in the death of Zi Kyinsan, the oldest ruling elder of the church, who was baptized January 1st, 1854, and died last September. He was for many years head teacher in the boy's boarding-school, where he exerted an influence for good of no ordinary kind. Probably we shall not be able for years to fill his place in this respect. He was a respectable scholar in his own classics, well acquainted with Bible truth, a man of sound judgment and uprightness of character, and greatly beloved and honoured by the pupils. It is an interesting fact, that after his death, when his own relatives refused to comply with his request for Christian burial, some of his former pupils and associates dug, with their own hands, his grave, and buried him in the way he had desired. In his domestic life he had trials of no ordinary kind; but these, with his failing health, were probably blessed of God in ripening him for heaven. He went to his native place, twenty miles south of Ningpo, last summer, and there gradually sunk under his infirmities. Several Christian friends were with him towards the last, who testify to the holy serenity of his passing hours. While bewailing his short-comings in the various relations of life, he was enabled to look out of himself to Him who bore all our sins in his own body on the tree, and rejoiced in casting every care upon him. His last words were, "I go—I go." "Where?" he was asked; when he pointed his finger upward to where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God, and where his spirit was speedily borne.

These brief sketches in the history of the past year of the Ningpo church will exhibit some of our severe trials—yet are not these trials real mercies, too? and may we not in them give hearty thanks to God by whom they have been sent? Concerning all but one of the nine above mentioned, we have good reason to hope that they are now with Jesus in Paradise. And we might add the names of two little ones also removed within this period of time to a happier home than we could provide for them here. To them, death is gain; and with them all is peace, and joy, and love. Their bodies also being still united to Christ, do rest in their graves till the resurrection. Though we cannot share their counsels, and prayers, and love on earth, yet it is joyous to think that we shall have no further anxieties respecting them, and that they are now safe at home. We rejoice, too, that some "from the land of Sinim" have "come" to Christ and are now glorified spirits in our Father's house, where we may yet be privileged to meet them. We rejoice that we can point others to their pious lives and peaceful deaths, to show what the grace of God is able to accomplish in a heathen land. We would encourage our own faith, to sow the gospel seed beside all waters, in hope of a speedy and abundant harvest. We would rejoice too, in knowing that God has infinitely wise and gracious ends in these dispensations, which will yet be manifest to our delighted vision; and that we have reason to hope that even now they are to some degree producing the peaceable fruits of righteousness among us. Truly the mercies received by this infant church during the past year have been great; and when we consider that this church is in a heathen land, which the gospel has only recently reached, we have the greater cause to give thanks unto God, for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

CORISCO MISSION, AFRICA.

THE GOSPEL AMONG THE KOMBE.

The usefulness of native agency—A striking narrative.

Alongo, March 13, 1861.

It has been the desire of the mission to send out our young men, as soon as they can be qualified, to itinerate among the neighbouring tribes, and instruct them in the way of salvation. To this end there has been a vigorous effort made to bring the most promising talent into the ministry. But the history of the past has convinced us that a certain lay element must be introduced, if the work of evangelization is to meet the necessities of the whole field. This view led us to inaugurate a new set of labourers before brother Mackey left, but it has been more extensively carried out since his departure. Now there are a number of zealous young men, in different stages of their education, preparing to go forth as missionaries among their own people. The design of this letter is to give you a succinct history of one of this kind.

Provision had been made in the early part of last year for sending out a labourer of limited education among the Kombe tribe. He began his work on the 25th of July, on the coast, forty miles north of Corisco. The people received him kindly, and provided for his comfort by giving him a house to live in, and the use of another, suitable for holding meetings. He laboured in a quiet way till October, when it was decided to build a small house for his accommodation. Prior to this date the people had often besought us to build. Their urgency proceeded from a desire to obtain a missionary. They knew if we could be prevailed on to build, then their teacher would certainly remain with them.

After the teacher had been living some time among them, as it was near our communion season, word was sent to him desiring him to come to Corisco and attend the communion. The people were so fearful he would not return, that they said they would not let him come unless I went myself and brought him. Not having time, a boat was sent, and it was with great difficulty the people permitted him to come to Corisco. When he left, the elder head-man told him they would give him one moon and a-half, and if he did not return then, they would despair of seeing him.

When the arrangements had been completed to build, the chiefs were called into council and the design made known to them. They were informed that the time had arrived, in our judgment, to live among them. We had waited to see whether the Lord designed us to give them a missionary, and, being satisfied, we wished them to hear what we had to say.

First. We desired they would grant us the same privileges we enjoyed among the Bengas. When our friends came to our station at Kombe we expected they would not be molested; that the rights of hospitality to protect strangers would not be violated.

Second. That our boat should be allowed to pass in time of war.

Third. They should use their influence to return stolen or lost articles.

To these requests there was not a dissenting voice. One man, representing the assembly, said he would take the responsibility that whatever was lost or stolen should be restored, if possible.

The assembly then went out to select a suitable place for mission grounds. Several sites were pointed out, to which some objection was made. At length ground was chosen on the margin of a small stream near the sea. When our decision was made known an unforeseen trouble arose. The place was not large enough without encroaching on a native town near by. Some were for preferring another spot, but the old man who was the head-man of the town said, if the missionary wanted that place to build on, he would move his town farther. To such a generous offer I objected, saying there was sufficient room for both of us at present.

In one month from the time it was decided to build, the house was enclosed and roofed. The teacher had continued his meetings without intermission, and had also formed a small school. The scholars seemed delighted with their books, and showed a disposition to learn. It was evident, from the general good feeling existing among the people, that the blessing of the Lord was with us. There was a more encouraging evidence of the Lord's presence, especially in the small catechumen class that had been formed. Three persons had made known their intention to live for Christ, with whom I had a pleasant conversation, as to the foundation of their hope, before leaving Kombe.

On the 12th of February I made my usual monthly visit to Kombe. The same lively interest was manifested by the people in the meetings which were held. There was not that special feeling of awakening which might be called an outpouring of the Spirit. The interest seemed to be that of persons having what they esteemed the truth without any religious excitement. A number of the natives have been in the habit of prayer; of these there are some old people who, it would seem, may be trying to "enter in at the strait gate." One aged person, (a head-man,) in particular, was mentioned as rehearsing the discourses of the teacher to his friends in a neighbouring tribe where he went to trade. The catechumen class had increased to five persons, two others having been requested to wait a longer period before uniting. The members of the class just mentioned all professed to have been born again. The teacher requested me to examine them on their professed change of heart, which I did. Throughout the examinatisn, which continued nearly an hour, I was not able to discover anything in their answers that would cause me to doubt their sincerity.

What may be the result of this young teacher's labours cannot be known certainly. The means used have been so simple that the present encouragement has taken us rather by surprise. But we know that God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and weak things of the world to confound the mighty. We would not fail to remember that the Lord has a way of his own in which to accomplish his designs of mercy. The success already gained will evidently lead to the enlarging of the work towards the north. By the blessing of God, you may hear of a church formed among the Kombe at no distant period. The candidates for church-membership there may be deferred for a season, but they cannot be advised to wait long. God, by his grace, is, no doubt, establishing his church on these shores. We now begin to reap the rich fields which Divine grace has been preparing. When other labourers have been sent forth into the interior, then may we expect to hear the same glad news of souls born again, coming over the mountains to greet us.

W. CLEMENS.

William E. Schenck, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 821 Chestnut street.

All communications, reports, remittances of money, and orders for books, to be addressed to Mr. Winthrop Sargent, Superintendent of Colportage, and Business Correspondent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. Engles, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to James Dunlap, Esq., Treasurer.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the Board was held at the Publication Rooms, on Tuesday, June 11th, at 4 o'clock, P. M. An unusually large number of members were present, including many from other States. The Board was organized for the ensuing year by the election of its officers and committees, the most agreeable unanimity and good feeling prevailing. The following were the officers elected, viz.

Rev. W. W. Phillips, D. D., President.

A. W. Mitchell, M. D., Joseph B. Mitchell, Hon. George Sharswood, Vice-Presidents.

Rev. W. E. Schenck, D. D., Corresponding Secretary.

Rev. Joseph H. Jones, D. D., Recording Secretary.

Rev. William M. Engles, D. D., Editor.

The following were elected on the Executive Committee:

Rev. H. A. Boardman, D. D.,
Rev. William M. Engles, D. D.,
Rev. Joseph H. Jones, D. D.,
Rev. John Leyburn, D. D.,
Rev. William E. Schenck, D. D.,
Joseph B. Mitchell, Esq.,
James N. Dickson, Esq.,
Hon. George Sharswood,
James Russell, Esq.,
George Junkin, Jr., Esq.,
James Dunlap, Esq.

The following persons were elected Trustees of the Board for three years, viz.

Hon. George Sharswood,
Hon. William A. Porter,
William A. Ingham, Esq.,

and Winthrop Sargent, Esq., for two years, in place of William S. Martien, deceased.

In addition to attending to the usual business, the following minute was adopted in relation to the late William S. Martien.

"Resolved, That in the recent death of Mr. William S. Martien, this Board has sustained a great and grievous loss. He was one of that little band which, in a time of the church's anxiety and peril, helped to accomplish the organization of this Board, for the conservation and diffusion of the truth. From its beginning until his death, he has been an active and useful member of the Board, helping in every practicable way to advance its interests with an unflagging and generous devotion. While, as a Board, we would humbly bow to the sovereign will of the great Head of the church, who has seen fit to remove him, we will cherish his memory as that of a brother beloved, and of an honoured fellow-servant in the work of the Lord.

"Resolved, That we hereby tender our hearty sympathies to the deeply bereaved family of Mr. Martien, with our earnest prayer that the God of all grace may comfort them with the rich consolations of the blessed gospel."

ACTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1861.

After the opening of the General Assembly in the Seventh church, in the city of Philadelphia, the following Standing Committee on the Board of Publication was announced by the Moderator, viz.—Rev. G. W. McPhail, D. D., Rev. John M. Hastings, Rev. Thomas G. Murphey; ruling elders, J. Thompson, and G. W. Frost.

The Annual Report of the Board was afterwards presented by the Corresponding Secretary, Rev. William E. Schenck, D. D., and referred by the Assembly to the above committee.

On Tuesday morning, May 21st, the Standing Committee brought in their report, when the Corresponding Secretary, by invitation of the Assembly, addressed the body. After a discussion, in the course of which many inquiries were made and answered, in regard to the various operations and expenses of the Board, the following resolutions, reported by the Standing Committee, were adopted as offered, without amendment.

Resolved, 1. That this Assembly recognizes in its Board of Publication an agency of incalculable value and importance, for spreading abroad a knowledge of the pure truths of God's holy word, as exhibited in the standards and teachings of our own beloved church; and that the Assembly approves of the zeal, fidelity, economy, and efficiency with which the affairs of the Board have been conducted during the past year.

Resolved, 2. That the Assembly unites with the Board in hereby recording its sense of the loss sustained by the church in the death of the late Joseph P. Engles, who was for nearly nineteen years the Publishing Agent of the Board, and in expressing its sense of the diligence, integrity, and fidelity with which he had so long served the church in that office.

Resolved, 3. The Assembly is gratified to learn that, in accordance with its former recommendations, the Board continues to issue works suitable for juvenile reading, and for Sabbath-school libraries. Also, that the Sabbath-school Visitor continues to extend in circulation and usefulness: and it is hereby urged upon pastors, sessions, Sabbath-school superintendents, and teachers, to introduce these books and the Visitor into their respective schools.

Resolved, 4. As the Board continues to receive numerous applications for donations of books through its Distribution Fund, the Assembly would again earnestly recommend to benevolent individuals to remember that fund in their benefactions; and as a large proportion of the applications are from needy and mission Sabbath-schools, the Assembly would especially recommend to the Sabbath-schools throughout the church to contribute a suitable proportion of their gifts to Christ's cause through this Distribution Fund.

Resolved, 5. The Assembly is pleased to learn that so many more colporteurs have been employed, and so much larger an amount of labour accomplished than in any former year. It highly approves of the effort of the Board to prosecute and extend its colportage operations on the Pacific coast, and it would reiterate its recommendation of former years, that all the churches help to sustain this good work by their prayers and their regular contributions.

THE COLPORTEUR IN THE CAMP.

We copy below an extract from a letter just received from a colporteur labouring in Illinois. It will be seen that he finds the military encampment there an inviting field for labour. Let us ask one question—Why is it that Christians do not more frequently remember in their prayers the colporteurs of our Board? Is the work not worth praying for?

Springfield, Illinois, May 11.

My heart has been gladdened during the past month by the many encouragements received from Christians, not only in our own immediate connection, but of other branches of the church of Christ. Many have given me a cordial welcome, and an interest in their petitions to the throne of Divine grace. One good old lady said she had been praying for me ever since she heard I was at work in the city, and another, that I would be especially remembered in the ladies' weekly prayer-meeting. My work among the Irish and German Roman Catholics has also afforded me much consolation. During my labours in Iowa last summer, I had but little access to the Roman Catholics, but here every Roman Catholic family has accepted tracts from me, and most of them promised to read them.

Camp Yates has also afforded me a fine opportunity for conversing with many of the volunteers on the subject of personal religion. They accepted the proffered tracts with avidity. That excellent tract "O, Don't Swear," was used, I think, to good advantage. A young man came towards me when I was distributing tracts, uttering terrible oaths. I immediately gave him a copy of that tract on swearing. He first looked at the tract, and then at me; and then said I was the best man he had seen that day, and that the tract was just the one for his case. He then asked me to select a book for him, which I did, and, after paying for it, he went away, saying he would not take five dollars for it. Another soldier, noticing that my books were published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, observed that they were good books, and recommended them to the crowd, saying that his father was a good Presbyterian up the country. Another wanted to know if I had any books on tactics. I told him I had, and showed him a copy of the "Christian Soldiers," and "Life of Colonel Gardiner." He then wanted to know why it was that I did not bring out some novels, or story books, as they would sell better than the ones I had with me. I then explained to them the object of my work, and the superiority of my books over the sugared poison of light literature, which would do them no good, and that my object was not to make money, but to do them good—which sentiments the majority of the company endorsed. I pray that many may be awakened to know their lost state through the reading of those books and tracts. C. H.

HELP FOR MISSION SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

Through the beneficence of Christian friends, and of some Sabbath-schools in the East, the Board has been able to make donations of books to many needy Mission Sabbath-schools in the West. The following is an acknowledgment from one of them in Wisconsin.

Rev. W. E. Schenck, D. D.

Dear Brother—In behalf of the Presbyterian Sabbath-school in this place, I gratefully acknowledge the receipt of the fifteen dollar library of the excellent books of our Board of Publication. You have made an excellent selection. I feel confident the books are just the thing we need. We hope and trust they will do much good in this field, and will serve as an antidote to the poison of error so prevalent here. Our Board is engaged in a great and good work in publishing books of such sterling merit, and in spreading them in the destitute parts of our land. When our circumstances will allow, it will give us pleasure to contribute to the funds of this Board and of all the Boards. We hope to be able now to keep up our school during the winter, and we shall labour the more zealously to imbue the minds of the young with the knowledge of saving truth from the encouragement we have received so opportunely from the Board in the donation of 99 books, carefully selected from its Sabbath-school Library.

With sentiments of fraternal regard, and with prayers for the prosperity and success of all our Boards in their work and labour of love, I remain

Yours, in gospel bonds, P. C.

We earnestly ask our Sabbath-schools to give special attention to the 4th resolution of the General Assembly, published in this number. By giving aid to our Distribution Fund they will assist the Board in doing a great and beneficent work among mission and needy Sabbath-schools.

THE SWISS WATCHMAKER.

A minister was on a steamer on the lake of Geneva. He was sitting on the deck near the stern, when he saw, in the fore-part, a man who was looking intently towards him. He rose, and wishing to know the cause of this apparent interest in himself, he walked towards the man, who, immediately bowing to him, with great emotion exclaimed, "How kind you are, sir, to come to me, for I was longing to speak with you."

"Why do you wish to speak to me?"

"Why, sir, because, through God's mercy, you are my spiritual father; and not only mine, but also of my six children and their mother." He stated that he resided in the mountains, and was by trade a watchmaker; that his former habits had been very dissolute; and that he had made his wife and children as unhappy as possible—"till the last winter," said he, "when I received from a neighbour a little book entitled 'The Watchmaker of Geneva,' of which you are the author. I read it one evening to my family, and my heart was subdued; and, by the grace of God, from that evening we have read the Bible, which we had scarcely ever opened; and first my wife, and then myself, and my elder children, have understood and believed the love which is in Jesus; and we desire to serve him, for he has redeemed us. You will understand then, dear sir, why I felt so happy when I was told this morning that you were in the vessel, and why I was so desirous to thank you." The minister had an interesting conversation with this humble disciple; and he is happy to be able to say that the watchmaker and his family continued to adorn their Christian profession by a steady walk in the paths of righteousness and true holiness.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. Essays and Discourses, Practical and Historical. By Cortlandt Van Rensselaer, D. D. Large 12mo. with a portrait, pp. 435. Price $1.00. Postage 22 cents.

This volume will be warmly welcomed by the numerous Christian friends and acquaintances of the late Dr. Van Rensselaer. No man was more dear to the Presbyterian church than he. His name and memory are fragrant in all our Zion. The portrait in the front of this volume, engraved by Ritchie, is an admirable likeness of the author. The contents of the book are very various. The "Centennial Historical Discourse" preached before the General Assembly at New Orleans, in May 1858, and never before published, is of itself worth the price of the volume.

II. Autobiography of William Neill, D. D., with a Selection of his Sermons. By the Rev. Joseph H. Jones, D. D., pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. With a portrait. 12mo. pp. 272. Price 75 cents. Postage 15 cents.

This volume will be found exceedingly readable. Dr. Neill lived to a good old age. In the course of his life, he mingled among men of note and influence in church and state, and his recollections were clear and vivid. His autobiography will, on these accounts, interest very many readers. The sermons contained in the volume are strong and impressive exhibitions of gospel truth, the perusal of which can hardly fail to edify and instruct the reader. The prefixed portrait by Sartain is admirable.

III. Walking with God, or, The Practical Christian Life. By James B. Rankin. 18mo. pp. 252. Price 30 and 35 cents. Postage 8 cents.

An excellent work on practical religion. Its fourteen chapters contain a vast number of important hints in regard to Sabbath observance, the reading of the Scriptures, prayer, liberality, self-examination, domestic and other duties, considered as parts of the great work of walking with God, and aids thereto.

IV. The Bible True. In German. Einleitung zur Heiligen Schrift. Von Dr. Joseph Franz Allioli. 18mo. pp. 106. Price 10 cents. Postage 1 cent.

This little book contains just such truths as the German population of our great cities need. We hope it may, by the hand of Christian liberality, be widely scattered among them.

V. La Conversion de Luther. Par H. Bonar. Traduit de l'Anglais. 18mo. pp. 36. Price 3 cents. Postage 1 cent.

This little French work, like everything that comes from the pen of Bonar, is worth perusal. It is well adapted to awaken religious thought and inquiry in the minds of its readers.

VI. "The Soldier's Series." Price 10 cents. Postage 4 cents.

This is a package of twelve new and well-selected Tracts. They are admirably fitted to interest and bless our numberless youth now rushing into military life. Let our readers who have relatives or friends in the camp, procure and send them this "Soldier's Series."

VII. Fields White to the Harvest. By the Rev. R. H. Beattie. Tract No. 248. Pp. 20.

A missionary view of the present state of the field, as inviting to gospel labours.

VIII. The Blessedness of Giving. By the Rev. P. D. Gurley, D. D. Tract No. 249. Pp. 16.

An admirable tract on a highly important theme. It was first printed at the recommendation and expense of the author's Presbytery.

IX. A Plea for Sympathy in behalf of the Ministry. To the members of the Church. By the Rev. W. S. White, D. D. Tract No. 250. Pp. 8.

Donations received for the Colportage Fund of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, during the month of May 1861.

JAMES DUNLAP, Treasurer.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.

No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

ACTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1861.

The Assembly appointed as its Standing Committee on the Report of the Board of Church Extension the following persons, viz., Ministers, J. G. Montfort, D. D., R. McInnis, J. D. Wells; Ruling Elders, W. H. Fisher, J. B. White. This Committee, on Saturday, May 18th, presented the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted by the Assembly, viz.

Resolved 1*st*, That the Report be approved and published.

2*d*. That the Assembly approve of the fidelity of the Board of Church Extension in the discharge of its high trust.

3*d*. That the cause of Church Extension be commended to our people as one of the permanent agencies of the church in the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.

STATEMENTS IN THE ASSEMBLY.

While the above resolutions were pending, the Secretary of the Board of Church Extension said,

"The command of an ancient general to his army, marching through a desert, was, 'Keep the wells open.' He saw that his host must perish, and every oasis in that waste disappear, if the drifting sands were permitted to fill and choke its fountains. Regarding the local churches of our land as the wells that gather and pour forth the waters of salvation for its inhabitants, the providential voice of the great Captain of our Israel seems at this time to say to his people, 'Keep the wells open.' They are now in peculiar danger of being closed. Amid the dust of the mighty conflict that fills our land, every interest of the Church may be buried. Your heralds of the cross to foreign lands, your home missionary reapers, your students girding on the armour of light, your colporteurs scattering the printed pages of truth, your ministers, driven by age or disease to drop the sickle, are all likely to be overlooked amid the tread of armies, and the confused noise of war. But none of these departments of your work are more likely to be neglected than your Church Extension enterprise—the enterprise that seeks to throw the sheltering sanctuary over your houseless churches—your unprotected wells of salvation. Not a few seem to think that all church building will now cease, and that, for a time, at least, no more aid need be given in the erection of houses of worship. While it is probably true that comparatively few sanctuaries will be begun in these troublous times, it is also true that the number of applications to your Board is nearly up to the usual average; and that one hundred requests for aid, calling for almost $40,000, are now on file, awaiting the receipt of means to meet them. We have the names of nearly seven hundred churches in our connection who have no sanctuary, and, one by one, these churches, with those annually added to our roll, are coming to the point where they must build or die. Hence, for years past, about two hundred church buildings have been annually begun in our midst. Hence, too, we have constantly many church edifices in such a stage of progress that a pause will entail almost entire loss of what has been done, and many others so nearly completed that a small amount of aid will fit them for occupancy. We must now, also, have at least two hundred and fifty churches greatly oppressed with debt. Some of these debts can remain; but some are due to enemies, who will gladly foreclose them; some to poor men, whose families will suffer if they remain unpaid; and some to insolvent estates already in the clutches of the sheriff. There are brethren in this Assembly whose sanctuaries may be sold away from them before they return to their homes. In not a few instances, the honour of religion, as well as the life of churches, is at stake. Shall we not prove the fellowship of the saints in this hour of need? Shall we not bear the burdens of our sinking brethren, and so fulfil the law of love? The highest patriotism, too, now bids us keep our wells of salvation flowing. We have fallen on times in which the basest, as well as the noblest passions of men, are stirred to the uttermost. It must be the mission of the church to cherish all that is true, and right, and lawful, and loving, and to repress all that is base, malignant, and vindictive. If she cast not the healing salt of grace into the bitter fountains that gush so fiercely on every side, barrenness and death must overspread our heritage. If, as far as in her lieth, she follow not the things that make for righteous peace, she will be found wanting in this time of trial. If she suffer her destitute flocks to scatter and disband; if she sets adrift her labourers in her wastes, she must cover herself with the shame of one that fainteth in the day of adversity. Small, indeed, must be the strength of our church if she cannot sustain her benevolent enterprises in their present proportions. One cent a month from every communicant in our connection will keep the treasury of your Board of Church Extension as full as ever it has been. Four cents a week from every member of our body will carry on all your Boards with undiminished resources. Is there a poor widow, or a child in our Sabbath-schools, that, by diligent self-denial, could not give this? Brethren, we have left the luxury of doing good too much to our rich churches and our rich men. God seems to be crippling many of these, that all may learn their responsibility and share the blessing. The question, whether your Boards can go forward with your work, is resolving itself into the simple question, whether our ministers and ruling elders will give every member the opportunity and the earnest invitation to put a hand to the burdens now grown too heavy for the few who have hitherto borne them."

REMARKS OF DR. MUSGRAVE.

He (Dr. Musgrave) would not have risen but for his desire to make a remark or two in relation to the enterprise of Church Extension. His experience in connection with the Board of Domestic Missions, which he had served so many years, impressed deeply upon his mind the very great importance of providing houses of worship for our congregations, especially in missionary fields. He was persuaded that, if the brethren could look at this church building enterprise from the stand-point which he had long occupied, they would be convinced that it was true economy, even in regard to other Boards of the church.

Secondly. Very much of the missionary funds of the Domestic Board is absorbed in sustaining missions which would soon be self-sustaining if they had suitable churches. Many enterprises that promise, at first, great success, are abandoned for want of houses of worship; whereas, if they had houses, they would not only be sustained, but would be able to support themselves.

Thirdly. We are constantly called upon in the Board of Domestic Missions to continue or to increase appropriations, because the people are burdened with church debts. Either the want of edifices, or the burden of debt on those that have houses, is the great cause of continued demands on the Domestic Board. The very best method of economizing the missionary funds, is to build houses. Build houses, and they will find occupants who will rent pews and sustain the missionaries.

THE FUND FOR DISABLED MINISTERS.

When fairly considered, there is perhaps no interest of our church more justly entitled to prayerful sympathy and liberality, than that which is indicated by the caption of this article. If Jesus so loves his disciples that a cup of cold water given to them in his name, shall bring a reward, surely He must look with approving eye upon those who, from the same motive, care for his ministering servants whom disease or age has withdrawn from their field of labour, without the means of livelihood and without the ability to procure it. This interesting department of beneficence has been gradually taking stronger hold upon the hearts of our people. But in order that it might be adequate to increasing demands, it became necessary that it should be urged upon public attention. This good work, we are most happy to announce, the Rev. J. H. Jones, D.D., has, at the suggestion of some eminent ministers, consented to undertake. Dr. Jones's generous zeal in behalf of this cause for many years, is well known, and his eminent fitness for presenting it to the churches none can doubt. We are therefore certain that his appeals will meet with a cordial response, as we are also that he will have the gratifying consciousness that, though withdrawing from an affectionate pastoral charge, yet his valuable labours are to be bestowed upon an enterprise entirely worthy of them. Dr. Jones enters upon his work, we have been informed, with a promised support which is independent of the contributions of the churches for their needy brethren, and without the machinery or the expense of a new organization.—Standard.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The Thirty-first General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in the United States met in St. Louis, on the 16th of May, 1861. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. Milton Bird, D. D., from Hebrews xiii. 1: "Let brotherly love continue." The absence of important Boards, and the want of documents, contributed to render it difficult to proceed with business. The report of the Committee on the State of Religion showed a greater ingathering for the last year than for several preceding years. Rev. Dr. Bird submitted a preamble and series of resolutions, which were adopted. They refer to the state of the country, and recommend the cultivation and practice of Christian love and charity. The last designated the 22d of June as a day of fasting and prayer. The greatest harmony prevailed during the session, which adjourned to meet at Owensboro', Ky., May 1862.

FORM OF BEQUEST FOR DISABLED MINISTERS OR FAMILIES OF DECEASED MINISTERS.

I give and bequeath to my executors hereinafter named, ——— dollars, in trust, nevertheless, that they shall within ——— months after my decease, pay the same to George H. Van Gelder, Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, or to his successor for the time being in said office, for the use of such disabled ministers, and their families, as the said, The Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America shall or may designate.

NOTA.—This form will do for a pecuniary bequest. If stocks, or land, or other property is given, the phraseology should be modified to suit the case.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST

TO ANY OF THE

BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME XI. No 7.—Extra. | PHILADELPHIA, JULY, 1861. | PRICE PER YEAR Fifty Cents.

Twenty-Fourth Annual Report.

THE Board of Foreign Missions have received from the Executive Committee a Report of the Foreign Missionary work, as conducted by them during the past year. This report has been considered and approved by the Board, and is now submitted to the General Assembly.

They would also report the death of four respected members of their body, the Rev. Francis Herron, D. D., Rev. John T. Edgar, D. D., Rev. Nicholas Murray, D. D., and Mr. William S. Martien. The removal to Canada of an esteemed member, the Rev. John Thomson, D. D., causes another vacant place in the Board.

NEW YORK, May 6, 1861.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Executive Committee present to the Board of Foreign Missions the following report of the missionary work under their charge, for the year ending April 30, 1861.

FINANCES.

THE Receipts from all sources, as shown by the Report of the Treasurer, have been $211,108 41. This sum includes the balance of $3,544 55 in the Treasury at the end of last year. It also includes the sum of $8,600, of moneys received from the India government for losses incurred by the destruction of mission property during the mutiny of the Sepoys in 1857—this sum being transferred to the account of current expenses. It is with much regret the Committee have found it necessary to use this money in order to meet these expenses; and they desire to have the matter properly appreciated. The serious fact remains, that the receipts of the Board from the ordinary sources of income were not equal to the expenses of the year; these amounted to $211,080 03. The deficiency in the income of the Board would have been still larger, but for certain measures of prudence adopted in view of the extraordinary state of our public matters. In the later months of the year all expenses that could be avoided, without involving actual retrenchment, were considered inexpedient. And this line of proceeding was extended even to the payments towards the outfit of brethren under appointment as missionaries, which are usually made in advance of their time of departure, but which have this year been deferred. No less than thirteen new labourers are under appointment to different fields, besides three or four who desire to return to their former stations, and in ordinary times arrangements for their being sent out would before this have been well completed.

It is with deep concern that the Committee have thus to report that the enlargement of the missionary work has been to a considerable extent arrested. And they earnestly desire that the attention of the church may be speedily given to this greatly important subject.

To European friends in India and to the Rajah of Kapurthala, the missions of the Board have been indebted for continued and very liberal pecuniary support, which the Committee gratefully acknowledge. They also report with special interest the amount of $7,149 69 received from children in Sabbath-schools and other young donors. It is a cause of sincere regret that the amount acknowledged from this source is $1,727 69 less than the sum received in the preceding year. This may be owing to the special appeal that was made to them in behalf of another object, and which was responded to with remarkable liberality. The Committee do not wish to restrict the right of choice as to objects which should receive the pecuniary support of the children of the church, but they deem it proper to repeat here the remark made by them in their last report. They "look forward to the time as not far distant when not only all the congregations, but all the members of the church, will aid in the spread of the gospel among the heathen, both by prayers and pecuniary gifts, as the Lord has prospered them. The training of the children to understand this work, and to take a practical part in its advancement, must be considered one of the best ways of securing this happy result. And hence the Committee regard the circulation of the little newspaper, The Foreign Missionary, with deep and increasing interest. It is published as a means of aiding parents, Sabbath-school teachers, and ministers, in the missionary training of the beloved youth of the church; and a copy is sent free of charge to the children of each family in every Sabbath-school making regular collections for the Board. Such collections the Committee consider a proper and useful part of the training of children, and their aggregate amount is important already, while it might be greatly enlarged by a more general adoption of this system; but the main things in the case are, the good habits thereby formed, and the intelligent interest awakened, which will yield rich missionary fruit in coming years."

The fund for theological education under the direction of the Waldenses, now the main evangelizing church of Italy, still needs the sum of $5,900 to complete the investment which the General Assembly of 1855 recommended to be made for that important object. The interest of the money received has been duly forwarded. The fund for the education of the children of missionaries also remains the same in amount as was reported last year, and the payments from it have exhausted the interest.

While the Committee have had to report a serious deficiency in the ordinary receipts of the treasury, which they ascribe mainly to the lamentable state of public affairs in the country, they feel constrained at the same time to place on record their grateful testimony to the earnest and warm liberality of very many of the members of our churches. In no former year, perhaps, have there been more numerous or more signal examples of this kind.

PUBLICATIONS.

No material change has occurred in regard to the publications of the Board. The newspaper Foreign Missionary has an increased circulation, 32,500 copies being sent out monthly; the pamphlet edition has a circulation of 4,200 copies. The Home and Foreign Record has been the organ of the Board as heretofore, in connection with the other Boards of the Church. Of the last Annual Report 3,700 copies were published in an octavo edition, and 16,200 as an extra number of the Record.

MISSIONARIES AND ASSISTANT MISSIONARIES SENT OUT.

[To the Choctaw Mission, one; to the New Granada Mission, two; to the Corisco Mission, Africa, one; to the Furrukhabad Mission, India, four; to the Lodiana Mission, India, four; to the Mission in Siam, six.]

Northern Indians.

CHIPPEWA AND OTTAWA MISSION.

Grand Traverse.—Rev. Peter Dougherty, and Mrs. Dougherty; Mr. John Porter, farmer, and Mrs. Porter; Mrs. M. C. Gibson, and Miss Henrietta Dougherty, teachers; Miss Jane McCalvin, assistant; Mrs. Mary McConnel, superintendent of domestic affairs.

Little Traverse.—Mr Andrew Porter, teacher and superintendent, Mrs. Porter; Miss Ann Porter, teacher.

No important changes have taken place in either branch of this mission during the past year. The different families have been favoured with good health—have been permitted to prosecute their work in quietness, and have not been without tokens of the divine favour in connection with their labours. At the same time they have had occasion for anxiety on behalf of the poor Indians for whom they labour. White men are insinuating themselves more and more into the district occupied by the Indians; and whilst some of them set examples of honesty and industry, others exert an influence of an entirely opposite character. Our missionary brethren plainly see that religion and Christian education alone can fortify the minds of the Indians against this accumulation of evil example; and it is gratifying to know that they are plying these means with all possible zeal and energy.

GRAND TRAVERSE.

During the last summer Miss Polly A. Beach resigned her situation and returned home, with the best wishes of the Executive Committee. Miss Henrietta Dougherty was appointed in her place.

This station comprises an organized church and a boarding-school, each of which deserves a distinct notice. The school is composed of children of both sexes, and is intended to have an equal number of each. The whole number has varied from forty to fifty. There was a vacation in the school, in the spring, of three weeks, for the purpose of effecting some necessary repairs about the building. With this exception, it was continued regularly and without interruption throughout the year. During the latter part of the year the number of girls has not been more than seventeen,—thirteen Indian and four whites. In relation to these, Mr. Dougherty writes: "They have been making very gratifying improvement. Their teacher manifests much interest in their welfare, and they appear very contented and happy. I have been very much interested in hearing a class of these girls—most of them about ten years of age—recite lessons in history and arithmetic. Seldom will children of their age be found in any school to give as correct and prompt answers in history as they do; relating events that have occurred, the dates when they took place, and the names of persons who were prominent in them. It is pleasant, also, to hear them pronounce the English distinctly and correctly." In relation to the boys' department, Mr. Dougherty further remarks: "The boys'-school was small in the summer, but filled up in the autumn. There are at the present time twenty-three Indian and five white boys. They behave well as a general thing, and have given much less trouble the past year than usual. They are younger than those of former years, but are making as good progress in their studies as any set of boys we have ever had. The more advanced are studying Vulgar Fractions, English Grammar, Natural Philosophy, History, and Geography." Nor has this school been without its spiritual fruits. Nine of the young men who have completed their studies in the institution are consistent members of the church, and exemplary members of society. Three of its pupils have entered higher institutions of learning with the view of perfecting themselves in the use of the English and other branches of useful knowledge. One young man, formerly a member of the school, is acting as interpreter for the missionaries, and performs this duty with much acceptance to them.

Mr. Dougherty gives an interesting account of the church, both in its past and present condition. The Sabbath and weekly services are well attended. The members conduct themselves with propriety and consistency, and show a sincere desire to promote the spiritual welfare of their fellow-men. One evidence of this is found in the fact that they maintain a weekly prayer-meeting among themselves at the house of the chief, which is well attended, and is conducted with much propriety. There are at the present time forty-four members of the church in good standing; of members formerly connected with it, fourteen removed a year or more ago to a different part of the country and organized themselves into a church under the care of Mr. Grensky, formerly Mr. Dougherty's interpreter; twelve are residing at Bear River, and are members of the church at that place; five have been married into Catholic families, and are residing in their villages; eleven have been called from time to eternity; twenty-five have wandered away to other settlements—some of whom, it is known, are sustaining a good Christian character, in connection with other branches of the church, whilst others, it is feared, have fallen into grievous sin, and dishonoured their profession. Since the organization of the church one hundred and thirty-two persons have been received to its communion, twenty-six of whom were white persons, received for the most part on certificate of membership, whilst there have been one hundred and three Indians received on a profession of their faith. There have been no additions to the church during the past year. The missionary brethren feel the need of the influence of the Holy Spirit, and they ask the prayers of God's people, that this great blessing may be imparted to them from on high.

LITTLE TRAVERSE.

The station at this place, sometimes known as Bear River, continues under the care of Mr. Andrew Porter. Like the station at Grand Traverse, it embraces in its care a church organization and a school. The children attending the school are boarded in part—receiving one meal a day at the institution—but lodging with their parents at night. The number of pupils has been materially increased, there being at present nineteen boys and seventeen girls. These children are reported as orderly in their deportment, and as pursuing their studies with success. Their studies are of the more elementary kind, with which are combined the study of the word of God, hymns, catechism, &c. No report has been furnished of the number of persons connected with the church, or whether any have been added during the past year. Mr. Porter conducts weekly and Sabbath services among them, which are well attended. The tract entitled "Dennis and the Priest" has been translated into the Chippewa language, and been published and circulated among the people, and will, it is hoped, do much good. The presence of unprincipled white men here, as at the other station, is the cause of much anxiety, and shows the necessity of working while it is day to protect this people from the pernicious influences which surround them.

North-western Indians.

OMAHA MISSION.

Blackbird Hills.—Rev. R. J. Burtt, Mrs. Burtt; Mr. Isaac Black, teacher, and Mrs. Black; Mr. Joseph Betz, farmer, and Mrs. Betz.

Dr. Sturges, who had had charge of this station for three years, was compelled last spring, on account of the failure of his wife's health, to withdraw. It was a matter of regret both to him and the Committee that necessity was laid upon him to give up a work to which he had devoted his energies with so much cheerfulness, and which he had discharged with so much acceptance both to the Board and the Indians among whom he lived. Misses Smith and Hamilton, both of whom had been efficient teachers in the school, asked and received their dismission at the same time. Mr. and Mrs. Long continued in the service of the mission until the autumn, and were then released by mutual consent. Mr. Burtt, who was for a number of years a teacher in Spencer Academy, and more recently a student of the Theological Seminary at Alleghany, was appointed to take the charge of the station, and reached there the latter part of May. Mr. Isaac Black, a member of the church at Newcastle, Pennsylvania, was appointed to the post of principal teacher, and reached the station at the same time. Both of these brethren with their wives have been severely afflicted since their appointment. Mr. and Mrs. Black lost one of their children on their way out, and were compelled to seek a grave for it among strangers. Mr. and Mrs. Burtt lost an interesting little daughter soon after their arrival at the station, and some months later were called to mourn the death of a second child. Mr. Betz, who had acted as farmer at Spencer Academy for a number of years, was appointed to take Mr. Long's place soon after he left, and has been filling that department of labour since that time.

There was much sickness among the children during the months of May and June; and one pupil was removed by death. With these exceptions, the mission families and the pupils have been favoured with excellent health; and the various departments of labour have been carried on with efficiency. The school is regarded, there is reason to believe, with growing favour by the Indians. The prejudice against sending girls to school is giving way, and the importance of education to either sex is more fully appreciated than formerly. In the early part of the year there were only twenty-four pupils; in the autumn, however, the number had increased to forty-two, of whom sixteen were females. In relation to their progress, Mr. Burtt remarks that "the boys and girls had made great progress in cleanliness, industry, and in their studies."

The church—which had been partially broken up by the removal of so many of its members—has been reorganized and is doing well. Mr. Burtt has constantly visited the Indian villages, and made known to the people, as well as he could through the medium of an imperfect interpreter, the unsearchable riches of Christ. He has always had good and attentive audiences, and from time to time has witnessed manifestations of tenderness which he hopes were prompted by the Holy Ghost. He has recently secured the aid of a more competent interpreter, and he hopes that the Gospel may thus be brought to bear with more power upon the hearts of the Indians. In relation to the Sabbath-school, Mr. Black remarks: "There is an increasing interest in our Sabbath school, and when we shall be able to extend it to others besides our scholars, it will prove a blessing to the community at large." The farm connected with the mission has been very well managed, and has not only furnished important exercise and training for the boys, but is yielding a large proportion of the produce necessary for the support of the school. The Omahas are not yet entirely free from occasional annoyances from the hostile Sioux. During the summer one of their number was killed, and several narrowly escaped a band of these marauders at no great distance from the mission premises. There is reason to hope, however, that these annoyances will not again be permitted to occur, and that the Omahas will be left to pursue in quietness the paths of improvement that are now opened to them and their children. La Fleshe and the other chiefs are all very cordial in the support they give to the school; and they are equally desirous that the adult population should have the advantages of religious instruction.

INDIAN ORPHAN INSTITUTE.

Mr. James Williams, superintendent, and Mrs. Williams; Miss Margaret A. Patterson and Mrs. Cora A. Shields, teachers.

This institution occupies the place and premises which were formerly known as the Iowa and Sac mission. The reasons for the change in its character were set forth in the last annual report. Mr. and Mrs. Irvin, who for many years had charge of the station, were compelled to ask their release last spring, mainly on account of the impaired health of Mrs. Irvin. Mr. Thorne, formerly of the Kickapoo mission, occupied the place for three months, and was then released by mutual consent. He carries with him into his new sphere of labor the best wishes of the Committee. He was succeeded by Mr. Williams, who had been connected with the mission as teacher for a number of years. Miss Fullerton, who had been connected with this and the Otoe mission for several years, was compelled to ask her release last spring on account of the complete prostration of her health. She was regarded as an excellent teacher and devoted Christian, and her loss has been most sensibly felt.

The school, as now constituted, is intended for the benefit of the orphan children of the various tribes scattered over the Indian country. The number of these children, for whose education no provision has been made, is very considerable; and the Committee are compelled to look to the friends of missions for the chief means of their support. The farm connected with the institution is a valuable one, and will no doubt be made to contribute materially toward its support, but beyond this it must be sustained entirely from missionary funds. At the present time the school consists of twenty-three boys and eleven girls, representing Pawnees, Iowas, Kickapoos and Sioux. The progress of the children in their studies is satisfactory, and it is hoped, also, that the religious instruction they are receiving will be made effectual to their salvation.

The Foreign Missionary for April contains an account of the happy and triumphant death of a Sac girl, who received her education in this mission.

The Committee would commend this institution to the liberality and the prayerful remembrance of God's people.

CREEK MISSION.

Tallahassee.—Rev. R. M. Loughridge, and Mrs. Loughridge; Mr. William S. Robertson, principal teacher, and Mrs. Robertson; Mr. J. P. Davis, assistant teacher of boys; Mr. R. B. McCollough, farmer, and Mrs. McCollough; Misses A. M. Turner, Joana Mills, and Nannie Shepherd, teachers of girls; Miss Mary Vance, superintendent of domestic affairs.

Kowetah.—Rev. David Winslett, native preacher.

Choskah.—Mr. J. M. Perryman, native licentiate preacher.

The mission at Tallahassee has been subjected to severe and varied trials the last year. In the month of August Mr. and Mrs. Loughridge were called to mourn the death of an interesting child. In the month of January, the mission was more severely afflicted in the death of Miss Mary H. McKean, one of its most thoroughly tried and valued teachers. This painful event occurred on the 21st of January, 1861, after a severe illness of more than five weeks. Though delirious much of this time, yet she gave, in the calm and lucid intervals which she occasionally enjoyed, the most satisfactory evidence that she was prepared for death. She had been connected with the mission as a teacher between three and four years, during which period she not only gave the strongest proofs of her fidelity to the cause to which she had devoted her life, but won the esteem and affection both of her associates and the children under her care. She was a member of the church in Washington, Pennsylvania, and was highly esteemed by the pastor and people of that congregation. The mission was further tried by the prevalence of whooping-cough at one time, followed by measles and typhoid fever at a later period. There were as many as forty cases of whooping-cough among the children at one time; and during the winter there were not less than seventy-five cases of measles, followed in several instances by typhoid fever. This state of things, it will readily be conceived, imposed a heavy burthen of care and anxiety upon the members of the mission; and it is not surprising that we have been called to record one death among them.

There have been also a number of changes in the missionary corps during the year. Miss Garrison, whose name was mentioned in the last report, at the close of the term in August returned to her friends in Missouri, having spent three years of efficient labour in the institution. Miss Vance, who was formerly connected with the school at Wapanucka, readily undertook to supply the place vacated by Miss Garrison, and has been in the full discharge of her duties since the commencement of the present term. After the discontinuance of the Kickapoo mission, Mr. and Mrs. McCollough cheerfully consented to be transferred to this mission, where they have been actively engaged since the middle of last summer.

The school at Tallahassee has been conducted as in former years. It was suspended for three weeks during the winter, on account of measles. The number of pupils in all has been one hundred and twenty-one, viz: one hundred and fifteen boarders and six day scholars. Some of the boarders have been irregular in their attendance, and a larger number than usual are mere beginners in their education. The studies pursued by the different classes embrace reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, history, English grammar, and one class are studying algebra, Latin, and Greek. The progress of the pupils has been satisfactory, and Mr. Loughridge speaks in commendatory terms of the fidelity and efficiency of the teachers. Mr. Loughridge preaches at Tallahassee statedly, and occasionally at three other places. He has devoted a portion of his time to translating the Acts of the Apostles and a tract on baptism into the Creek language. He has bestowed much labour upon the latter, and hopes to have it in circulation in the course of a few weeks. Mr. Winslett continues to occupy the station at Kowetah, but preaches at several other places. A protracted meeting was held at Kowetah in September, which was largely attended, and much good, it is hoped, was done. Three persons were received to the communion of the church on a profession of faith, and the same number of children were received by baptism. Mr. Perryman, a licentiate of the Creek Presbytery, has been received under the care of the Board as an assistant missionary. His principal station is at Choskah, but he has several other places where he occasionally preaches. No detailed account of his labours has as yet been received at the Mission House.

The missionaries lament the low state of piety in their churches at the present time, and especially that there have been so few additions during the past year. Still they have reason to be encouraged by the fact that so much of the leaven of divine truth has been diffused among the people, and by the assurance that God will, in his own time, bless it to the salvation of multitudes of souls. The character of the Creek nation generally has been greatly improved in the last twenty years, which is to be ascribed mainly to the influence and labours of this mission. The people are far more intelligent, orderly, upright, and industrious than they formerly were. Hundreds of both men and women have received a good Christian education in the two schools at Tallahassee and Kowetah. Some of these are engaged in teaching neighbourhood schools; two have entered the sacred ministry, and others are looking forward to it; and a much larger number are quietly conducting themselves as peaceable and industrious citizens in the different communities in which they live. As many as fifty persons are now employed in the nation as teachers, clerks, interpreters, at salaries varying from $100 to $500, who are indebted to this institution for their education. A goodly number have been brought to accept of the salvation of Jesus Christ as their portion, and by their consistent and humble walk are constantly teaching lessons of wisdom to their heathen neighbours. The missionaries have much cause of gratitude for what has already been achieved, and still greater cause of encouragement in relation to the future. There may be seasons of apparent indifference to religion, or of special wickedness among those for whom they labour, but both of these will melt away and disappear before the operation of God's Spirit, and to his aid the missionary may look with unfailing certainty.

SEMINOLE MISSION.

Oakridge.—Rev. John Lilley, and Mrs. Lilley.
Prairie Station.—Rev. J. R. Ramsay, and Mrs. Ramsay.

The Seminoles have not carried out their plans in full of emigration to the new country recently ceded to them by the treaty between the Government and the Creeks. The larger portion of the male population have removed to the new country, and are engaged in building houses, planting farms, and making other preparations to receive their families and friends the coming summer. In consequence of the divided state of the people, it was thought best for Mr. Ramsay to follow those that had gone to their new homes, and for Mr. Lilley to stay with those who remained behind. The two stations are not more than fifty miles apart, making it comparatively easy for the brethren to coöperate in any general plan for the improvement of both parties.

In consequence of the unsettled state of the people and the scarcity of provisions, no school has been attempted the last year. This gave the brethren the opportunity of devoting themselves exclusively to preaching the gospel, and, as will be seen from the sequel, with the most happy results.

Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay removed to their new home in the early part of the last year, and remained there until the following October, when they were called by providential circumstances to visit his friends in Pennsylvania. They are expected to return and resume their work the present spring.

The Sabbath after their arrival in the new country, a church was organized with seven members that had been set off from the church at Oakbridge, to whom four more were added upon a profession of faith. Since that time four others have been added upon a profession of faith, making the whole number of communicants fifteen. Three children have been admitted to the ordinance of baptism. Most of those who have been added to this church were from the ranks of the worst and most unpromising classes of the community, and in this way the impression has been made upon the public mind, that the gospel, when accompanied by the divine Spirit, is all-sufficient to subdue and reclaim the worst of men.

In the absence of Mr. Ramsay, Mr. Lilley has visited this church as often as he could through the winter. His visits have been highly valued by the people, and he has always had good and serious audiences. He represents the members of this little church as harmonious and peaceful among themselves; and as actively engaged in promoting the welfare and salvation of others. One or two of its members are particularized in the report of the mission as eminently pious and exemplary in their daily deportment. There are a number of persons in the community who are known to be impressed with the importance of religion, and who profess much concern about the salvation of their souls. A coloured man, who acted as Mr. Ramsey's interpreter for a year or two past, has conducted prayer-meetings at the station during the absence of Mr. Ramsey; and these have been greatly blessed in promoting the spiritual welfare of this little flock. The church at Oakridge has been dealt with both in mercy and severity. Four of its members have been removed by death, eight have been dismissed to join the church at Prairie station, and sixteen have been added upon a profession of faith. Fourteen children have been received to the church by the ordinance of baptism. The whole number received on a profession of faith to the two branches of the church has been twenty-three, and the whole number of church-members is seventy-four. Mr. Lilley's labours have been very arduous, requiring him to be in his saddle much of the time. But he has been favoured with good health, and been far more than compensated for all his toil and fatigue in witnessing such precious fruits as the result of these labours. These favours, however, have not been unattended by trials. Mrs. Lilley has suffered very much from sore eyes—a malady of several years' standing—and she is now threatened with entire loss of vision. The Seminoles have, in common with all the south-western Indian tribes, suffered very much from the want of food in consequence of the drought of last summer. Those sufferings are not yet entirely relieved, but it is hoped that the returning warm weather will produce a favourable change in their circumstances.

CHICKASAW MISSION.

Wapanucka.—Rev. H. Balentine, and Mrs. Balentine.
Boggy Depot.—Rev. Allen Wright, and Mrs. Wright.

It was mentioned in the last annual report that the school at Wapanucka would probably be returned to the Chickasaw council, at whose request it had originally been undertaken. Negociations were going on at that time which have resulted in this measure. The trustees were not willing to make such pecuniary provision as the Committee thought necessary to keep the school in efficient operation; and as they seemed desirous of undertaking the management of it themselves, it was thought best for the experiment to be made. Much good has been effected through its instrumentality during the period it has been under the care of the Board. The tribe has been taught the value of female education; the standard of virtue and morality has been very much elevated, religious knowledge has been extensively diffused, and it is doubtful whether the females who have been educated at this institution, of whom there are several hundreds, will ever be satisfied unless their daughters have the same Christian instruction which they themselves have enjoyed. There is reason to hope, too, that the school will continue to be managed with efficiency. The trustees and people are familiar with the plan upon which it has heretofore been conducted: they have a suitable and commodious building, and all the necessary means for carrying it on. Between our missionaries and the people the most friendly relations still continue to exist; and if the aid and counsel of the missionaries are at any time needed, they will cheerfully be given. The school was continued until the first of July, which is the end of the usual school term. Mr. Balentine remains at Wapanucka, and has been engaged, since the close of the school, in winding up the secular affairs of the station, and prosecuting his labours as an evangelist. The young ladies who were engaged in teaching the school, with commendable zeal, offered their services for any other schools in the Indian country where they might be needed. Miss Vance was accordingly transferred to the school at Tallahassee among the Creeks; Misses Eddy and Stanislaus to the school at Pine Ridge; Misses Long and McLeod to Wheelock; and Misses Downing and Culbertson to Stockbridge, among the Choctaws. Further reference will be made to these young ladies under the heads of the different mission stations to which they respectively belong. Mr. and Mrs. McCarter, who were connected with the institution at Wapanucka from the commencement to its close, and who were always regarded as very efficient assistants there, were called last summer, by providential circumstances, to return to their friends in South Carolina. They carry with them the kind regards and best wishes of the Committee.

During the autumn and winter Mr. Balentine has preached regularly at Wapanucka on the Sabbath, and at the more remote stations during the week, as his time and strength would allow. Mr. Wright has his residence at Boggy Depot, ten miles distant from Wapanucka. By the action of Presbytery he has the care of the two principal churches among the Chickasaws—one at Mount Pleasant, and the other at Boggy Depot. There are five preaching places connected with these two churches, at each of which Mr. Wright maintains occasional preaching. The elders of the church assist him in this work, so that religious services of some kind are held at these different places more frequently than they could be by Mr. Wright alone. One of the stations is twenty-five miles, and the other thirty-five from his residence. At most of them he has good audiences, and hopes that good is being done. There have been additions to the church during the year, but no definite report has been received as to the number, nor is the whole number mentioned in connection with the two churches.

CHOCTAW MISSION.

Spencer.—Rev. Alexander Reid and Mrs. Reid; Messrs. S. Orlando Lee, Robert Young, Charles P. Ives, teachers; Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Young, and Miss Sarah R. Wiggins, assistants; Mr. Nathaniel Wiggins, farmer and steward, and Mrs. Wiggins; one native assistant.

Goodwater.—Rev. George Ainslie; Misses Elizabeth Diament, Julia H. Hitchcock, and Sue McBeth, teachers; Mr. Theodore Jones, steward, and Mrs. Jones; Timothy Wright, native helper.

Pine Ridge.—Rev. Cyrus Kingsbury, D.D., and Mrs. Kingsbury; Misses Clara W. Eddy, and C. Stanislaus, teachers.

Wheelock.—Rev. John Edwards, and Mrs. Edwards; Mr. Samuel T. Libby, superintendent of the school, and Mrs. Libby; Misses Euphemia McLeod and Sarah L. Long, teachers; Mr. Joseph Dukes, native licentiate preacher.

Stockbridge.—Rev. Cyrus Byington and Mrs. Byington; Misses C. B. Downing and Lizzie Culbertson.

Good Land.—Rev. Oliver P. Stark, and Mrs. Stark; Mr. William Field, native licentiate preacher.

Living Land.—Rev. Ebenezer Hotchkin, and Mrs. Hotchkin.

Bennington.—Rev. Charles C. Copeland and Mrs. Copeland.

Lenox.—Rev. Simon L. Hobbs, M.D., and Mrs. Hobbs; Mr. Thomas H. Benton, native licentiate preacher.

Out Stations.—Mount Zion, Rev. Pliny Fishke, native pastor; Bok Chito Jonathan E. Dwight, native licentiate preacher.

From the above heading it will be seen that the Choctaw mission embraces nine principal stations, two out-stations, ten ordained missionaries—of whom one is a native; four native licentiate preachers; twenty-nine teachers and assistants; two native helpers. There is also one boarding-school for boys, numbering one hundred; and four for girls, comprising collectively one hundred and twenty-six. Besides these there are four day schools, viz: at Good Land, Living Land, Benington and Lenox, superintended by the missionaries of these stations, but supported by the Choctaw council. There is also a large number of what are called "Saturday and Sunday-schools" in different parts of the nation, taught by young men and women who have been educated in the above-mentioned boarding-schools.

SPENCER.

No changes have taken place in the missionary corps at this place during the year, except that Mr. Wentz was transferred to a different department of labour, and Mr. Ives, formerly a member of the church at Huntington, L. I., was appointed to take his place. The church at Spencer, comprising four out-stations or preaching places, has been under the joint care of Dr. Kingsbury and Mr. Reid. A fuller account of the state of this church is given in connection with Dr. Kingsbury's labour.

In relation to the state and prospects of the Spencer Academy, the following extract from Mr. Reid's report will give a satisfactory idea: "Our school is going on prosperously. The scholars came in promptly at the commencement of the session, and we have had our full number present ever since. Some boys have run away, but their places have been promptly filled up by the trustees. Never, since the commencement of the institution, have we had so little trouble with the boys as we have this session. So far as I can judge, Spencer enjoys the confidence of the great majority of the Choctaw people. The whole number of boys connected with the school since the commencement of the term is one hundred and twenty. Of this number forty-five are in the advanced department, under the care of Mr. Lee; forty in the middle department, under Mr. Young's care; and thirty-five in the primary department, under the care of Mr. Ives. At the present time the number in all is one hundred and six. But for the storm raging in the states, I would say our prospects were quite encouraging—as much so as at any time since my connection with Spencer. In the present alarming state of the country we cannot tell even what a day may bring forth. As a mission family, we try to stay ourselves upon God and possess our souls in patience. God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."

Goodwater. — The missionary labours of this station have been disturbed by a variety of causes. In the spring Mr. and Mrs. Ainslie were called to mourn the death of an infant daughter. Soon after this Mrs. Ainslie's health became so completely undermined that she was compelled to return to the East, in the hope that change of air and good medical advice might prove efficacious to her restoration. Those expectations have not been realized. She departed this life on the 14th of February, in the full hope of a glorious immortality: her last words were "Jesus is precious—He alone is precious." Mr. Ainslie remained at his post of labour until the close of summer, and then followed his wife, that he might be with her and minister to her comfort in the sufferings through which she was passing. At that advanced season, it was found difficult to find any one to take his place; and as it was thought from time to time that he would soon return, it was not considered advisable to make any other arrangement. Immediately after the death of his wife, he set out on the mournful journey to resume the care of the station. The school was opened at the usual time, and, through the energy of the young ladies, has been carried on without interruption throughout the term. Mr. Jones, the steward, and Mrs. Jones, have performed their part well. Mr. Reid visited the station as frequently as he could consistently with his absorbing duties at Spencer, and gave such counsel and aid as seemed necessary. The teachers of the school are deserving of all praise for the zeal, energy and wisdom they displayed in their trying and responsible circumstances; and they will receive, as they deserve, the thanks of all who love the missionary work. Religious meetings have been kept up at most of the stations by the elders of the church, but the Committee have had no information as to the present state of the church.

Pine Ridge.—Dr. Kingsbury has had charge of this station since its commencement. His principal place of preaching is at Doaksville, a small village of not more than twelve or fifteen families, and not more than one mile from his residence at Pine Ridge. The place is much frequented by transient visitors, especially when the National Council is in session, and in this way good audiences are almost always secured. The morals of the community are said to be remarkably good, and this no doubt is to be ascribed to the influence of a preached gospel. Beside preaching on the Sabbath, a weekly prayer-meeting is maintained both in the village and at the station. They are well attended, and, it is believed, are productive of much good. Four persons have been received to the communion of the church on a profession of their faith, and two by letters. This little church has contributed on an average $16 per month to the cause of benevolence, which is very liberal whether regard be had to their number or their resources.

Dr. Kingsbury has laboured a good deal during the year in the bounds of the Spencer church. He writes: "Once a month, unless some special providence prevents, I preach within the bounds of the Spencer Academy church; and, with the assistance of Mr. Reid, administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, alternately at the five preaching places of that church. During the past year three have been received to the church on a profession of their faith, and four by letter. Two adults have been baptized, and six infants." It is very much regretted both by Dr. Kingsbury and Mr. Reid that this people have not been supplied with a pastor, and much injury has resulted from this destitution. It will be gratifying to that people, however, to know that this want is about to be supplied.

The school at this place has been taught the past year by Misses Eddy and Stanislaus, the former having charge of the indoor instruction, and the latter of their outdoor duties. The number of pupils in attendance is thirty-one. Their progress and deportment have generally been good, but it has required some energy on the part of the superintendent and teachers to keep the school in efficient operation.

Wheelock.—Mr. Edwards has had the charge of this station since the death of Rev. Alfred Wright, who was its founder and one of the most successful missionaries that has ever laboured among the Indians. Mr. Libby has acted as the superintendent of the school for a number of years, and has given entire satisfaction as to the manner and efficiency with which it has been conducted. Misses McLeod and Long were formerly connected with the Wapanucka school, and were transferred to this at their own request when the other was given up. The number of boarding scholars has been twenty-nine, and nine day scholars, making thirty-eight in all. In relation to their progress in learning, Mr. Edwards remarks: "The scholars remaining but a few years in school, and most of them having a new language to learn, their studies are quite elementary. They learn very much, however, that is for their permanent good." The following extract from the report of the station will furnish a satisfactory view of the manner in which it is conducted: "The year 1860, now numbered with the past, has been a year of great blessings to us who are here labouring in the cause of Christ. We have most of us enjoyed a good measure of health, and when sick have mercifully been restored. Affliction, however, has visited us. Mr. Libby lost a little daughter in the beginning of July, and one of the scholars died about the same time.

"We have had no very large outpouring of the Spirit of God in connection with our labours, yet we have had pleasing evidence of his presence in the conversion of souls. Eleven have been received to the communion of the church during the year. This makes the present number on our list two hundred and seventy. Of these, however, a few are not in good standing in the church, upon whom formal discipline has not been exercised. I trust there has been some growth in the Christian graces. The church-members are mostly included in a circuit of twelve miles from Wheelock as a centre. In this circuit we have nine preaching places in addition to Wheelock, at distances varying from six to twelve miles. My practice is to preach here each Sabbath at nine o'clock in the morning in English and Choctaw, and then go to one of the out-stations and preach again, usually only in the Choctaw. Thus I can visit four of the out-stations monthly, and the others occasionally. The communion is administered at all these places once or twice a year. On such occasions the meetings elsewhere are suspended, and two days are usually occupied with preaching. These "big meetings" are some of them largely attended, and furnish important opportunities for instructing the people. On Sabbaths when I cannot attend at the preaching stations, meetings are generally conducted by Mr. Dukes and the elders. At most of these out-stations Saturday and Sabbath-schools are kept up and do much good. At one of them there is a day-school taught by a native young lady who was educated here and at Sewickly Pennsylvania." Mr. Edwards is also engaged in translating the Old Testament into the Choctaw, and is labouring at present on the Psalms.

Stockbridge.—Mr. Byington has laboured in the Choctaw nation west since 1834, and at this particular station since 1844. It is not more than seven miles from the Arkansas line, and is on the direct road from Little Rock, the capital of that state, to the nation. There are connected with the station five preaching places where the ordinances are statedly administered. The church here was organized in 1832, and since that time four hundred and eighty-one names have been entered upon the session book. Twenty-four persons have sustained the office of ruling elder, of whom fourteen are now dead. During the past year six persons have been received to the communion of the church, and five children have been baptized. In conducting the services at these different stations, Mr. Byington has been aided by Mr. Wentz during a part of the year. The elders of the church have also rendered important aid in conducting prayer-meetings when there has been no preaching.

The female boarding-school at this place was not fully opened before the middle of November, and since then it has been conducted somewhat irregularly from the want of a superintendent. The teachers and pupils lodge and take their meals at Mr. Byington's, but spend the day and carry on their studies at the school premises, which are a half mile distant. This arrangement imposes quite a burthen both upon Mr. and Mrs. Byington and the teachers, but in both cases it has been borne cheerfully. It is hoped that a better arrangement may be effected in the spring. The number of boarding pupils is twenty-four, besides which there are thirteen day-scholars, making thirty-seven in all. The course of study is substantially the same as that in the other female schools to which reference is made in a previous part of this report. Mr. Byington speaks in commendatory terms of the zeal and energy of Misses Culbertson and Downing, both of whom, at their own request, were transferred to this school when that at Wapanucka was given up.

Good Land.—This station is and has been under the care of Mr. Stark for eight or ten years past. The following extracts from his annual report just received, comprise all the information about the station that it will be necessary to give. "The Good Land church now numbers about two hundred members. It includes, as formerly, three preaching places, viz: Good Land, Bok Chito, and Bok Yazoo. At all these places we have comfortable houses for worship, and meetings on the Sabbath are regularly maintained, with the assistance of the elders. Since last January six persons have been received to the communion of the church on a profession of faith; eight children have been baptized; five persons have been suspended; and about 15 have removed to the bounds of other churches, most of whom have taken letters of dismission. Among this number is Mr. William Field, a licentiate preacher and elder in this church. Mr. Field has been for years an active man among us, and his loss will be much felt."

"Schools:—We have two day-schools and one Saturday and Sabbath-school. The one at Bok Chito is a day-school, taught by a native Choctaw. Owing to the fact that the people are not united in their teacher, the school is not as large as it otherwise would be. Near Bok Yazoo is a Saturday and Sabbath school taught by a young Choctaw woman, a member of the church. It numbers about twenty-five, and is doing well. There are about forty children in the school at this place. Miss Greenlee, our former teacher, has returned to her home, and her place has not yet been supplied. We are expecting it will be ere long."

"Intemperance.—I mentioned in my last letter that our neighbourhood is peculiarly exposed to the evils of intemperance, owing to our nearness to the Red River. In November a temperance meeting was held at this place, which we hope has resulted in some good. One hundred and sixteen persons signed the temperance pledge. A large number were present, and the exercises throughout were interesting. Our people are industrious and disposed to work, but it is difficult for them to find employment. This adds very much to the present distress caused by the failure of last summer's crop."

Living Land.—This station is eight or ten miles south of Good Land, and is located near the Red River. It is under the care of Mr. Hotchkin, and embraces four preaching places, at three of which there are separate church organizations. The aggregate number of church-members is one hundred and sixty-three, of whom eighteen have been received during the past year. One of these churches has suffered much by removals—an evil that is felt less or more in all the churches in the Choctaw country. Mr. Hotchkin speaks well of the general deportment of the members of the church, but feels very sensibly the need of the Spirit's influence to quicken the people of God, and bring sinners to the knowledge of the Saviour. There are two day-schools within the bounds of these churches, one at Living Land and taught by Miss Hotchkin. It embraces twenty-eight pupils, a number of whom, however, are irregular in their attendance, owing to the want of proper food and clothing. The other is taught by an educated Choctaw woman, has an attendance of twenty-five pupils, and is represented as doing well.

Bennington.—This station is north-west of those at Living Land and Good Land, and is about fifteen miles distant. It is under the care of Mr. Copeland, and comprises two distinct churches, one at Bennington, and the other at Six Towns. There are two preaching places connected with the former, viz: Bennington and Shinuk Tobbi; and four with the latter, viz: Nouik Zakali, Little Blue, Boiling Spring, and White Spring. Nine persons on profession of faith, and seven by letter, have been received to the church at Bennington during the past year. The attendance at both places has been good, and the signs of progress and improvement are encouraging. To the church at Six Towns six persons have been received by letter, and two on profession of faith. There is a day-school at Bennington with thirty scholars, which is doing well. There is also a Sabbath-school, and measures were in progress for the establishment of a Saturday and Sabbath-school. There is no school in the bounds of the Six Town's church. The people are desirous for one, but they are too destitute at the present time, and the Council have as yet made no appropriation for one. The people in the bounds of these churches have contributed liberally of their means in past years to the cause of benevolence. But in consequence of the drought of last summer, they have the means to do very little for the present. Mr. Copeland's family suffered very much during the autumn from dysentery, but all are again restored to comfortable health.

Lenox.—This station is located in the north-east portion of the Choctaw country, and with the exception of the one occupied by Rev. Pliny Fiske, is quite remote from all the other stations. It is under the care of Mr. Hobbs, and has been so for a number of years past. His station is remote from any post office, and the means of correspondence with the Mission House in consequence is very much restricted. No formal report of labour for the past year has been received. In May last a church of forty-eight members was organized by Messrs. Hobbs and Fiske at Jacks's Forks; most of the members had recently removed from the stations south. Four elders were appointed over this church. In December a meeting was held at a place thirty-four miles east of Lenox, the name not given, where eight persons were received to the communion of the church, and a larger number expressed a concern about their salvation. There is a day-school at Lenox consisting of thirty-eight pupils, which is reported as doing well.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The mission to the Choctaws is a very large one, compared with those among the other Indian tribes. The circumstances which led to this were fully detailed in the last annual report, and are fresh in the memory of the friends of the Board. It is also an expensive mission, and would be much more so, if it were not that the day and boarding-schools are supported mainly by funds appropriated by the Choctaw council for this purpose. The day-schools at Lenox, Bennington, Good Land, and Living Land, and the female boarding-schools at Pine Ridge, Wheelock and Stockbridge, are sustained entirely by funds from the nation, whilst those at Spencer and Goodwater, as a general thing, receive not more than a fourth of their support from the Board. The foregoing details show that the mission has been eminently blessed, and the results have been too decided and abundant to leave any doubt of their being the fruits of the Holy Spirit. It is not, however, without its trials and dangers. Intemperance has been very prevalent in many parts of the country, and there has been a greater number of violent deaths the past year than at any former period. There has been, and still is, much suffering among the people in consequence of the drought of last summer. The sufferings immediately around the missionary stations have been very much alleviated through means placed in the hands of the missionaries by a few generous Christian friends in New York; and it is hoped that their example will be followed by others, as these sufferings have not been entirely removed.

LIBERIA MISSION.

Monrovia.—Rev. Amos Herring, pastor; Mr. B. V. R. James, teacher of the English school; Rev. Edward W. Blyden, principal of the Alexander High School; Rev. Edwin T. Williams, in this country.

Kentucky.—Rev. H. W. Erskine, preacher and teacher.

Harrisburg.—Mr. Simon Harrison, licentiate preacher; Mr. Mellville, teacher of the native boarding-school.

Mount Coffee.—Rev. Armistead Miller, preacher and teacher.

Sinou.—Rev. James M. Priest, preacher; Mrs. Mary E. Parsons, teacher of the day-school.

Settra Kru.—Mr. Washington Mc Donogh, teacher.

Niffau.—Rev. Messrs. Thomas H. and James R. Amos.

From the above heading it will be seen that this mission embraces seven stations, at all of which, except two, there are ordained ministers. Three of these labour mainly for the Americo-Liberian population and their children, and four labour exclusively among the aborigines. There are comprehended in the mission four organized churches, four boarding-schools, four day-schools, and seven Sabbath-schools. Beside the stations just mentioned, there are a number of out-stations where there are Sabbath-schools, and where occasional preaching is maintained. A presbytery has also been formed and been recognized by the General Assembly, and comprises eight clerical members, all of whom except Mr. Williams are coloured persons.

Monrovia.—Mr. Herring continues to have the pastoral care of the church at this place. Only one addition to the church has been reported the last year. A number of its members have removed to other parts of the country, and several have died. The number of members reported in July was fifty-four, and the general attendance upon preaching is about twice that number. There is a Sabbath-school connected with the church, embracing forty children, a part of whom are natives.

The English school is taught by Mr. James, and embraced at the latest dates sixty pupils. The studies pursued have been substantially the same as those of previous years. Mr. James speaks of the children as being orderly in their deportment, and as having made satisfactory progress in their studies. The best scholars are transferred from time to time to the Alexander High School, a measure of promotion which is greatly coveted by the more industrious pupils. The school was suspended twice during the year on account of Mr. James' ill health, but in neither case for more than two or three weeks. He enjoys good health at the present time.

The Alexander High School has been conducted, there is reason to believe, with more than usual efficiency. The number of pupils is fifteen, the same as that of former years, and the same arrangement in relation to the classes has also been maintained. A full account of the examination held in June was published in the November number of the Foreign Missionary, and shows that the course of study is both thorough and extensive. The highest class were studying such authors in Latin and Greek as are pursued only in the higher classes of our best colleges. They were making good progress in Hebrew and the higher branches of mathematics also.

This institution has already furnished some of the best officers the civil government have in their employ. A number are engaged as teachers. Two have entered the ministry, and others are looking forward to the same office. Mr. Blyden's health has been overtasked, however, and the committee have found it necessary to release him from his engagements for a time, that he may recruit by a visit to the West Indies, his native place. The school, for the time being, will be placed under the care of one of the more advanced pupils.

Kentucky.—This station continues to be under the care of Mr. Erskine. He has three places for stated preaching, viz: Clay Ashland, Caldwell, and Congo-town. He makes also frequent tours through the native villages in the adjacent country, for the purpose of making known the unsearchable riches of Christ. He speaks of having good attendance both at his stated and occasional places of preaching. The Sabbath-schools connected with these different places of preaching are doing well. The day-school did not give satisfaction, and was in consequence suspended last summer. It was to be opened again at the beginning of the year, under the care of Mr. M. W. Witherspoon, one of the more advanced pupils of the Alexander High School. One of the female members of this church has recently established a school upon her own responsibility in a native town at the distance of eight or ten miles from Kentucky, which promises to be a great blessing to that benighted community. The church of Kentucky contributed last year fifty dollars toward the support of the school.

Harrisburg.—There is a small church here to which Mr. Harrison statedly preaches, and a large Sabbath-school, conducted mainly by Mr. Mellville and himself. The main feature of missionary work here, however, is a boarding-school for native children. The number of boarders at the commencement of the year was twenty-two, but the school has received a large accession of Congo children from the recaptives recently landed at Monrovia—something like four thousand of these having been landed at Monrovia during the year, the greater part of whom were children. A number of these, beside those taken into this school, have been received into the mission families, to be educated and to be trained to habits of domestic industry. Mr. Mellville has charge of the school, but Mr. Harrison has the supervision of the secular affairs of the station.

Mount Coffee.—This is the name of the station recently commenced by Mr. Miller. It is located about fifty miles east of Monrovia and ten miles from Careysburg, the health station recently formed by the government of Liberia. Mount Coffee has an elevated position, and is in the heart of a fertile and well-watered district. The country is inhabited by the Golah tribe, of whom there are a number of villages in the immediate vicinity of the station. The people received him with great cordiality, and they are much pleased at the prospect of having their children educated. Mr. Miller expected to have his dwelling completed before the middle of December, and would take his family there immediately after. He has preached occasionally at Careysburg, and kept together a band of Presbyterians at that place, who have not as yet been organized into a church. Mr. Miller will devote himself at once to the study of the Golah language, that he may be able as soon as possible to make known to the people the unsearchable riches of Christ in their own language.

Sinou.—This is one of the principal settlements of the Americo-Liberians. It is about one hundred miles south-east of Monrovia, and contains not more than four or five hundred inhabitants, but is surrounded by a large native population, between whom and themselves there is much friendly intercourse. Mr. Priest was the founder of the Presbyterian church here, and has had the care of it since the commencement. One member has been added to the church on profession of faith, and four children have received the sacrament of baptism. The Sabbath-school is well attended. The day-school taught by Mrs. Parsons has had an average attendance of thirty pupils, and is reported as doing well.

Settra Kru.—There is a small boarding-school at this place for native children, taught by Mr. McDonogh. The number of pupils last year was twelve or fifteen. There is also a Sabbath-school here with a large number of pupils. The place however, is very unfavourable for mail communication, and the Committee in consequence, have had very little information about the station during the past year.

Niffau.—This station has been formed by the Rev. Messrs. Amos during the past year. It is located on the sea-coast about half way between Sinou and Cape Palmas, and about fifty miles distant from either. The site is open and apparently healthy; it has a good landing and easy access to trading vessels; and the native population immediately around the station is quite large. There is also a large population in the rear of the settlement, and it is supposed that one of the branches of the Niger takes its rise on the east side of a mountain range not more than one hundred or one hundred and fifty miles from Niffau. Should this report be verified, there may soon be opened up from this station a highway by which the gospel of Jesus Christ may be carried into the heart of this great country, and be made effectual to the salvation of millions of benighted heathen who could not be reached so advantageously by any other route. The missionaries were received with the greatest cordiality by the chiefs and the people. A school was organized by one of the brothers, whilst the other devoted himself to superintending the building of a house for the accommodation of their families, whom they were intending to bring down from Sinou by the first favourable opportunity. It was supposed that there were not less than one thousand or fifteen hundred children in the villages immediately around the station, the great mass of whom were desirous to enter the school, though only a very small number could be received. The Committee bespeak for this new and interesting mission the prayerful remembrance of all who love the cause of missions.

CORISCO MISSION.

Evangasimba.—Rev. T. S. Ogden and Mrs. Ogden; Charles L. Loomis, M. D., licentiate preacher, and Mrs. Loomis; Misses Maria M. Jackson and Mary C. Latta, teachers of girls; Miss Charity Sneed, assistant; Andeke, interpreter and general assistant; Sakonjo, teacher of day-school; Mwambani, female native assistant. Rev. J. L. and Mrs. Mackey in this country.

Ugovi.—Rev. Cornelius De Heer.

Alongo.—Rev. William Clemens; Mrs. Clemens in this country.

Ilovi Island.—Ibia C. Sikenje, native licentiate preacher.

Kombe.—Native teacher.

No important changes have been made in the arrangement of the missionary force during the year. Dr. and Mrs. Loomis, whose departure was mentioned in the last Annual Report, arrived at Corisco the latter part of January. Their presence gave Mr. and Mrs. Mackey the opportunity to visit this country for the improvement of their health. Mrs. Clemens, whose health had also declined, availed herself of the same opportunity to return to this country. They reached New York in June; all having derived much advantage from the sea voyage. Mr. and Mrs. Mackey have been still further benefited in their health from their sojourn in this country, and are now awaiting an opportunity to return to their field of labour. The mission has been strengthened by the accession of Miss Mary C. Latta as a teacher for the female school. She was a member of the Presbyterian church at Chestnut Hills, Pennsylvania, and cheerfully left an inviting home and many endeared friends to go and labour for her Saviour in that distant and benighted portion of the earth. She sailed from New York in the middle of August, but did not reach Corisco until the latter part of November.

There has been some sickness among the missionaries who have been on the ground, but none of so serious a character as to interfere with the regular course of their labours. The missionary work has been carried on in peace and quietness, and, as will be seen in the sequel, with many tokens of the divine favour.

The Spanish authorities have interposed no obstacles to the prosecution of their work, but on the contrary, have manifested quite a disposition to show them favours whenever there was opportunity to do so. A small vessel of war was kept stationed in the bay during the greater part of the year, and at one time measures were taken for the erection of a house on the north-east corner of the island; but this was afterward abandoned, for what reason is not known.

The missionary work, as will be seen by the heading of this report, has been enlarged by the establishment of two new out-stations. One of these is located on the small island of Ilovi, in the same bay with the main island, but much nearer to the mouth of the river. It has a population of not more than three hundred, but has every facility of intercourse with the numerous villages along the margin of the main land, as well as those along the banks of the river. The other station is among the Kombe people, to the north of the main island, and fifty miles distant. Both of these stations are conducted by natives who have been educated in the schools at Corisco, a more full account of whose labours will be given in the sequel.

The clerical members of the mission organized themselves into a Presbytery in May last, and at the same time received three young men under their care as candidates for the ministry. Since that time one of them has been licensed to preach the gospel, and has been entrusted with the care of one of the out-stations just mentioned. The occasion of the licensure of this young man was one of great interest to all the missionaries, but especially to those who had been the honoured instruments in laying the foundation of the mission. It had only been ten years since the work was first commenced, and now one young man, of approved piety and earnest zeal, is ready to go forth into still darker regions and proclaim to his benighted countrymen there the same glad tidings that have been brought to his own doors. Others are soon to follow in his footsteps, and the brethren can now see how easy it will be to spread the knowledge of the Christian salvation throughout all these regions by the agency of the Christian youths whom they are training on their island home.

EVANGASIMBA.

This station includes under its care the principal church on the island, a female boarding-school, an advanced school for training teachers, a day-school for boys, a Sabbath-school, a medical dispensary, and is the place also where the principal secular business of the mission is transacted. Since the departure of Mr. Mackey, Mr. Ogden has had the pastoral care of the church and the supervision of the schools, whilst Dr. Loomis has had charge of the secular department and the dispensary. Both of these brethren have connected the study of the language with their other engagements.

The Church.—Though there are a number of places on the island where stated religious services are maintained, there is, strictly speaking, only one church organization, and that is connected with this station. Here the brethren and the native Christians from the different stations come together once in three months, for Christian conference, and for commemorating the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The attendance on these occasions for two years past has been very large—greater than could well be accommodated in the church building. The exercises have always been very refreshing to the children of God, and deeply impressive to the large crowd of spectators who are always present. The church has been greatly favoured by the presence and power of the Holy Ghost, especially during the early part of the year. From furnished statistics, it appears that thirty-eight persons have been received to the communion of the church during the year, making fifty-seven adults that have been admitted to the ordinance of baptism since the organization of the church. Infant baptism has been administered in seven cases to the children of native converts. There is satisfactory reason to believe, too, that none have been admitted to full communion of the church except those who have been truly regenerated. It is hoped, too, that a number of others, whose reception to the church has been postponed from prudential considerations, are truly the children of God, and will be received after a further trial of their sincerity. At each of the stations there is a catechumen class, embracing all those who profess a desire to be saved, but who need fuller instruction in relation to the way of salvation. At Evangasimba this class embraces 17; at Ugovi, 15; and at Alongo, 17. A large portion of those received to the communion of the church the last year were adult females, who had had no connection with the schools, and who had had no opportunities of religious instruction except those derived from public preaching on the Sabbath. This is an unusual event in the history of African missions, especially in the earlier stages of their history, and may be regarded as a most encouraging fact in relation to the future prosperity of this particular mission.

In relation to the character and deportment of the members of the church, the report of the mission speaks in the most encouraging terms. Only two cases of discipline have as yet occurred. The great body of members show commendable zeal in their readiness to speak a word for the Saviour whenever there is opportunity to do so; in visiting neighboring villages to hold religious meetings; in maintaining family worship, and asking the divine blessing at their meals; and the pains they take to impart religious instruction on their trading excursions in more remote regions of the country. The Christian young men, who have had the advantages of education, are acquiring an increasing influence over the community all the while, and already a number of obnoxious heathen customs have been abandoned by men who make no profession of religion through their influence and persuasions. The members of the church have also manifested a spirit of liberality in maintaining the institutions of religion. The sum of one hundred and eight dollars has been contributed for missionary purposes, besides sixty-six dollars for the erection of a church for their own accommodation. The missionaries contributed a portion of these sums, but the larger proportion, it is understood, was contributed by the native members. In October last three additional elders were elected and ordained. In relation to these, the report testifies to their fidelity in the discharge of their duties, and the great assistance they have rendered the pastor in watching over and guiding the flock. Three of those who were appointed at an earlier period have been received under the care of the Presbytery as candidates for the ministry, and one, as has been mentioned elsewhere, has been licensed to preach.

Religious services are held in the church morning and evening, whilst the Sabbath-school occupies the afternoon. Two weekly services are also kept up, one of which is conducted by Andeke, a native elder, and is intended for the benefit of the native Christians at the station.

Sabbath-School.—The Sabbath-school comprises persons of all classes, and of varied character and attainment. There are two classes of adult men and women, to whom Miss Jackson imparts oral instruction. There are also two Bible-classes of the more advanced pupils, taught by Dr. and Mrs. Loomis. A larger number are studying the union questions, and were taught by Mrs. Mackey before she left. The whole number in attendance has not been reported.

Advanced School.—The object of this school is to train teachers, and give a more extensive and thorough education to those who are looking forward to the work of the ministry. There were twelve in the school at the beginning of the year, but the absence of Mr. Mackey devolved so large an amount of labour upon Mr. Ogden that he could not devote the attention to the school that it needed, and the pupils, in consequence, were distributed among the different stations, to receive such instruction as the several missionaries might find practicable to give consistently with their other labours. The school will be resumed in its original form as soon as the mission is reinforced.

The day-school is taught by a native young man, and is, no doubt, doing something to elevate the character of the rising generation. No account has been furnished as to the number of pupils in the school at the present time.

Female Boarding-School.—This is justly regarded as one of the most important schools on the island. Female education is an indispensable element in the improvement of any community, but especially so to the elevation of a heathen population. In the earlier stage of the mission, it was found very difficult to get any female pupils at all. The habits, prejudices, and superstitious notions of the people were all opposed to the moral and intellectual elevation of the female sex. But this opposition is yielding to the influence of religious principle, and husbands and parents alike are becoming desirous of the education of their daughters and wives. The school was taught entirely by Miss Jackson until the arrival of Miss Latta, since which time it has been carried on under their joint care. A portion of each day is devoted to study, and the remainder to instruction in sewing and other domestic duties. The progress of the girls in both of these departments has been very satisfactory. Mention is made of one of the girls who had committed to memory the whole of the four gospels, a large number of hymns, and knew the catechism perfectly. They have done well also in domestic training, as may be inferred from the fact that they have earned sixteen dollars by sewing out of school-hours, which they have devoted to the missionary cause, besides a like sum earned in the same way for the support and education of one of their own number. Four of the elder girls were married at the end of the spring term, and in every case to Christian husbands. The school has not been without spiritual fruits. Two of the pupils have been brought to the knowledge of the Saviour during the past year, under circumstances of great interest.

Dispensary.—Dr. Loomis has relieved much suffering by administering medicine, and by performing a number of surgical operations. The people express great gratitude for such favours; and the exercise of this kind of benevolence will, no doubt, do much to open the hearts of the people to religious instruction, and give the mission a commanding influence over the people at large.

UGOVI.

This is the principal station on the south side of the island, and has been under the care of Mr. De Heer. It comprises a boarding-school for boys, a Sabbath-school, and a chapel where the gospel is statedly preached, but without any independent church organization.

The school opened with only twelve boys, but the number was increased to twenty-seven, four of whom were afterwards dismissed for improper conduct, leaving twenty-three as the regular number. They are arranged into three classes, the more advanced of whom are studying geography, arithmetic, history, composition, and are practised also in translating English into Benga, and vice versa. The higher class has been taught by Mr. De Heer himself, whilst the two lower ones have been instructed mainly by a native assistant. The moral character of the boys has been very sensibly improved, and, what is still more encouraging, the hearts of a number of them have been touched by divine grace. On this point Mr. De Heer remarks: "For the last three months a religious feeling has pervaded the school such as I have never witnessed before. Three of the boys have been admitted into the inquirers' class. Others express a desire and purpose to become followers of Christ. They have begun a meeting of prayer among themselves on Saturday afternoons, and also spend a short time in prayer at the close of each day. God grant that this state of feeling may continue until they are all brought under the power of divine grace." Public preaching on the Sabbath is well attended. Since the erection of a new and commodious chapel, the attendance has averaged about one hundred and thirty. The regular weekly services are also well attended. Besides these, the native Christians have a number of prayer-meetings among themselves, which are well attended, and which, it is thought, are doing much to promote their spirituality. Fourteen persons connected with this station have been received to the communion of the church, and among these several husbands and wives. The Sabbath-school is attended by old and young, by slave and freeman, and has varied in number from forty to sixty. A fuller account of this station may be found in the March number of the Record.

ALONGO.

This station is on the north side of the island, and is under the direction of Mr. Clemens. It contemplates a two-fold object: first, the spiritual improvement of the island population immediately around it; and, second, the training of native youths from the various tribes on the mainland, with the view of their being hereafter employed in diffusing the light of the gospel and the blessings of Christian education in those benighted regions. These measures are still in their incipiency; but already important results have been realized, and there is no reason to doubt their ultimate success. Already two young men connected with this station have been sent to form new stations, and proclaim the gospel to communities of benighted men who could not have been reached through any other agency.

The religious meetings on the Sabbath are not different from those of the other stations, of which mention has already been made. The ordinary attendance is about seventy, but frequently the number exceeds one hundred. The Sabbath-school has an attendance of fifty scholars, and is composed almost exclusively of the members of the church and the pupils of the boarding-school. Mr. Clemens has spent a considerable portion of his time in itinerations on the mainland, and especially along the seaboard to the north of Corisco, for the purpose of obtaining boys for his school, and for preaching the gospel. These visits, together with the influence of such of their youths as have been brought under the power of religion at the mission station, have already created a demand among these people for Christian instruction which the missionaries cannot meet. The amount of knowledge among them in relation to the Christian salvation is as yet very small, and is, no doubt, very much mixed up with their native superstitions. Still, they have acquired, through the means just mentioned, sufficient information to make them desire more, and Mr. Clemens founds upon this state of feeling a most earnest call for more labourers. He also gives an encouraging account of the state of the school. The boys are studious and obedient, and are making satisfactory progress both in their moral and intellectual improvement. There are evidences of spritual improvement also. Five of the pupils have been received to the communion of the church during the year, making nine in all who are in good and regular standing in the church. Several cases of remarkable piety among the pupils of this school have been published in the missionary journals during the year. One of these young men, while on a visit to his friends on the mainland, fell into the hands of a hostile tribe and was condemned to be put to death. His calmness in view of death, however, was so inexplicable to his would-be murderers, that they were deterred from their bloody purpose, and the young man was released. According to their ideas he had procured from the white men a fetish, and they were afraid to proceed to extremities. It is true he had secured a charm against the fear of death, but it was such a charm as the gospel of Jesus Christ alone imparts. Another case is mentioned of a young man who spent only a few days at the station, but during that time was carefully instructed in relation to the Christian salvation. On his return to his native town in the interior, he conscientiously put into practice all the instruction he had received—abandoning all his gross sins, and keeping the Sabbath. As he had no other means of knowing when the Sabbath returned, he carefully notched each day on a stick, that he might keep that day sacred in concert with his Christian brethren in all other parts of the world. Such examples, of which the number might be greatly multiplied, not only illustrate the power of the gospel over the mind of a heathen people, but set forth the great importance and urgency of diffusing its light among them as speedily as possible.

Out-stations at Ilovi and Kombe.—These two out-stations have been commenced during the past year, and as yet have had but little time for the developing of any important results.

The island of Ilovi is situated near the mainland, and has a population of about three hundred. The people are of the same family and language with those of the mainland. There are a large number of villages on the mainland that are accessible to the missionary here; and to the religious instruction of these a portion of his time will be devoted. His labours on the island, though of only six months' continuance, have, nevertheless, been productive of encouraging results. On the Sabbath he has an attendance of about fifty persons. Seven individuals have professed a concern for the salvation of their souls, and three of these, there is reason to hope, have already given their hearts to the Saviour. A more full account of this station may be found in a letter from the missionary in the March number of the Foreign Missionary.

Kombe is the name of the other station, and is located on the mainland, but near to the sea-shore, and about fifty miles from Corisco. The missionary was very cordially received by the people, and has commenced his labours under very favourable circumstances. What the results are to be, can be known only in the future. Both of the missionaries and their work are commended to the prayerful remembrance of God's people.

South American Missions.

BOGOTA MISSION.

Bogota.—Rev. Wm. E. McLaren and Mrs. McLaren; Mrs. Sharpe, Rev. H. B. Pratt and Mrs. Pratt, in this country.

This mission has been deeply afflicted the last year in the death of Rev. Samuel M. Sharpe. This painful event occurred on the 30th of October, after a short but painful illness. He had gone down the week before to Honda, to meet Mr. and Mrs. McLaren on their way to Bogota, and was taken sick on his return journey the day before he arrived at home. His mind was clear and composed during the greater part of his sickness, and he died in the comforting assurance of a blessed immortality. A full account of this afflictive dispensation of Providence was published in the February number of the Record, and no doubt has been read with painful interest by all those who have prayed for the prosperity of this mission. The event is rendered the more mysterious by the fact that Mr. Sharpe, after years of preparation in the way of the study of the language, had just buckled on the gospel armour, and seemed well fitted to do valiant service for his Master. The Sabbath he was in Honda, he preached his first unwritten sermon in Spanish, and, it is said, with much effect. But God's ways are not as our ways. Mrs. Sharpe was quite ill during the greater part of her husband's sickness, but was better at the date of the latest intelligence from that place. Her cup of affliction has been very bitter, not only in the removal of her husband, but in the death of her only child some months previously. She needs and will no doubt share the sympathies and prayers of all those who love the cause of missions.

Mr. and Mrs. McLaren, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and a graduate of the seminary at Alleghany, and the latter from central New York, embarked for this mission the middle of June, and reached Santa Martha in the early part of July. In consequence of the war and the obstruction caused thereby in the navigation of the Magdalena, they were detained at Baranquilla until the latter part of September. During this period Mr. McLaren devoted himself to the study of the Spanish, and on the Sabbath preached in English to such audiences as could be brought together. Mrs. McLaren suffered, during their detention on the sea-coast, from the effects of the warm weather, but was greatly improved in health and strength by the change to a cooler climate. They reached Bogota only in time to have the melancholy satisfaction of ministering to Mr. Sharpe in his last illness, and to comfort his bereaved companion in her deep affliction.

The missionary work has been, and continues to be, retarded by the civil war prevailing in the country. It is difficult to see at the present stage of events when it will terminate, or what will be its results upon the general condition of the country. The missionaries have been exposed to no personal dangers from the collision of parties, nor is it apprehended that they will be; but they have been subjected to great inconvenience from the interruptions of the mails, and from the high price of provisions, labour, and house-rent, consequent upon the war. Mr. Sharpe, up to the time of his decease, continued to preach both in English and Spanish on the Sabbath, but with variable audiences, amounting at one time to as many as fifty persons, but generally much fewer. In one of his letters he mentions an interesting case of conversion among his English hearers, and in another the happy and tranquil death of a native artisan, who had been regarded as a true convert for some time previously. No definite information has been received in relation to the school that was under Mr. Sharpe's care. Mr. McLaren continues the English service, but can do nothing towards sustaining a Spanish service until he has acquired the language.

Mr. Pratt is still in this country, revising, with the assistance of a good Spanish scholar, Velara's Spanish Bible. He hoped to have returned to his work in Bogota before this time, but the want of a good version of the scriptures in the Spanish language seemed to be almost an insuperable difficulty in the way of carrying on the work of evangelization in any of the Spanish republics of South America; and Mr. Pratt, at the earnest request of the Bible Society, and with the concurrence of the Committee, has consented to remain in this country until the work in hand is completed. As soon as this is done he expects to resume his work in Bogota, where his services are very much needed, and where he and his brethren have the prospect of usefulness.

The committee have it in mind to reinforce the mission at an early day, provided the funds for this purpose are at their command.

BRAZIL.

Rio Janeiro.—Rev. A. G. Simonton; Rev. A. L. Blackford and Mrs. Blackford.

Mention was made in the last annual report, of the sailing of Mr. and Mrs. Blackford for this post of labour. They left Baltimore on the 25th of April, but did not reach Rio Janeiro until the 24th of July, having been compelled, in consequence of the stress of weather, to put into the island of Barbadoes for repairs, and for a resupply of water and provisions. During the gale by which the ship was overtaken, the lives of the party were for several successive days in great peril, but they were mercifully preserved.

The missionaries have been favoured with good health, and the brethren have pursued their work in quietness and peace. Their time has been devoted mainly to the study of the language, in which they have made good progress. Mr. Simonton, who has been longer in the field, has acquired sufficient knowledge of the Portuguese to enable him to converse on the subject of religion, and to conduct a small Sabbath-school in that language. He will, no doubt, be able to hold forth the Word of Life to the people in their own tongue in the course of a few months.

While mainly engaged in the study of the language, the brethren have availed themselves of every facility in their reach to do good to their fellow-men, and to prepare the way for more efficient and systematic labours hereafter. A regular Sabbath service has been conducted at the American consulate for several months past, the attendance at which has been encouraging. A Sabbath-school has recently been organized, and is conducted altogether in Portuguese. The number of children in attendance is not large, but those who do attend pursue their studies with great interest. The only books thus far used are the Bible and Pilgrim's Progress, both in the Portuguese language. A room was also opened for the sale of Bibles and religious books, and for the purpose of holding religious conversation. The place selected did not prove a very suitable one, and the undertaking has not therefore been attended with all the success that was anticipated. It is hoped, however, that a more suitable room will be found before long, when a renewed effort will be made in the same direction. Mr. Blackford has made several short tours into the country around Rio, for the purpose of distributing tracts and selling Bibles, and is greatly encouraged by the results. Mr. Simonton left Rio in December on a more extended tour, embracing Santos, San Paulo, and other provincial towns in the southern part of the empire. He expected to be absent three months. The object of the tour was three-fold, viz: to make observation of the state of the country with reference to the prosecution of evangelical labours; to distribute Bibles, religious books, and tracts; and to perfect himself in the use of the Portuguese language.

The labours of this mission for the present and for some time to come must necessarily be regarded as preparatory to a more extended work hereafter. Before any systematic plan of labour can be inaugurated the language must be acquired, and no very decided results can be anticipated until religious truth has been disseminated, and has had time to yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness. The brethren understand this matter, and are directing their present labours with reference to these great ultimate results. So far as they can understand the mind of the people and the character and spirit of the government, they see much to encourage their expectations, and little to awaken apprehension in relation to their ultimate success. Among the causes of discouragement, the apathy of the people to all religion is, perhaps, the most serious. There is a class of persons who are, no doubt, ardently attached to the Roman Catholic church, and would vehemently resist the introduction of evangelical religion. But the great mass of the people, including the wealthier and more intelligent classes, would feel very little interest in any conflict that might arise between Romanism and protestantism. Mr. Simonton regards the Brazilians as coming nearer to having no religion at all than any other civilized nation in the world. He writes:

"To my mind, the most astonishing feature of the religious condition of Brazil is its almost total lack of all religion. Unless I am mistaken, Brazil is singular in this respect, even among the most thoroughly Roman Catholic nations. Not only has religion degenerated from being a thing of conviction to a mere habit, but it has become a habit to pay no attention to its outward forms. The number of church-goers is very small. Confession is falling into disuse. Priests are dissolute, and not unfrequently scoffers. A pure and universal indifference seems to reign. The extremity of the pope has produced no public prayers, and Garibaldi and Cavour are heroes. It is said that no people can be without a religion; if so, few nations can be much more destitute than Brazil. There are special occasions, however, which show that he would be greatly deceived who imagined that their irreligion is like that which is found in Protestant countries. At times they become religious. One of these times is the hour of death. Then the priest is sure of employment and pay. Confession, absolution, the sacrament, and extreme unction are the sources of trust in that hour when all men would be religious if they could."

There are a number of circumstances favouring the spread of truth among the people. Bibles and religious tracts are sold or distributed without restriction. Most of the newspapers are open for the discussion of all matters connected with religion, and not unfrequently articles of an entirely evangelical character are published in their columns. There is also a disposition to rebuke intolerance, as may be inferred from the following statement, contained in a recent letter from the mission:

"Bible circulation and Bible reading have not been without their fruits, even in Brazil. North American Christians will be rejoiced to know that there has been for some time a small band of organized Protestant Christians in Rio de Janeiro, the capital, metropolis, and chief seat of the Beast in this empire.

"These disciples are accustomed to meet one evening in the week, besides their Sabbath services, for worship, and the study of the scriptures. While thus employed, on a Sabbath evening, a few weeks ago, at the house of one of their number, the house was surrounded by the police, and the men of the party, nine in number, were taken to prison. This was done by the authority of the sub-delegado, or justice of the parish in which the meeting was held. The next day they were taken before the Chief of Police—answering to our mayor, or judge of police court—who at once ordered their release, and gave his opinion that they were lawfully and properly employed. The inferior magistrate, however, again imprisoned three of them, who were from a different parish. The following day they were again taken before the chief of police, who again ordered their unconditional liberation.

"The daily papers took up the matter, two of them insisting that the action of the sub-delegado was unconstitutional, and rendered him liable to penal prosecution. Another contended that the circumstances justified, if they did not require, the legal investigation and oversight of the magistrates. On the one hand, it was alleged that the Bible used was a grossly corrupt translation falsely attributed to Father Figureido; on the other hand, these allegations were boldly denied."

The mission to Buenos Ayres, for reasons set forth in the last annual report, has been discontinued. Mr. La Hombral, who was formerly connected with it, has been called to a professorship in one of the colleges of the place, and will, no doubt, continue to labour for the promotion of evangelical religion in that part of South America. He enjoys the respect and esteem of the Board, and carries with him their best wishes for his success and usefulness in the work to which he has been called.

Missions in India.

LODIANA MISSION.

Peshawer: west of the Indus; mission station commenced, 1857; missionary labourer, Rev. Isador Loewenthal.

Rawal Pindi: 160 miles north-west of Lahor: mission station commenced 1855; missionary labourers, Rev. James H. Orbison and his wife; native Christian assistants—two teachers, one Scripture reader, and one colporteur.

Lahor: the political capital of the Punjab, 1,225 miles north-west of Calcutta: mission station commenced, 1850; missionary labourers, Rev. John Newton, Rev. Charles W. Forman and his wife; native Christian assistants—two teachers and one Scripture reader.

Kapurthala: 108 miles east of Lahor, 12 miles west of Jalandar; mission station commenced, 1859; missionary labourers, Rev. John S. Woodside and his wife; John Newton, Jr., M. D.

Jalandar: 120 miles east of Lahor, 30 miles west of Lodiana; mission station commenced, 1847; missionary labourers, *Rev Golok Nath; other native Christian assistants—one teacher, one catechist, and one Scripture reader.

Lodiana: near the river Sutlej, 1,100 miles north-west of Calcutta; mission station commenced, 1834; missionary labourers, Rev. Adolph Rudolph and his wife; Mr. Reese Thackwell, licentiate preacher and teacher, and his wife; native Christian assistants—two Scripture readers.

Ambala: 55 miles south-east of Lodiana; mission station commenced, 1848; missionary labourers, Rev. Messrs. Robert M. Munnis and Marcus M. Carleton, and their wives; native Christian assistants—one catechist, three teachers, and one Scripture reader.

Sabathu: in the lower Himalaya mountains, 110 miles east of Lodiana; mission station commenced, 1836; missionary labourer, one native Christian catechist.

Saharunpur: 130 miles south-east of Lodiana; mission station commenced, 1836; missionary labourers, Rev. James R. Campbell, D. D., and his wife; Miss Mary Anna Campbell, teacher; Rev. Theodore Wylie; other native Christian assistants—one catechist, and one Scripture reader.

Dehra: 47 miles east of Saharunpur; mission station commenced, 1854; missionary labourers, Rev. David Herron and his wife; and Rev. William Calderwood; native Christian assistants—one catechist and one Scripture reader.

Roorkee: 20 miles south-east of Saharunpur; mission station commenced, 1856; missionary labourers, Rev. Joseph Caldwell and his wife; native Christian assistant—one catechist.

In this country.—Rev. Levi Janvier and his wife.

On their way to this country.—Rev. George O. Barnes and his wife, Rev. John H. Morrison.

FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

Agra: on the river Jumna, 798 miles north-west of Calcutta; mission station commenced, 1846; missionary labourers, Rev. Joseph Owen and his wife; native Christian assistant—one catechist.

Mynpurie: 80 miles east of Agra; mission station commenced, 1843; missionary labourers, Rev. Augustus Brodhead and his wife; native Christian assistants—one catechist, one teacher, one Scripture reader.

Futtehgurh: on the Ganges, 713 miles north-west of Calcutta; mission station commenced, 1838; missionary labourers, Rev. Messrs. James L. Scott, Julius F. Ullmann and Robert S. Fullerton and their wives; native Christian assistants—five catechists, ten teachers, of whom four are females, two Scripture readers, and two probationers.

Futtehpore: 587 miles north-west of Calcutta; mission station commenced, 1853; missionary labourer, Rev. Gopeenath Nundy; other native Christian assistant—one Scripture reader.

Allahabad: at the junction of the Ganges and Jumna, 500 miles north-west of Calcutta; mission station commenced, 1836; missionary labourers, Rev. Messrs. John J. Walsh, Benjamin D. Wikoff, and William F. Johnson, and their wives; native Christian assistants—two catechists, and one Scripture reader.

Messrs. Wikoff and Johnson and their wives sailed from Boston, July 28th, and arrived at Allahabad about the middle of December. They will remain at this station while learning the language. Mr. Johnson is a younger brother of the Rev. A. O. Johnson, one of the company whose lives were lost at Cawnpore, during the mutiny of the Sepoys. He is a member of the Presbytery of Steubenville, and Mr. Wikoff of the Presbytery of Miami. Mr. Ullmann and his wife reached Futtehgurh at the end of December, on their return from England, where he superintended the printing of a revised edition of the Scriptures in Hindi, for the North India Bible Society, as mentioned in a former Report. The health of Mrs. Ullmann received benefit from her visit to her native country. They left their son with friends in England for his education. The health of Mr. Williams has suffered from the climate of India, and he was convinced that a longer residence there would be injudicious. He arrived in this country on the 10th of April. The mission with which he was connected, while sincerely regretting to lose him as a co-labourer, were constrained to admit the necessity of his return. The Committee part with him with regret, as an able and valuable labourer, and follow him with their kind wishes for his usefulness and comfort.

John Newton, jr., M. D., has been appointed as a medical missionary of the Board; he will continue to be associated with Mr. Woodside at Kapurthala, in the interesting missionary labours at that city described in the sequel, the expense of which, both of the missionaries and their work, is defrayed by the liberality of the Rajah. Messrs. Morrison, and Barnes and Mrs. Barnes are on their way to this country. Mr. Barnes has suffered severely from a chronic disease, which seems not to be well understood, but which has laid him aside from missionary work for more than a year. Mr. Morrison has been very feeble for a long time, and unable to engage in continued labour. At the recommendation of physicians, and with the consent of the mission, these brethren have concluded to return to this country—their brethren in the mission expressing in warm terms their regret in view of their departure and the loss of their services. After setting out on the journey, Mr. Morrison was called to meet still another and most painful trial, in the death of his wife. She was attacked by small-pox, but the nature of the disease was not at first suspected even by the physician who was consulted at Delhi; but its character became apparent, and her sufferings were most severe, until death closed the scene on the 29th of December, a few days after their arrival at Cawnpore. Her mind was graciously kept in peace, and she departed this life in the hope of a joyful immortality. Mr. Morrison resumed his journey soon afterwards; he is accompanied by his youngest son, his other children being already in this country for their education. Two sons of Mr. Newton are coming to this country with Mr. Barnes, for the same purpose. Mr. Newton was transferred to Lahor by the mission, to supply Mr. Barnes' place at that important station. The return of Mrs. Campbell and her daughters to Saharunpur, and of Mrs. Woodside to Kapurthala, both after making arrangements for the education of their children, were events of tender interest to their families and the missionary company. The youngest son of Dr. and Mrs. Campbell was left in Ireland, and the two oldest children of Mr. and Mrs. Woodside were left in the same country, under the care of friends, for purposes of education. Miss Mary Anna Campbell, the oldest daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Campbell, has been appointed as an assistant missionary, and has entered on the work of teaching native women and children at Saharunpur, under her father's direction.

Some cases of severe illness, besides those mentioned already, occurred in the Lodiana mission, the most serious of which were those of Dr. Campbell and Mr. Thackwell. A sojourn in the hills was the means of restoring their usual health. Some instances occurred of serious illness among the children in the mission families, but the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Walsh was the only one not spared, but called to be with the Saviour. Mr. and Mrs. Janvier are still in this country. Their health has become so much improved that they desire to return to their work in a few months, if the Lord will.

PESHAWER.—MISSION TO THE AFGHANS.

Mr. Loewenthal has continued his labours in the Afghan department of the mission. His principal work, as stated in his report, "consists in translating the Scriptures into Pushto, the language of the Afghans. Progress has continued to be made, but not as rapid progress as might have been desired. It is believed, however, that a correct as well as idiomatic version can only be obtained by means of constant, laborious, and copious revision, and this necessitates a great expenditure of time."

In addition to this work, Mr. Loewenthal has given much attention to preaching. Of this, he speaks as follows: "Preaching in the Pushto and Persian languages has also been regularly carried on in the villages near Peshawer, and, though less frequently, in the city itself. The audiences in the latter are usually numerous and attentive, but greatly wanting in good manners"—ready to interrupt the preacher, to cavil at his message, to take offence,—the Afghans differing greatly in this respect from the Hindus. The village audiences differ much in the respect paid by them to the missionary's preaching. For a clear account of the reception accorded to his message, both in the city and the villages, reference must be made to Mr. Loewenthal's report, which was published in the Record, of March and April.

In the early part of the year, Mr. Loewenthal, in company with a missionary of the English Episcopal Church, made a missionary tour that extended to Dehra Ishmael Khan, on the Indus. They travelled during a part of the way in boats, but did not find boating on the Indus convenient for missionary purposes, the villages lying too far from the river, and sometimes being difficult of access owing to intervening watercourses. The part of the journey which was made by land gave them access to many towns and villages, especially in the Rawal Pindi district of the Punjab. In these places, they were personally well received for the most part by the people, and their message was heard with varying degrees of interest, from stupidity to "the usual Mohammedan controversy." The particular account of this journey, given in Mr. Loewenthal's report, mentions several valuable ends, which were in a measure accomplished, besides the direct object of preaching the gospel. Few Afghans were found in the river towns and villages, the Afghan population being more or less inland, and seeming to prefer the hills. The dialects of their language, so far as these could be studied on the frontier of the country, were found to differ more in pronunciation than in other respects. The written language, Mr. Loewenthal was quite gratified to learn, "appears to be one among all Afghans, provided a full and correct orthography be adopted, which leaves each tribe at liberty to pronounce it their own way. There are, of course, localisms and provincialisms, more in single words than in phrases, and it is evident that in translations and books intended for all Afghans, such must be carefully avoided, sometimes even at the expense of pungency and terseness." Few men, the Committee will add their conviction, are better qualified than the writer of these notices, to do justice to the difficult points that must be considered in the preparation of Christian books, and especially the translating of the Holy Scriptures in the language of this people. If his life and health are spared, they confidently expect to see the happiest results from his studies and labours in this great branch of missionary work.

The journey above described did not result in the discovery of a suitable place for the location of the mission to the Afghans; but Peshawer, as a temporary station, offers certain important advantages for the work in prospect—such as protection under the British authority, and intercourse to a greater or less degree with Afghan people living in that city and its vicinity, or visiting it from interior and as yet inaccessible districts.

Mr. Loewenthal refers to one instance among persons who might be termed inquirers, as possessing some degree of special interest—a Siah Posh Kafir, who was for some time under Christian instruction, but removed from Peshawer without becoming a convert. On the Afghan people, it could hardly be expected that much impression should yet have been made by missionary labour. The work is but in its commencement, and it has been commenced under the disadvantage of being conducted not in the Afghan country proper, but in a semi-Hindu city on its borders. Nevertheless, there is no room for discouragement. The divinely-appointed means of making the gospel known may already be employed to some extent, and the faith of the churches will look for the divinely-vouchsafed blessing on the use of these means, in due season and in full measure.

RAWAL PINDI.

The continued ill health of Mr. Morrison prevented his engaging in much active missionary work. For a short period he was able to resume his ordinary labours, and he was much encouraged by the attention which was given to his instructions by the Sepoys of a Goorkha regiment, stationed at Murree. After he was laid aside again, "they were in the habit of visiting him daily at his house for religious conversation and books."

Mr. Orbison had the charge of the school, containing 112 scholars in regular attendance at the end of the year; and he speaks well of the progress of the scholars in scientific and religious knowledge. He reports the church as having 13 communicants. Two of the members were suspended from its communion for unworthy conduct, and only one convert had been added to its membership. Several inquirers appeared, but few of them were regarded with satisfaction. Preaching in the vernacular languages by the missionary and the native assistants has been continued with little interruption in the city, cantonments, and neighbouring villages; and a month was spent on a missionary journey in the country north-eastward of the station. While on a visit at Murree, Mr. Orbison and one of the native helpers preached in the bazar and the lines of two native regiments; many of the Sikh soldiers came to him for books.

At this station, eligible premises have been obtained during the last year for the use of the mission, and a dwelling-house has been erected; while the old school-house has been exchanged for a larger building, in a place better suited to its object.

LAHOR.

The continued ill health of Mr. Barnes, and his having to leave India in the hope of its recovery, have been already mentioned. Mr. Newton did not join this station until about the close of the year under review. Hence there was a greatly diminished amount of missionary work, but the duties of the station were nevertheless well conducted. Mr. Forman says that "the gospel has been regularly preached, morning and evening, in the streets, or at one of the gates of the city." Public service has been kept every Sabbath morning in Hindustani at the Delhi gate chapel, attended by both Christians and heathens, and an open air service was commenced on Thursday evenings at a covered platform in the same vicinity. The opposition of Mohammedans continued to lose its former virulent character; but these services were not marked by much of special interest. Concerning the bazar and street preaching, the report of the station says, "The progress made is chiefly observable in the removal of prejudices, and in the general enlightenment of the mass of the people." The engagements of Mr. Forman rendered it impracticable for him to go out into the country on missionary tours, as in former years.

The number of church-members when last reported was 28; deducting those mentioned as withdrawn last year, and one removed by death, the present number is 22; none are mentioned as having been received during the year. Some changes have occurred in the arrangements for the Christian education of native youth, so that but one school is now reported, with 325 scholars. These are taught both in English and vernacular; the instruction of the higher classes and the religious instruction of the other classes were entrusted to three Christian teachers, who are considered well qualified for their posts. One of them is a Scotchman, formerly a corporal in the army; the other two are natives, who were educated in the Scotch Free Church schools at Calcutta. The government makes a grant-in-aid to this school, of about one hundred dollars a month, which is of great service in providing for its expenses. A school supported by government was established early in the year, which drew off some of the mission scholars, but their places were soon filled up again. Mr. Forman has given "a good deal of his time to the supervision and management of the school, and has conducted a daily religious service for the benefit of the teachers and pupils."

KAPURTHALA.

The interesting circumstances under which this station was occupied were briefly stated in the last Annual Report—its having been commenced at the request of a native chief of the highest position, the Rajah of Kapurthala, whose present wife is a member of one of the mission churches, and its having for its staff of labourers a clerical and a medical missionary, both of whom receive their support from the Rajah, while yet they are left at full liberty in all their missionary labours to follow their own views of duty. For fuller information, reference is made to the interesting report of this station, which was published in the Foreign Missionary of March; it is but an outline that can here be presented.

Kapurthala is a town of about 16,000 inhabitants, the capital of the Rajah's territory in the Punjab. This district contains an area of eight hundred square miles, with a population of 180,000 souls, who live in about six hundred towns and villages. Besides this district, other lands have been recently granted to the Rajah by the British government as a reward for his loyal conduct during the mutiny of the Bengal army.

Mr. Woodside has spent from one to two hours daily in the education of the Rajah's two sons by his first marriage, and their cousin, who form an interesting class. Besides giving attention to vernacular studies, and also to Persian, they are learning English with more than ordinary progress, and are at the same time becoming acquainted with scripture facts and doctrines. Their ages are from nine to fifteen, "and their future course, with God's blessing, is full of hope to the interests of the truth in the Punjab." The city school, which had been for five years under the occasional supervision of the Rev. Golok Nath, of Jalandar, was placed under Mr. Woodside's superintendence, and contains about 120 pupils. They are mostly engaged in learning English and Persian, though a few study Gurmukhi, the language of the Sikhs; a Sanscrit department was discontinued on account of the unwillingness of the Brahman teacher to permit a low caste man to keep the room in which it was held in proper condition. The scholars are all instructed in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. The Rajah has recently authorized the establishment of three more schools, one in each principal provincial town in his territory.

Three stated services have been held on the Sabbath, one in English, and two in Hindustani, all of which have given encouragement by the apparent interest with which they have been attended. A spirit of inquiry has been evinced to some extent on the subject of religion, but the only member admitted to the church was the infant daughter of the Rajah, by baptism. A Christian influence is beginning to be felt; as a signal example of this, all public works are suspended on the Lord's day, by the chief's order. The station engagements of the brethren have not permitted them to go out on missionary journeys, and they are anxious to obtain properly qualified native labourers to aid them in this part of the missionary work.

Dr. Newton has found an important field of labour in the duties of the dispensary and hospital, which the Rajah's liberality supports in the city, and in the distribution of his alms to a large number of poor persons. Besides relieving a great amount of suffering, and gaining the good-will of the people towards the mission, he enjoys excellent opportunities of making known the gospel to many who would not otherwise hear its message.

The Rajah of Kapurthala has set a good example to other native chiefs, by his enlightened and liberal efforts to promote the welfare of his subjects. His position is one of peculiar interest among them, and doubtless also one of much delicacy and difficulty. His liberality toward the missionary operations thus briefly sketched has been very marked, the outlay for a dwelling-house, dispensary and medicines, support of the missionaries, schools, etc., being Rs. 9,450, or nearly $5,000 for the last year. He is spoken of by the missionaries as making "no secret of his personal preference for Christianity, while on all suitable occasions he proclaims complete liberty of conscience to all." And the brethren, "for him personally and for the mission in his territory, earnestly solicit the sympathy and an interest in the prayers of every Christian who may read this report."

JALANDER.

This station continues to be occupied by native labourers, who enjoy the counsel and occasional visits of their American brethren of other stations. The report of Mr. Golok Nath represents the missionary work as going forward very much as in former years. Preaching and teaching engross his time and strength, and his assistants continue in the satisfactory discharge of their respective duties. Regular services were held in the chapel; and in the bazars and the neighbouring villages the people were addressed, some of whom received religious books. The attention of heathen auditors in the chapel is described as encouraging. During the cold season, eight or nine days were spent at each of eight cities in the district, known as Tahsil stations, each of them being a common centre of from two hundred to three hundred villages. The opportunities enjoyed at these cities of publishing the gospel to numerous hearers encouraged the missionary to contemplate making similar visits hereafter. He speaks also with interest of a plan of proceeding which ought to be always kept in view, that of seeking private conversations with individuals on the subject of the Christian religion. A satisfactory account of his position and work at Jalandar will be found in a letter of Mr. Golok Nath, which was published in the Foreign Missionary of June.

No additions are reported to the church, which last year contained twenty communicants, but the members are spoken of as "growing in knowledge and hope, and in grace also. There is, we think, a deeper and more general feeling of the absolute need of the Holy Spirit to make the preaching of the gospel by any of us to be of any use to the enlightening and salvation of men here." The school was kept open, and was attended by two hundred and fifty boys, whose progress in study is commended. Religious instruction forms a prominent part of their exercises. A Sabbath class for the boys in the two higher English classes promises much good. Of this the missionary says, "We thought it proper to teach them Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and we find that it has turned out to be a very appropriate book for them. While teaching, the teacher can spy in the faces of his pupils marks of strong sympathy for the 'man clothed with rags, with his face from his own house, a book in his hand, and a great burden on his back;' and their minds become really affected, when he speaks to them about the lost condition of man by nature, his first convictions of sin, the consequent thoughts of judgment and eternity, and the only way of fleeing from the wrath to come."

Through the kind interest of European friends at the station two new houses have been added to the two built last year, making a nucleus of a native Christian village. The native Christians, who are not considered as qualified for missionary service, are advised to seek other employment; and inquirers are not encouraged to leave their own profession in the expectation of receiving support from the mission. This duty of self-support is one that requires to be urged on the conscience in many cases. A Sabbath-school for the children of the native Christians, conducted by the daughter of Mr. Golok Nath, now numbers sixteen boys and girls, who are taught the catechisms, hymns, and Scriptures. The Poor-House has continued to receive liberal support from European friends, and to be of much benefit to numerous objects of charity.

In the view of such labours, the missionary is able to add, "On the whole we feel encouraged."

LODIANA.

This station has been subject to trials of much severity. Its staff of labourers, reduced by the visit of Mr. and Mrs. Janvier to this country for their health, was still further diminished by the absence of Mr. Thackwell in the hills for about half the year, for the same reason. Mr. Newton, however, spent several months at this station during the cold season, giving much relief to Mr. Rudolph, besides fulfilling his own duties. The most serious matter was the prevalence of the measles, and afterwards of the small-pox, in the girls' orphan asylum, causing great care and anxiety to Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph; two of the children died. Both these diseases prevailed in the city, causing the death of many. Besides this, great distress was created by the partial failure of the rainy season and consequent loss of the usual crops, resulting in famine. Under these judgments, however, but few appear to learn righteousness.

Two stated services on the Sabbath, two weekly meetings, and the monthly concert meeting for prayer were maintained, and open air preaching in the bazar. Mr. Rudolph, in his report, speaks with special interest of the services held during "the week of prayer." A month was spent by him and Qadir Baksh in preaching the gospel among villages in the vicinity of Lodiana, and Mr. Thackwell was able to engage in this service to some extent. The great ignorance and apathy of people living in the immediate neigbourhood of a station which has been so long occupied as a missionary post, was painfully brought to the notice of the brethren. In the church, they were compelled to exercise discipline in cutting off two unworthy members, but were encouraged by the hopeful conversion and the baptism of two Mohammedans. The number of communicants reported last year was ten. Several inquirers appeared to run well, but did not apply for admission to the church; one of these was called away by death.

The city-school closed the year with 314 scholars on the roll, of whom 226 were in the English department; the average daily attendance was 235. It laboured under embarrassment from Mr. Thackwell's absence. The orphan girls' school received four new inmates, and lost two by death, as stated above, both infants; the number at the end of the year was twenty-five, besides two day-scholars. Progress was observed in all, in their usual studies, in needle work, and in domestic duties.

The press has continued under the superintendence of Messrs. Newton and Rudolph. Its publications for the year ending, October 1st, 1860, are shown by the following table:

In Urdu:	Gospel of Luke,	6,000	copies,	1,194,000	pages.
	Gospel of John,	6,000	"	984,000	"
	Bible Passages,	2,000	"	416,000	"

In the depository, there were 38,033 copies of different publications in Urdu, Punjabi and Hindi, at the beginning of the year; 37,000 were added; 24,981 were sent out, and 50,052 were on hand at the end of the year. The "Sundry" small publications are not included in these returns, and all that were printed had not reached the depository when the report was prepared. The copies sent out went to sixteen missionary stations, and to some other places.

AMBALA.

The brethren at this station begin their report with an acknowledgment of their gratitude for the goodness of God. Their missionary labours were performed without interruption, and with some degree of encouragement. Three services were held on the Lord's day; besides, a weekly prayer-meeting was kept up, and preaching daily in the bazars of the city and cantonments. Five fairs were visited, and more than a hundred villages, in order more widely to disseminate the gospel. The attention paid to the stated services was respectful; labours in the bazars were hardly so well received as in some former years, owing perhaps to the measures adopted by the government in disarming the people after the mutiny, and to increased taxation, and also to the apprehension of famine; but the visits to fairs and villages gave encouragement to the missionary and the native assistants by whom they were made. Two adults were admitted to the church on a profession of their faith; one of these is the wife of a church-member, who was at first violently opposed to the conversion of her husband, but was afterwards led to join him as a follower of Christ. Both of them were led to a knowledge of the Saviour by the blessing of God on the faithful instructions of a Christian lady, in whose service they were employed. The number of communicants reported last year was sixteen. One of them was under church censure.

Two schools were supported, one in this city, and the other in the cantonments, and the number of scholars in both has become larger during the year; the former school had an average attendance of 165 scholars,—the latter of 75. Many of the teachers and scholars attend the stated services held in their school-rooms. Besides this, it is stated that "all these pupils read the scriptures or hear them read, and commit the catechism to memory."

A Poor-House is under the care of missionaries, and is supported by European friends at the station. Twenty-seven blind people and lepers enjoyed the benefits of this asylum, to whom the gospel was preached almost daily. One of the converts is an inmate of the poor-house, and exerts a good influence on the rest.

SABATHU.

The work of Mr. Newton has been performed, as was reported last year, in the Hills, where his health requires him to reside during the hot months, and in the Plains during the cold season, chiefly at Sabathu and Lodiana. At the end of the year he was transferred by the Mission to Lahor, as already mentioned. When he was in Sabathu, Mr. Newton conducted on every Sabbath regular Hindustani service, and a Bible-class in the same language, and during part of the time an evening service in English. The practice of taking up weekly contributions for religious objects was introduced at the Sabathu services, and with good effect. One adult member was added to the church. At Lodiana, besides preaching almost daily, Mr. Newton was much occupied with the charge of the press. His report, which was published in the Foreign Missionary of April, gives the titles of several works in Punjabi, prepared for publication, including the revision of the gospels of Mark and Luke, which must have required much patient labour. Some of these works have been printed, and others are in the press. Owing to the limited pecuniary means which the Board could give to meet the expense of itinerant preaching, less was accomplished in this way than in some former years. Three of the most important fairs within reach were visited, and several days were spent at each by Mr. Newton; and the native brethren of the two stations attended several other fairs. The usefulness of such visits is thus spoken of in the report of this station:—"There are no better opportunities for preaching to the masses than are offered at these gatherings; not that the people who attend them are anxious for salvation, but they have leisure to hear. The thing sought by almost all votaries of the subordinate deities is some earthly good. The Hindus generally care as little for eternal salvation, as the masses of worldly people in Christendom. Indeed, they care much less, because they have less conscience, and so have fewer fears of eternal judgment." The hill people are like those of the plains in seeking chiefly temporal good, but they worship also a demon almost identical with Satan, in order to avert the evils which they suppose he inflicts on men. After stating at some length their erroneous views on these all-important matters, Mr. Newton concludes his report by asking, "When will these errors give place to gospel truth? When will conscience be reproduced in the sensualized and rocky hearts of these Hindus? When will the heaven of a holy God become to them an object of desire?"

SAHARUNPUR.

At this station the usual labours have been kept in progress. They were necessarily restricted during the absence of the missionary, who was compelled by serious illness to spend some months in the hills; but the native missionary rendered efficient service in the charge of the station. He is warmly commended as a valuable labourer; Dr. Campbell says of him, "The conversion of even one such Christian is worth all that our church has bestowed upon India."

The gospel is proclaimed daily in the bazars and elsewhere in the city. Regular services in Hindustani twice on the Sabbath, and a service in English on Sabbath evening; weekly lecture and prayer-meetings in Hindustani, and the monthly concert-meeting, have all been maintained. At the monthly concert-meeting, collections amounting to about $20 were made by the native church-members. By these services, the gospel is brought statedly to the knowledge of many of the heathen, and the means of grace have been within reach of professing Christians. The number of these is still small, the report of the station says, "as members from time to time are drawn off to labour at other stations. One educated Brahman was baptized during the past year, [and one of the female members was removed by death.] The number of native communicants is twelve, and in their whole moral conduct they have given us much satisfaction."

Three missionary journeys were made, "and in all, two hundred and five villages were visited, and the gospel was proclaimed to thousands, many of whom had not before heard of the Saviour's name." The Hardwar fair, and another fair near the station, were attended by the native assistants, to preach and distribute religious books among the numerous visitors. The report speaks of these labours as follows: "Our message was listened to with respect, and in some places we met with much encouragement; yet none came out boldly to profess the truth, and renounce a system which they know to be false, and which can furnish no solid ground of hope for the future. Indeed, the concerns of another world appear to have little if any influence over their conduct, and nothing but the Almighty power of God, that created the world, can arouse and quicken them to seek their spiritual interests." The similarity of this statement with a remark of the missionary at Sabathu deserves notice; these sad testimonies are the more impressive, because they are made by the two oldest missionaries of the Board in India, brethren who have spent between twenty and thirty years of earnest and faithful labour in that field. These brethren do not regard their labours, however, as being without hope; "the end will show that they have not been in vain."

A school for instruction in English, attended by 40 scholars; a vernacular school, having from 80 to 90 scholars; and the orphan institution, numbering 16 pupils, were the means of doing good to a choice though limited company of youths; these schools are all reported as in a satisfactory condition. The religious element continued to be made very prominent in their instruction. The desire of learning English is stated to be on the increase; "it will gradually become general, and be considered essential to well educated men, as Persian was under the Mohammedan rule in former years." Most of the pupils now in the orphan institution are young; only one of them is a communicant; but the hope is expressed that valuable labourers will still be trained up in this school, as in past years. During the last year two young men, formerly in this institution, were appointed as assistants in the missionary work,—one at Dehra, the other at Kapurthala. The report of this station also was published in the Foreign Missionary of April.

DEHRA.

Religious services have been conducted, both in Hindustani and English, as in former years; a Sabbath-school for the native Christians was formed; and the gospel was preached daily in the bazars to attentive audiences. Visits were made to fairs, especially the one held at Hardwar, where Mr. Calderwood and two native assistants spent several days. Large audiences were readily obtained, some books were distributed, and much knowledge of the way of salvation was imparted. The number of pilgrims present was much smaller than usual. An unusual occurrence at this fair is thus spoken of by the brethren: "A faqir and six or seven of his disciples occupied a place not far from our tents. We frequently heard them chanting in concert a collection of words in which the name of our Saviour occurred, the amount of which appeared to be —'The name of Jesus is my talisman.' The leading faqir seemed to be quite an intelligent man, and he and all his followers said they were Christians; but as they sang the praises of false objects of worship more frequently than the praise of the only true God, we could place but little confidence in their professions of belief in the true religion."

Two schools are supported at this station, a day-school for boys, with an attendance increased during the year from 81 to 113, and a native Christian girl's boarding-school, having eighteen pupils, besides four day-scholars. This school is under the charge of Mrs. Herron, assisted by a competent teacher. The diligence and conduct of the scholars are highly commended. Concerning this school the missionaries say in their report, "Our experience of nearly two years has served but to deepen our conviction of its importance. In conducting it, we feel that we are doing good service to the infant church of this land." The state of the church at Dehra is not reported; last year, it contained thirteen communicants.

ROORKEE.

The missionary at Roorkee was obliged to spend two months in the hills on account of health, during which time the native catechist conducted the missionary interests of the station. Services on the Sabbath and Wednesday afternoon were kept up, the Sabbath evening service being attended by the teachers and scholars of the mission-school, sometimes to the number of a hundred. Preaching in the bazar has been maintained every evening except the Sabbath, and has been better attended than ever before. "Occasionally we have had to meet an objection or two from a bystander," it is mentioned in the station report, "but generally our message has been listened to without any disputing on the part of the audience, and frequently with considerable seriousness." On a missionary tour, extending to Delhi and returning by a different route, and at the Hardwar fair for several days, the gospel was made know to many, and Mr. Caldwell speaks of encouraging attention, even in towns where formerly he met with rude treatment. He also refers to the greatly diminished numbers in attendance at the Hardwar fair.

The school had 140 names in the roll, with a daily attendance of 120 scholars. Until his visit to the hills, Mr. Caldwell spent three or four hours daily in this school, teaching the more advanced classes in English, and overseeing the vernacular classes. It does not appear that a church has been organized at this station.

AGRA.

Mr. Owen, whose transfer to this station was mentioned in the last report, remained at Allahabad during the year, but reached Agra about the 1st of March; previous to that time the native assistant was the only labourer. The report of the mission thus speaks of his labours. "He reports that he has preached regularly in the bazars, and that the people have generally listened well. He has also had the charge of a school in which a little English along with the native language is taught. The school has numbered about 35 scholars." With the arrival of a missionary at this station, greater vigour will be given to its services: and it may acquire some measure of its former prominence as a missionary post. The city contains many inhabitants, though no longer the seat of government, and it affords access to a large population.

MYNPURIE.

The report of the missionary has not been received, but there is good reason to believe that the missionary interests of the station are in a prosperous condition. The buildings destroyed in the Sepoy mutiny have been restored, and the assembling again of the little Christian congregation in the chapel for worship on the last Sabbath of September, was an occasion of deep interest. A young Hindu, belonging to the police levy, was then baptized, and the Lord's Supper was administered to thirteen persons—including four not connected with the mission church. There were persons making serious inquiry about the way of salvation, and apparently not far from the kingdom of God. One of these is a man of intelligence, who is in government employ. "A leavening process is going on in this country," Mr. Brodhead says, and he gives an interesting example of it in the case of a stranger, who was observed to be present at one of the meetings for prayer. He was found to be a land-holder, who lived thirty-two miles from Mynpurie, and who had procured at various times the Gospels, which he had read. He now purchased a work, entitled "An Inquiry into the True Religion," paying the full price for it. The missionary learned that this man's attention was first called to the subject of the Christian religion, by hearing the preaching of the native catechists. The school is still kept up, and the number of scholars is probably about the same as last year, 125.

FUTTEHGURH—FURRUKHABAD.

The missionary work at this station has continued to be prosecuted with vigour, and marked with encouragement. Messrs. Scott and Fullerton divide the charge between them, on the plan described in the report of last year. Mr. Ullmann did not join them until the end of the year under review.

Preaching was maintained regularly, in the cantonments and neighboring villages, and in Furrukhabad, the native assistants rendering good service in this way. Some of the native Christians were employed as colporteurs by the North India Bible and Tract Societies for six months, and they were able to call attention to the message contained in the books and tracts they were distributing. Mr. Scott made a very interesting missionary tour of three weeks among the villages around Futtehgurh, in which he was accompanied by twelve native labourers; a report of this journey was published in the Record of July and August.

The church under Mr. Scott's charge at Rakha received twenty-two new communicants, and under Mr. Fullerton's at Burhpur, six, making the number at the former place seventy-five, and at the latter twenty-five. One of the new converts received into the church at Burhpur was a Sadh, by which title a small Hindu sect is denoted, who differ from their countrymen in rejecting idolatry and caste, and profess to worship only the Supreme Ruler. More persons of this sect are found at Furrukhabad than elsewhere, and some of their leading men who called on the missionary manifested no intolerance towards the Sadh who was baptized. Another convert was an aged Hindu, of considerable property and influence, who had long been under Christian instruction. One of the church-members of Burhpur was removed by death, one who "was a most exemplary Christian, the mother of a large family . . . whose example still lives to exert an influence for God." Nine adults were baptized at Rakha, and six at Burhpur; the other new communicants had been baptized before, being connected with the orphan asylum, or else born of native Christian parents. Interesting notices are given of some of these converts, as may be seen by referring to the Foreign Missionary of May. The church building in the cantonments, which was left by the Sepoy rebels with little more than bare walls standing, has been restored, and is again occupied by the worshippers of God in their regular services.

The schools under Mr. Fullerton's superintendence are the following, viz: the high school, having on its roll 325 boys; three bazar schools for boys, and one for girls, supported by the mission, the former attended by 85 scholars, and the latter by 25; and five village schools, with 130 scholars. The schools under Mr. Scott's care as follows: a Christian boys' school, with 62 pupils—more than half of whom are the children of native Christians; a Christian girls' school, with 33 scholars—all of them being children of native Christians; four bazar boys' schools, with 109 scholars, a bazar and a village girls' school, with 30 and 20 scholars. The whole number of youth thus reported as being under Christian instruction and influence is over eight hundred; they make a most important part of our brethren's missionary work, and one hardly second to any other in its promise of far-extending usefulness. In the high school, especially, is Christian instruction given under circumstances well fitted to awaken hope of the best results. Mr. Fullerton gives a large part of his time to this important school, and he speaks in very warm terms of the efficient services of Ishwari Das, the principal native teacher. Ten of the bazar, or primary schools, are supported at the expense of the Sikh chief who formerly lived at Futtehgurh, and there embraced Christianity.

The more recent accounts from this station are marked by an almost special degree of hope, as if the set time to favour this church were nigh at hand. Thus one of the brethren says, in giving reasons for Mr. Ullmann's remaining at Furrukhabad: "There are so many hopeful indications at this station, so many inquirers, so evident a turning of the people towards Christianity, that we look upon the harvest as ripening, and we desire to be ready for it. Do not understand too much from this, but be assured we are much encouraged. May the Lord fulfil our hopes!"

FUTTEHPORE.

This station remains in the charge of Mr. Nundy, the native missionary, and his labours have not been in vain in the Lord. Regular preaching services were maintained twice on the Sabbath, and on Thursday evening a Bible-class is taught. Several villages were visited in the cold season, for preaching and the distribution of the scriptures; and in Futtehpore and its immediate neighbourhood preaching is kept up almost every day. These labours have been attended with more than usual encouragement. No less than twenty hopeful converts were admitted to the church by baptism, sixteen of them Hindus, and four of them Mohammedans, making the whole number of communicants thirty-six. Notices of some of the converts were published in Mr. Nundy's letters, in the Foreign Missionary of June, and the Record of January.

In the boys' school Mr. Nundy reports an increase of scholars, the number being a hundred and fifty, mostly from families of respectable standing. "Amongst their studies," the report of the station says, "the Bible and catechism are taught daily, and the school is opened and closed every day with prayer." The girls' school has been attended with less encouragement, having but sixteen scholars; of these, nine are the children of Christian parents, and most of them are quite young. Efforts to impart a Christian education to Hindu girls have to be carried on against much prejudice, but hardly any kind of missionary labour possesses a higher degree of interest, or affords greater promise of usefulness.

The Committee have heard with pleasure that Mr. Nundy's health has been much better, and they trust he will be spared for many years, and permitted to enjoy the continued blessing of God on his work amongst his countrymen.

ALLAHABAD.

At this important station the missionary work has been carried forward in the usual way, by preaching, teaching, and the preparation of Christian books. The Committee have not received full reports of the labours of Messrs. Owen and Williams, but it is mentioned of the former, that "besides preaching, he has been engaged on a commentary on the Psalms, which is being printed at Mirzapore. He has also performed the duties of secretary to the North India Bible and Tract Societies." Mr. Williams was chiefly occupied in the superintendence and instruction of the High School, of which an account will be given in the sequel. Mr. Walsh gave his main strength to preaching during the year, and his report is full and satisfactory. The English services were wisely transferred to the Scotch Presbyterian chaplain, who was appointed to Allahabad during the year, and who is spoken of in warm terms by our brethren as a hearty and valuable co-labourer with them in their mission work. One of the mission chapels was placed at his disposal, so far as needed, for preaching in English; this chapel was enlarged and newly furnished at a cost of more than $1700, which was nearly all provided through his efforts, and which receives special acknowledgment in the report of the mission.

In Hindustani two services every Sabbath have been kept up in this chapel, and two at the Jumna church, besides a weekly service in each place. Bazar preaching almost daily by Mr. Walsh and the native assistants, particularly during the whole month of the great fair, and visits and instruction in the poor-house and jail received full attention. An interesting case of hopeful conversion is reported among the prisoners, but the poor man died before Mr. Walsh felt at liberty to baptize him. Conversations were often sought and held with persons who could not be reached in other ways. The church received five adults and six infants; one adult member died; and the number of communicants at the end of the year was thirty-seven. The congregation at the Jumna church steadily increased.

The high school continued under Mr. Williams' charge until the end of the year under review, when it was placed under Mr. Walsh's superintendence, on account of Mr. Williams' return to this country. It is thus referred to in the report of the mission: "This school was revived a year after the mutiny, and has since had to contend with many difficulties. Mr. Williams has devoted to it a large share of his time and attention, and his labours have been rewarded by an average attendance of more than four hundred boys, many of whom are sons of the most respectable class of the inhabitants of Allahabad. . . The school consists of two departments, English and Vernacular;" but all the scholars devote a part of their time to studies in their native language, and special interest is taken in their Christian instruction. It is a matter of regret that the grant of a few limited scholarships, as mentioned in the Annual Report of last year, through some delay in the mail, was not known in time to secure the continuance of some hopeful scholars; but it will now be applied agreeably to its purpose, and it is believed that it will secure happy results; if not, it can be easily withdrawn. Four bazar schools, under Mr. Walsh's charge, contained about a hundred boys, and a fifth under Mrs. Walsh's care was attended by seventeen girls. The simplest rudiments of learning, with lessons in the scriptures and catechism, are taught in these schools, the girls learning beside these some knowledge of sewing. In the orphan asylum, but nine boys were inmates, all quite young; besides attending the high school, they received instruction separately in Hindi.

The foregoing accounts show that the work of God is making progress in India. It is still the day of small things, so far as visible fruit is concerned, though in respect even to this the missionaries have met with real encouragement; but a leavening process is going on, bringing the native mind more and more under the power of the Christian religion, which we may hope will not cease until the whole is leavened. The judgments of God, moreover, have fallen heavily on that part of the land in which the missions of our church have been formed, during a large part of the year under review, first, in a long continued drought, and afterwards in wide-spread famine, causing great distress, and the destruction of many lives. Vigorous and noble efforts were made by the government and by Europeans in India to give relief to famishing multitudes, and in efforts of this kind our missionary friends bore their full share. It may be expected that this terrible dispensation will be overruled, in the providence of God, so as to impress more deeply on the minds of the people the vanity of their gods as helpers in time of need, and also to hold up to their view the true benevolence of Christianity.

The Committee observe with regret that the number of missionary labourers from this country connected with these missions is less than in 1857. The heavy calamity of the Sepoy mutiny has not yet been repaired; four valuable labourers and their wives were then cut off in the prime of life, and but three new missionaries and their wives have since gone to this field. A licentiate preacher and a physician have been added to the missionary staff from persons living in India, but several missionaries have had to return, or are now on their way, to this country on account of health; so that of ordained ministers now on the ground, the number reported this year is seven less than in 1857—a decrease of one fourth of the whole number. Including the four brethren absent from the field for their health, the number of ordained missionaries, not counting the native brethren, is now twenty-four; in 1857 it was twenty-seven. Of native labourers of various classes, there is a small increase. It should be considered, moreover, that the general prospects of the missionary work are decidedly more encouraging than they were previous to the Sepoy rebellion. It is also worthy of special consideration, that in some places, particularly in connection with the labours of European missionaries in Tinnevelly, there have been lately remarkable religious movements, resulting in the hopeful conversion of large numbers; and that at one of the stations described in this report, nearly thirty hopeful converts, and at another no less than twenty, were received as communicants last year. In the view of this state of things, the Committee feel constrained to plead that more labourers may speedily be sent out to strengthen these missions.

Mission in Siam.

Bangkok.—On the river Meinam, about twenty-five miles from its mouth; occupied as a mission station in 1840 to 1844, and from 1847 to the present time. Missionary labourers,—the Rev. Messrs. Stephen Mattoon, Samuel R. House, M. D., Daniel McGilvary, Samuel McFarland, and Noah McDonald, and their wives, and the Rev. Jonathan Wilson; one native Christian teacher.

The last has been a year of trial and yet of marked encouragement in this mission. The affliction of the year was the removal of Mrs. Wilson, wife of the Rev. J. Wilson, who departed this life on the 11th of July. Her only child, thirteen months old, died a few weeks previously. Her death was deeply regretted by her missionary associates, and was a sad loss to the mission, but to herself it was a joyful event; her mind was kept in perfect peace during her illness, and while she desired to live in order to be useful to the heathen, she yet rejoiced in the hope of going to be forever with the Lord. The return of Mr. and Mrs. Mattoon, accompanied by Messrs. Mc Farland and McDonald and their wives, gave great encouragement to the brethren in the field, and new strength to all the departments of missionary labour. Mr. McGilvary was married in November to Miss Sophia R. Bradley, daughter of the Rev. D. B. Bradley, M. D., an esteemed missionary of another Board in Siam.

Regular preaching services were conducted at the station in Bangkok, as in former years. "The usual attendance," it is mentioned in the report of the mission, "has been from sixty to over one hundred; many have attended quite regularly for several years, and have received much Christian instruction." Missionary journeys were made into different parts of the country,—"two by Dr. and Mrs. House; one by Dr. House and Mr. Wilson; one by Messrs. Wilson and McGilvary; two by the latter alone, and one by him and a son of Dr. Bradley. These tours averaged about two or three weeks in length, and extended in all directions through the kingdom." This method of making known the gospel is attended with the great disadvantage of being fugitive in character; yet while the multitudes are so great and the labourers so few, it is obviously important to follow this plan. Thereby much Christian truth is imparted, which may leaven the native mind, excite a desire for better instruction, and, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, guide many souls to the Saviour of sinners.

The mission school contained 31 scholars at the end of the year. Its studies have continued without much change from what was formerly reported; and the brethren say, "The school has a number of interesting pupils, to whom we have looked with much interest as a foundation for the future church in Siam. Some of them are boys of more than usual capacity, and promise to be useful among their countrymen. We have been favoured in having a Christian teacher—Nai Chune—in the Siamese department, whose walk is still consistent, and whose influence, we trust, will be good in the school."

With their increased force, the missionaries were able to make enlarged plans of useful labour, which were about to be carried into effect at the latest advices. A new station would be formed at Petchaburi, on the coast of the Gulf of Siam, southwest of Bangkok, to be occupied in the first instance by Dr. and Mrs. House, who hope, however, to be joined by another mission family. "Mr. Mattoon will resume his former services in Bangkok, superintend the printing press, and employ the remainder of his time in translating. Mr. Wilson will take the place of Dr. House as superintendent of the school. Mr. Mc Gilvary will occupy an eligible situation in the city for preaching and the distribution of books. The new brethren will be engaged principally in the study of the language."

The report of the mission begins with special reference to the services of "the week of prayer," which were engaged in with much interest. Its concluding paragraphs plead for a still further increase of labourers: "We would be unjust to the perishing millions of Siam did we not remind the church that her wants have hardly begun to be met. While we are devoutly thankful for the addition to our number, we must ask, What are these among so many? Our new station gives a pressing call for more immediately. . . If allowed the privilege, we would directly address the students in our Theological seminaries, and young pastors at home, and say, Brethren, we have here an open door, an inviting field. We would be the importunate bearers to you of the Macedonian cry, Come over and help us!"

Missions in China.

CANTON MISSION.

Canton: on the Canton River, about seventy miles from its mouth; occupied by a mission station in 1845; missionary labours suspended by the war in November, 1856, and partly transferred to Macao, a Chinese Island under Portuguese authority, near the mouth of the Canton river; resumed at Canton, 1858; missionary labourers,—the Rev. Messrs. Andrew P. Happer, M. D., Charles F. Preston, and Ira M. Condit, and their wives; John G. Kerr, M. D., and his wife; one native Christian assistant.

NINGPO MISSION.

Ningpo: on the Ningpo river, about twelve miles from the sea; occupied as a mission station, in 1844; missionary labourers,—D. B. McCartee, M. D., licentiate preacher, Rev. Messrs. Henry, V. Rankin, David D. Green, Joshua A. Danforth, and William T. Morrison, and their wives; William Gamble, printer; native Christian assistants,—eight catechists, six teachers, and two colporteurs.

Hang-chow: the provincial capital, one hundred and thirty miles in the interior; mission station commenced in 1859; occupied a few months and then suspended.

Three Out-stations, in the Sanpoh district: occupied by native labourers, enumerated above.

In this Country.—Rev. William P. Martin and his wife.

SHANGHAI MISSION.

Shanghai: on the Woosung river, fourteen miles from the sea; occupied as a mission station in 1850; missionary labourers,—Rev. Messrs. M. Simpson Culbertson, Charles R. Mills, Samuel R. Gayley, and J. M. W. Farnham, and their wives.

The departure of the Rev. Messrs. Farnham, Morrison, and Condit, and their wives for China was mentioned in the last annual report. They arrived in their several fields of labour, respectively, in March, July, and August, and were gladly received by the brethren on the ground. The illness of the Rev. R. Lowrie was also referred to in the last report. His sickness was long and severe, and ended with his departure from this life on the 26th of April, supported by a good hope through grace. His companions in the mission in their report bear testimony to his worth as follows: "We desire to record our high appreciation of his talents, his attainments, and his earnest and intelligent devotion to the great work to which he had consecrated his life; and to express our deep sense of the loss sustained by the cause of missions in his death." Expressions of respect for his memory were also placed on record by the Missionary Conference, composed of brethren of different denominations, at Shanghai. Mrs. Lowrie and her children have returned to this country, receiving the deep sympathy of Christian friends. The Rev. W. Martin and his family arrived in this country on the 27th of June, the health of some members of his family, and arrangements for the education of his children, calling for this visit. The Rev. J. L. Nevius and his wife removed to Kanagawa in July, partly for Mrs. Nevius' health, and partly to weigh the question of joining the mission in Japan, agreeably to the action of the Committee. Mrs. Nevius' health has received much benefit; and if it should not be practicable to return to Hang-chow, or some equally healthy place in the interior of China, they will remain in Japan. Their knowledge of Chinese is a strong reason for their returning to their former field of labour. Mr. Nevius has been very usefully employed in the preparation of text-books for the native Christians at Ningpo. The name of Hang-chow is retained on the list of stations, and the question of re-occupying it was under the consideration of the Ningpo mission at the latest advices; but, owing to the troubled state of the country it remained without a missionary during the last year. It is a city of more than usual importance in a missionary point of view. The names of the Rev. Messrs. R. Q. Way and S. N. Martin, and their wives, formerly of the Ningpo mission, are not reported longer as missionaries; they are not able to return to China, but are usefully employed in this country in the work of the Ministry, enjoying the confidence and sympathy of all who know them. The connection of the Rev. E. B. Inslee and wife with the Ningpo Mission and the Committee was dissolved during the last year. It is not known to the Committee whether they will remain in China or return to this country, but in either case the Committee express kind wishes for their usefulness and welfare.

CANTON.

The last year was marked by the favour of Providence towards the mission at this city. The health of the mission families was preserved, their number was increased by the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Condit, their plans and facilities of labour were matured, and their work was prosecuted without interruption. The report of the mission mentions the enlargement of the hospital chapel and the hospital itself, by the liberality of the Medical Missionary Society in China, and the purchase of very eligible premises for a dwelling-house, school, and chapel; the latter was opened on the 26th of February. Another small chapel, in premises rented for one of the day-schools, was opened for public worship in March. Services in the chapels, conducted by Messrs. Happer and Preston, on the Sabbath and daily in the week, and also on several week-day evenings, afforded opportunities of more frequent public preaching than during any former year. Less preaching in the streets was undertaken, for the reason that the chapels afforded more promising fields of labour. When Dr. Kerr visited Fat Shan, a city not far distant from Canton, the opportunity was always improved of preaching the gospel in that crowded place. A chapel for a service for women was opened in March, in connection with the girl's day-school, with an attendance of from twenty to sixty. "Through these various ways," it is stated, "thousands have had the opportunity of hearing the precious truths of salvation."

Two day-schools for boys, with forty-four and twenty-six scholars, and a day-school for girls, with eighteen scholars, have given much encouragement to the mission. The scholars "spend a portion of each day in the study of the Sacred Scriptures, and other Christian books. The scriptures have been daily explained to them, and prayer offered in the school-room. They have always attended public worship on the Sabbath. Thus we have endeavoured to fulfil the blessed Master's command, 'Feed my lambs.'"

The medical missionary has continued and extended his useful labours. The hospital has received a large share of his attention, and has afforded medical aid to many thousands of the sick and afflicted. His report states that about sixteen thousand and ninety-five patients have been attended to during the year. To many of these the gospel has been made known; and all of them must have received some impression of the benevolent nature of the religion whose servant ministered to their relief. An interesting part of Dr. Kerr's work was the opening of a dispensary in the large city of Fat Shan, in February. This was suspended during the hot months, but was resumed and visited at regular times. He was well received by the people, and had opportunities of diffusing some knowledge of the way of life. A highly valued part of the doctor's duties was the professional service he was able to render to missionary families, of different denominations. The medical department of the mission is evidently one of much importance; indeed, Dr. Kerr expresses his opinion that another physician might be advantageously employed at Canton: and he adds, "If his heart was in the great object of all missionary labour, he might do as much direct work as a minister, and then the hospital here could go on, while one of us made trips into the country, or tried to live at such places as Fat Shan."

The brethren continue to urge the importance of increasing the missionary force in this part of China. They desire particularly to have a second station formed at Fat Shan. They say in their report, "the population that, humanly speaking, will depend on the Canton missions for the gospel, numbers more than 70,000,000. . . This region is a high, hilly, and therefore healthy part of the country, and foreign missionaries might be able to reside away from the sea-coast. . . . . The city of Canton itself is very imperfectly supplied. Then here is the great mart—one of the four great manufacturing marts of the empire—that of Fat Shan, with its 700,000 or 800,000 inhabitants, without a single missionary. There are four or five cities of 200,000 inhabitants, each within a day's journey of this city, entirely destitute; and thousands of towns and villages with 20,000 inhabitants, and under that number, without the gospel." These statements, and others, are presented in their report, which was published in the Record of March. They ought certainly to arrest the attention of the churches, and to call forth much more vigorous efforts than have yet been made to send the gospel to these multitudes of perishing people.

NINGPO.

The changes in the staff of labourers in this mission have been already mentioned. After adverting to these, the report of the mission, which will be found in the Foreign Missionary of March, begins the narrative of missionary work with the medical department. Dr. McCartee was for a time the only physician at Ningpo, which made it necessary for him to engage in practice to some extent among foreigners. He kept open, however, his hospital for the Chinese, and was able, at length, to give all his time to directly missionary work, for which his long residence in China has peculiarly qualified him. The hospital had an average daily attendance of thirty patients. Besides giving much relief to sick and suffering persons, it afforded opportunities of pointing their minds to the Saviour of sinners; one of the converts was an inmate of the hospital, but died soon after his baptism; two others applied for baptism; and still other examples of spiritual benefit occurred. It would be difficult to place too high an estimate on the value of such Christian labours as these among a heathen people.

The church at Ningpo is one that has been greatly blessed from on high. Since its organization, one hundred and fifty-one members have been received as communicants, and, after deducting removals by death, etc., one hundred and twelve native communicants remain in good and regular standing. During the last year five native church-members, including one elder, were removed by death, and thirty-six were received on profession of their faith. Two more elders and two deacons were chosen as office-bearers in this church. The members of the church have manifested, in a good degree, a missionary spirit, and not less than sixteen of them are employed as colporteurs, teachers, or catechists, in labours for the salvation of their countrymen, three of them being under the care of presbytery, as candidates for the holy ministry. Indeed, the number, character, labours, and usefulness of the native brethren form a marked and very encouraging feature of this mission; and an important part of the work of our missionary brethren consists in their giving special instructions to these native labourers, to fit them more fully for their work. In this respect much remains to be done. "Text-books are to be prepared," the brethren say in their report, "and Bible truth is to be rendered into Chinese in systematic form. . . . . That this kind of labour is needed, is apparent, from the increasing desire of the assistants for systematic instruction." The brethren also record "the fact, that in a great majority of cases of hopeful conversion, the native helpers have been the instruments, under God, in arresting their attention, and leading them to Christ."

The usual services were kept up in the city church and in chapels, both in Ningpo and at three out-stations in the Sanpoh district. Two of the latter stations are in cities of considerable size. Native assistants occupy these out-stations, which are visited by the brethren as often as their other engagements permit. These out-station services have been attended with precious encouragement; not less than twenty-eight of the communicants live in the districts thus occupied. The accessions of the last year were largely made from this region.

Besides missionary labours for the heathen, the missionaries felt called upon to adopt some means of doing good to the foreign seamen who visit the port of Ningpo, and for whose souls no man seemed to care. Often these sailors were our own countrymen. A floating chapel for seamen was provided in July, and placed under the supervision of the missionary community. Our brethren took their full part in this good work.

The schools of the mission continue to give good encouragement. There are now three day-schools for boys in the San-poh district, a day-school for girls at Ningpo, a boarding-school for boys, and another for girls, both at Ningpo. About thirty pupils were under instruction in the girls' boarding-school; and probably as many in the boarding-school for boys; but the number of scholars in the schools for boys has not been reported. Two of the boarding-school girls, and a teacher in the boys' boarding-school, have died during the year, all having hope in their death. In both these schools a good degree of interest was manifested by the pupils in the subject of religion, and several became members of the church on profession of their faith. These schools have both been of great service, as a means of leading precious souls to Christ, and of training useful labourers for his service.

The press has been conducted with vigour, and over 9,000,000 of pages were printed, as shown by the following returns:—

The number of copies issued from the depository was over 9,000,000, and about the same number of copies remained on hand at the end of the year. Attention is called by the missionaries in their report to the usefulness of publications in the Romanized Ningpo Colloquial dialect. In all the mission churches in that city there are now several hundred church-members; "many of them cannot read the character, but are able, with very little assistance, to acquire the Romanized Colloquial. These take great delight in reading the scriptures and other good books." An increasing demand is expected for this class of publications.

The importance of securing a greater variety of type has long been felt; but heretofore the expense of cutting matrices in the usual way has made it difficult to obtain the needed variety. The efficient superintendent of the press, however, has successfully carried into effect a new method of procuring matrices, which will greatly reduce their cost. The mission bears a cordial and high testimony to the skill and fidelity of Mr. Gamble, who has continued to have the charge of the press and all its operations.

After much consideration, the Committee concluded to remove the principal part of the printing-press to Shanghai; leaving at Ningpo, however, what was necessary for printing in the Romanized Colloquial. This measure was adopted, not on account of any dissatisfaction with the past history of the press at Ningpo, where indeed it has been well and faithfully managed, and of great use; but it was considered expedient solely with reference to the superior advantages of Shanghai as a commercial mart, affording an easier and much more extended communication with the interior of the empire, especially along the great river, the Yang-tsz. Temporary quarters at Shanghai were obtained, and the work of removal has been effected probably before this; a power-press has been sent out, an eligible site at Shanghai has been secured, and measures are in progress for erecting suitable buildings. The future usefulness of this press, it is believed, will be important in a high degree.

SHANGHAI.

The removal of Mr. Lowrie by death, the return of Mrs. Lowrie to this country, and the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Farnham, have been already mentioned. Of special events in its history, the other of chief interest was the interruption of missionary labour, for a short period, by the approach of an insurgent force in August, of which full accounts have been published in the Record and Foreign Missionary. Though some of the mission families were exposed to great danger for a time, yet they were mercifully protected; and, on the speedy withdrawal of the insurgents, they returned to their dwelling-houses, and found them uninjured.

In their report, which is published in the Record of February, the brethren say, "The preaching of the gospel has been regularly maintained in all three of our chapels." At first, services were conducted on five week-days, besides those of the Sabbath, but the failure of Mr. Lowrie's health rendered it necessary to reduce the number of services. The attendance was not generally large, but the attention of the hearers was encouraging, particularly in the small chapel at the south gate. The missionaries refer specially to the importance of their services in the eastern and most crowded suburb of the city, extending for nearly two miles along the river bank, as in all this suburb there is no other Protestant place of worship. Efforts were made by the missionary, whose removal was so much lamented, to collect funds among the merchants at Shangai for building a church in this neighbourhood, and a considerable amount was subscribed; though not yet accomplished, this good object will be kept in view by the mission. On the 5th of February, 1860, a church was organized, composed of members of the mission families and one native convert. Another native has appeared to be a sincere inquirer concerning the way of life, but has not yet been admitted to baptism.

The Scriptures and other Christian books have been put in circulation to some extent, and eventually much good will be done in this way. The disturbed state of the country prevented journeys into the interior for this purpose. A limited sale of books was effected in the city, but a suitable native assistant to be entrusted with a bookstore, and to answer the inquiries that would be made, has not yet been obtained. When the printing-press shall have been fully set at work at this city, a great enlargement in this department of labour may be expected.

Two day-schools for girls, one under the charge of Mrs. Lowrie while she was at Shanghai, and the other of Mrs. Gayley, have been open nearly all the year, with an average attendance of about twenty scholars in each. A school for boys, a night-school, and a school for boys in refugee families, and for some of the adult refugees, temporarily living at Shanghai, were in operation for some months. The situation of these refugees awakened much compassion. They had fled from their homes, near Nankin, before the insurgents, and reached Shanghai in the greatest destitution. Many of them were persons of education, who had formerly lived in comfort. The European and American residents at Shanghai came forward liberally for their relief, and our brethren as well as other missionaries, as almoners of this charity, were able to combine some degree of Christian instruction with needed relief to these poor people. The visit of the insurgent army in August caused them to seek another place of safety, but it is hoped that the seed sown among them will not be lost.

An important part of the work of this mission is the translating of the scriptures, to which Mr. Culbertson still gives the greater part of his time, in connection with Dr. Bridgeman. "The New Testament has been revised, and the Old Testament translated to the end of the book of Psalms, with the exception of the book of Job. The printing has been carried on to the second book of Kings." In connection with the Baptist mission, an edition of Luke in the Shanghai colloquial dialect was printed, which had been prepared by members of the Episcopal mission. A good commentary on the scriptures is spoken of as greatly needed and it is mentioned that "Mr. Lowrie was engaged, at the time of his death, on a commentary on the Gospel of Matthew, which will no doubt be found useful. His final revision of it was nearly completed, so that it may readily be prepared for the press."

The interest of the Christian public in China, as a field of missions, should be greatly increased by the restoration of peace between the Chinese government and Great Britain and France, on terms which it is hoped will release missionary labour from nearly all restriction. By the recent British treaty, the right of residence to foreigners is extended to seven additional cities, and three more are to be opened on the Yang-tsz river; while the French treaty contains a proviso, which gives to "the French propagators of religion" permission "to rent and purchase ground, and to erect and build in every province at pleasure." This privilege was obtained doubtless in the interest of the Romanist church; but under the American treaty it will inure to the advantage equally of the American "propagators of religion," who happily are all Protestants. Some time may elapse before these stipulations are fully carried into effect, but eventually they will probably open the whole of this great empire to the labours of Christian missionaries. This should be viewed in connection with the new commercial route to China, via San Francisco, which is already adopted to some extent, and which will before long make China a near neighbour of our own country. Then the largest heathen nation of our times will be brought nearer to our churches than to any other part of the Christian world; and already thousands of its poor people are living in one of our States, representing its spiritually destitute millions. Still other considerations exist to impart interest to this field of Christian missions, which need not here be enumerated; but the Committee cannot close their report of this part of the missionary work, without calling the attention of the church to the importance of sending out more men to China. If the Board could send out ten new missionaries a year for the next ten years, it would do a great and good work, one which by the blessing of God would confer unspeakable benefits upon this perishing people.

Mission in Japan.

KANAGAWA.—On the bay, a few miles below Yedo; occupied as a mission-station in 1859; missionary labourers, James C. Hepburn, M. D., and his wife, and the Rev. John L. Nevius and his wife.

The circumstances under which Mr. and Mrs. Nevius joined this mission are mentioned in the report of the mission at Ningpo. Dr. and Mrs. Hepburn have both enjoyed excellent health at Kanagawa, and have become in a good degree settled in their routine of duty. They still occupy the Budhist temple, which makes a comfortable residence; and they have not heard of any wish that they should leave it, though they might be required to do so at any time. They pay a moderate rent for it.

Dr. Hepburn has continued to give his chief attention to the study of the language, and feels thankful for his progress in it, though not yet able to use it freely. "It is a difficult language," he says, "much more so, in my estimation, than the Chinese. I have made no direct attempts at any missionary work among the people. I have had a number of patients amongst them, visiting some of them in their own houses. I have distributed a few copies of the New Testament in Chinese, and a few religious tracts in the same language. There is only a very small proportion of the people that can read books printed in the Chinese character; my teacher estimates it at about one in five hundred; but all, he says, can read books printed in the Hirakana, or true Japanese character. In this the Bible has never yet been printed, nor any part of it."

As to the general prospects of the mission, its friends must look for encouragement chiefly to the promises contained in the Word of God, though the remarkable events in the ordering of divine Providence that have made it practicable for missionaries to live in Japan must be regarded not only as calls for their services, but as tokens of their success. One of the main hinderances of their labours is the jealous policy of the government towards them in common with other foreigners. Dr. Hepburn says, "I do not know that the government has relaxed in any degree their rigorous surveillance of us. They watch us, however, no more than they do the merchants or the consuls. They undoubtedly know what we are, and our object, but they seem to have no especial dread of us. The interference of the government with our intercourse with the people is now the great obstacle in our way. This will, no doubt, be removed in due time."

After referring to the uncertainty of Mr. and Mrs. Nevius' remaining in Japan, and the time required for learning the language, as reasons for having another missionary sent out without delay, Dr. Hepburn then mentions the importance of having missionaries at other places: "Osaka will be opened, and, if expedient, we can commence another station there. It would be desirable to have a missionary at Hakodade, and one or two at Nagasaki. The whole empire will, one day, and that I think soon, be opened to the preaching of the gospel. Many and great changes will have to take place before this is possible. But we live in an era of rapid changes, when old things and old governments seem to be passing away, and new things arising in their place. It is not likely that this government will inaugurate such changes of itself, or give up its present system willingly and without a struggle; but willingly or unwillingly this change of policy must come, if we believe the glorious promises of the Bible are to be extended to this nation also."

To a matter about which some solicitude has been felt, Dr. Hepburn thus refers in concluding his report: "The alarm and fear about our personal safety, which prevailed here some months ago, [among foreigners of all classes,] seems to have passed away. Everything about us is quiet. The people are civil, and seem disposed to be friendly; from them I think there is nothing to be feared, if they are treated with civility. But foreigners are too apt to be overbearing towards these semi-barbarous nations, thus getting their ill-will and hatred. It is from the ruling classes that our chief opposition comes. They are jealous of the position and influence which have been their prerogative for centuries, and desire to exclude everything which can enrich and elevate those under them. This is no doubt the secret of their aversion to intercourse with foreigners, and of their efforts to control and monopolize the trade."

Besides the missionaries of the Board, there are in Japan two missionaries of the Reformed Dutch Church, two of the Episcopal, one of the Baptist, and one Methodist,—in all eight, of whom three are stationed at Nagasaki, and the rest at Kanagawa. There is at least one Romanist priest in the country, not openly as a missionary, but acting as an interpreter to one of the European consuls; perhaps there may be one or two others, under some disguise. The number of Protestant missionaries for a people supposed to number 30,000,000 is small, altogether too small even for beginning to advantage a system of evangelizing labours that will eventually, and may soon, call for hundreds of able and devoted men. The Committee would be glad to be able to send out soon another missionary of suitable qualifications; and they look forward in faith to the time, not far distant they trust, when a large and efficient company of brethren will represent our branch of the church in Japan.

Dr. Hepburn was called on not unfrequently for professional services among foreigners, but declined to make any charge for such services, though accepting for the Board any donations that might be offered. In this way upwards of $150 were received. He embraced an opportunity of visiting Hakodade, and furnished an interesting account of that city, which may be found in the Foreign Missionary of February. Several letters from his pen concerning the Japanese and their manner of life have been published in the Record.

The visit of the Japanese embassy to this country and their return to their own country are among the noteworthy events of the past year. The bearing of these events on the future relations of the two nations to each other, and on the reception to be given to our countrymen, missionaries included, by the Japanese, will be more apparent hereafter than at present. It is to be feared that the members of the embassy enjoyed few opportunities while here of seeing the real Christianity of our people. But the general influence of our religion on the prosperity of our country may have been impressed on their minds; and on their return to Japan in the Niagara, they had opportunities of seeing in some degree the life and worship of true followers of our blessed Lord.

Mission to the Chinese in California.

San Francisco.—Rev. A. W. Loomis and his wife.

The work of this mission, and the circumstances attending it, will be clearly understood from the report of Mr. Loomis, which is here presented without abridgement. It gives the Committee pleasure to express their entire satisfaction with his labours; and they would ask for this mission a continued remembrance in the prayers of the churches. In hardly any other missionary field is there greater need of faith in God, and perhaps it may please him to put honor on the faith of his people most signally in this field of labor. Certainly few other missions possess equal interest, for this mission is to the pure heathen of our own country not only, but to those who connect our people with the myriads of their native land.

The report of Mr. Loomis is as follows:

"With few exceptions we have enjoyed pretty good health during the whole year, so that during nearly all of the 365 days that have passed since our previous report, we have been engaged in our missionary work in one or the other of its departments. During all these 365 days we have been endeavoring to bear witness for Christ, in one way or another before many people, and they a people hitherto unacquainted with Christ.

"I am now known by nearly all the Chinamen in the city, and by many in the country, as the man whose especial and only employment is to teach and to exhort them to turn from their dumb idols to the worship of Jehovah; and, even if we could not speak a word of their language, the simple fact of our being here, and the well-known object of our mission among them would be a perpetual sermon, and would be sufficient to leave them without excuse at the day of reckoning. But we do more than that. A very large proportion, if not all the Chinamen in the city have at one time or another been kindly and earnestly invited to come to the chapel and hear the Word. Very many in their stores, shops, or lodging-houses have heard some outline of the doctrine we preach; and on the cover of every book and tract distributed is enstamped a notice of the days and the hours at which our chapel is open for religious worship, and a respectful invitation to every one to come and hear the glad tidings of salvation, and to join with us in prayer to the one true God that he may confer upon them everlasting blessedness.

"With perhaps three exceptions, when we were absent in the country having as part of our business to look after such of the Chinamen as we might find on our travels, the chapel has been open once every Sabbath day, and every Thursday evening during the year; and the average attendance may be set down at about thirty on Sabbath, and about fifteen on the week day evening. But even these are not all gathered without effort, which effort has to be repeated as often as the period for the service returns. There are a few who are always present, some who are generally present, and others whom we expect to see occasionally. Those who have attended regularly have heard Matthew, Mark, Luke, and the Acts read and explained, with various other portions of Scripture, together with some selected or prepared discourse on each occasion, and these on a variety of subjects touching the doctrines to be believed, and the duties to be performed. Many prayers have been offered, and we trust from sincere hearts, for a blessing on the Word, and for salvation to be sent to all the Gentiles: God has been worshipped by those who once offered sacrifices to idols, and we may hope that the adoration and praise offered on this coast in the Chinese language has not all been unacceptable. In this chapel during the year many hundreds have for the first time, and by personal observation, learned in what way they should worship God.

"Generally on the Sabbath morning we have sought the people at the caravansaries or in the suburbs of the town; sometimes alone, sometimes with a Chinese fellow-labourer. On these occasions our course has been directed by circumstances, and we have sat down with them, whether a goodly number or very few, either to discourse to them, to hear and answer questions, or to open a book and invite some one or more to look over it with us, as we read and discuss together.

"The two or three visits made into the country afforded great pleasure to ourselves, and we will hope were not without profit to the people. We had opportunity of learning how Chinamen are employed, and how they fare in some of the inland cities and in the mines; and we had the gratification of being recognized by them as a friend, and the happiness of extending further the news that for Chinamen as well as for others there is forgiveness of sins and an eternal home in heaven, on the simple condition of repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. Had we sufficient means at command, or if travelling was much less expensive, we should feel called upon to do much of this kind of work, visiting these strangers from a far country as they are found in our inland villages and mining camps, for, for a while at least, they would receive our books and listen to our discourse; but, at any rate, we would thus publish everywhere in the cities, and in the villages, in the vales, and on the mountains, the message designed for all people. But while we are kept from travelling as much as under other circumstances would be desirable, we endeavor to do the next best thing, which is, to meet as far as possible every newly-arrived Chinaman, and place in his hand a tract or a portion of the word of God, and to drop into his ear some words of instruction before he proceeds on his journey to the mines. In this way we have preached to many hundreds just arrived from China, and soon to leave again on the river steam-boats. In this part of our work a large room or hall of the caravansary or a small room of a boarding house may be seen full of Chinese strangers, standing, sitting or reclining, and the missionary with his assistant standing or sitting in the midst of them, and pouring into their ears scraps of Scripture history, parts of the law, and portions of the gospel, while also we offer mental petitions for the presence of him who once opened Lydia's heart so that she attended unto the things which were spoken.

"Often when visiting the shops and boarding houses we meet with merchants and others from different parts of the interior. Some of these we prevail upon to attend our chapel service; to some we give books to carry to the village or mining camp; and occasionally, with consent of the parties, we slip a small variety of tracts and portions of Scripture into a box of merchandise which is in process of packing for the country.

"We have now no school in connection with this mission; though the evening school, supported by the public school funds, is held in a room of the mission house. During some part of the year Mrs. Loomis has taught a few girls who have come to our house for this purpose at an appointed hour of the day. She has also, to some extent, visited the women at their houses. But, from the character and condition of most of the women who are brought to this country, our work lacks that feature which affords most ground for hope in all other missionary fields, viz.: that portion of the work which is concerned with boarding and day schools—which has to do with rearing the plants, and seeing youthful disciples grow up, and by and by enter into the work as teachers and assistants—that portion of the work which has to do with visiting in families, and in noticing the happy influence of believing children upon heathen parents, and in seeing converted parents begin to command their children and household after them.

"Perhaps there may be some who will ask, What have we to show as a return for the money expended on this field during the year? In answer, we may say, that he who sent us does not require that we be able to report a given number of conversions: all he makes us responsible for is, for being instant in season and out of season; for faithful preaching, whether men will hear or whether they will forbear. Some may ask, What fruit has been gathered from the three hundred and sixty-five days of sowing? We do not know yet, but we shall know when the final harvest of the earth has been reaped, and the redeemed are all gathered from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south. But even already we know of good that has been done. To many people the gospel has been preached for a witness at least, if not as a savour of life. God in all his adorable perfections—the three persons of the Godhead in their appropriate offices—have been set forth before the people, and thus a means has been afforded for God, through his own appointed instrumentality, to declare his own glory, and to reveal himself even to many hundreds of our race who otherwise would be left only to feel after God, with the strong probability that they would never find him. The few disciples residing in the city, and others who in their journey to and fro have turned aside to worship with us, have had opportunity of increasing in knowledge, and of being established in the faith. There are also two of whom we have hope that a change has been wrought in them; and we would receive them to the sealing ordinances, but at present they think themselves not prepared for such a step.

"One fact more should be borne in mind: the Chinese in this country are only sojourners; they come hither to remain for a limited period, and then to return to the home of their fathers. Thus we are immediately to lose two good friends, one of whom is a faithful brother in Christ, and one that has taken more interest in our work than any other Chinaman.

"From the manner in which I have spoken of our work, a stranger might suppose me able perhaps to speak the language fluently; but the fact is quite otherwise: I have my own trials on this score. Studying the language is still the heavy work; and when I speak, it has to be with stammering lips and another tongue. My Chinese teacher is employed also in the capacity of assistant, and he gives me great satisfaction; indeed, I should feel greatly crippled were we to lose him.

"Should I omit to mention that there are obstacles, many and great, lying across our path, I would fail to present a complete view of our work. While God in his providence is tearing up old landmarks, and is turning loose the nations that the people may run to and fro, and thereby knowledge be increased, Satan also stands on the watch to turn this new order of things to his own account; and where wicked men ought to stand aside, and allow all good people to apply themselves with all their might to teach these heathens the fear of the Lord, Satan stirs up vile characters to teach them new forms of vice, and seems also so to arrange that oppressive laws shall be enacted against them; he also finds many willing agents to torment and vex them, so that they may retain all their old prejudices against outside barbarians, and against their religion."

Missions in Papal Europe.

Stations.—In Belgium, France, Italy, etc.; remittances in aid of these missions, first sent in 1845; missionary labourers, not enumerated.

The missionary work among the Roman Catholic inhabitants of several European countries has been aided as in former years, though not quite to the same extent. This was owing to the limited income of the Board, and not to any less degree of Christian interest in the evangelization of these countries, nor to any unfavourable circumstances in the progress of the work itself. These, on the contrary, are generally encouraging in their character, while in Italy they are of very marked interest. The power of the pope as a civil ruler has been greatly circumscribed, and that of the enlightened government of Sardinia has been extended in still greater degree. Religious liberty is virtually acknowledged in the greater part of Italy; colporteurs are distributing the Sacred Scriptures, and evangelists are preaching the gospel in places which lately were inaccessible; the ancient church of Italy, the Waldensian, has removed its school of theology to Florence, and one of its ministers is a professor in the government college of Bologna; in a few cities, mostly in connection with the Waldensian synod, churches are open for public worship, and conversions to the faith as it is in Jesus have shown the presence of the Holy Spirit with the servants of Christ in their work. The masses of the Italian people, like the main part of the population in other Roman Catholic countries, are to a great extent unacquainted with the true nature of the Christian religion. Many persons have thrown off the yoke of the Roman church, regarding it only as a political bondage, and have not learned the liberty wherewith Christ makes his people free, but are left under the power of scepticism. Most of the people, however, are still Romanists in their profession and religious habits; and they will not be found more willing to embrace the doctrines of a pure and self-denying religion than the inhabitants of other countries. It is the power of divine grace only that can make them real Christians, but it must be regarded as a most encouraging sign of the times that the knowledge of the grace of God may now be so freely made known to many of them. Whether the door will remain open, or be again closed, is a question which men may not be able to answer, but the field is now white unto the harvest.

The state of things in France and Belgium is in many respects similar to that which exists in Italy. Everywhere the masses of the people are nominally Romanists, to the number of over sixty millions in these three countries, while the number of nominal Protestants in all three does not probably reach two millions. The number of gospel preaching ministers is but a few hundreds; and the number of really pious people, but a few thousands. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." Among these few labourers, however, are to be found some of the most distinguished men; and schools, seminaries, periodicals, books, and especially preaching the gospel, are the means employed by our Christian brethren in these countries to bring their countrymen to a saving knowledge of the Redeemer. Having but limited means at their command, they welcome the liberal aid of the more favoured churches of other lands. The Committee cannot but regret that they were not able to send larger donations to their help; what was remitted, and its apportionment, will be found stated in the Treasurer's report.

To these general remarks the Committee now add some particular notices of this work of European evangelization.

Holland.—Some assistance was given to Christian labourers in Holland, in connection with the Netherlands Evangelical Association, of which Dr. Capadose is the secretary, and which supports eight evangelists and one colporteur.

Belgium.—Two places of worship, a church and a chapel, with three ministers, stand for the gospel in Brussels, in the part of the city where French is the language chiefly in use, and a chapel and minister for the people who speak Flemish; schools are supported; the Chrétien Belge, a monthly religious magazine, is published in this city, which renders good service to the cause of evangelical religion, and about 100,000 copies of tracts in French and Flemish were put in circulation last year. At Antwerp, an evangelist preaches in Flemish; at Ghent there is a chapel, with services in Flemish by an evangelist; there are chapels and ministers or evangelists at Louvain, Wert-Saint-George's, Namur, Liege, Charleroi, and several other places, and schools at many of them. The whole number of labourers connected with the Belgian Missionary Church, the official title of the evangelical brethren in this country, is as follows: ministers, 15; evangelists, 5; teachers, 16; colporteurs, 10. These form the chief agency for the evangelization of four millions and a half of people. A new chapel at Antwerp was erected last year, chiefly at the expense of two Christian friends, one in Scotland, and the other in this country, each giving $2,500. To several of the churches new members were added on profession of their faith in Christ, most of whom were converts from the Roman church.

France.—The two Home Missionary Societies in this country continue to prosecute their work with a good degree of vigour. The Central Protestant Society reported in January seventy labourers, supported from the funds of the Society in whole or in part. Of these forty-four were ministers of the gospel, and the rest teachers and colporteurs—all being regarded as earnest, evangelical men. They were stationed at fifty posts, in thirty-five departments of France. Under their charge a hundred and eighteen places of worship were kept open, thirty-seven of them in important cities. The other society, the Evangelical Society of France, which is the organ of churches not connected with the state, supports a smaller number of ministers, but its work is growing. A considerable part of the agency employed by this Society is in the city of Paris, and its schools, in parts of that city occupied chiefly by the working classes, are the means of doing much good. Many parents, whose scholars attend these schools, have been led to renounce the Roman church, and some of them have become sincere followers of the Lord Jesus. Both of these Societies express deep regret on account of their not having adequate funds for the work entrusted to their hands. Like their brethren in other Roman Catholic countries in Europe, most of the French Protestants possess but very limited pecuniary means. Yet they have shown a most liberal spirit in their support of the gospel and its diffusion, as is strikingly evinced by a statement of the Rev. Dr. F. Monod, one of the leading ministers in Paris, that the annual contribution of each communicant in churches connected with the Free Synod is at the average rate of forty-four francs, or nearly nine dollars, for the support of religious ordinances among themselves, and independent of contributions to the central or missionary fund.

The various labours of our French brethren have been marked with tokens of the divine blessing. Numerous instances of hopeful conversion from Romanism to Christ have occurred, and the knowledge of the gospel is gradually becoming extended. Some examples may be found of persons occupying posts of commanding influence, in some cases as editors of leading newspapers, who are either in their sympathies or in their profession decidedly Protestant. It is believed, moreover, that the Romanist clergy as a body are losing influence in France, and that the distance between them and the government of the country is widening. The prospect of success in the work of evangelization was probably never more encouraging than at the present hour. Before leaving the work of these French Evangelical Societies, it may be stated that through one of them the Committee were enabled to give some aid in the erection of a church at Eaux-Bonnes; this will be a house of God, they trust, to the numerous invalid visiters, as well as to the people who live in that part of the Pyrenees.

Geneva.—Though this city belongs to Switzerland, yet for missionary purposes it may be regarded as partly a French and partly an Italian post. Its Evangelical Society supports a small staff of missionary labourers, mostly in France, numbering nearly eighty persons in all; of these fourteen are ministers and nine evangelists; the others are teachers and colporteurs. Their work has continued to meet with encouragement. Perhaps the most important means of promoting the cause of our blessed Lord, which the brethren at Geneva continue to support, is the Theological Seminary. With such professors as Drs. Merle d'Aubigné, Gaussen, and others, this school of theology could not but take a high rank. Its students are drawn from different countries; of the new students, three were from Belgium, one from the Vaudois valleys of Piedmont, one each from Spain, from Ireland, and from Geneva, and seven from France; the whole number under instruction was forty-eight. The graduates of this theological school are now to be found in many places in Europe, and in other parts of the world.

Italy.—The chief part of the work of Evangelization in this country is in the hands of the Synod of the Waldenses. There are three or four so-called "Italian Church" ministers, of excellent character, and unhappily a few radical Independents, rejecting all church government; the views of this class are too extreme to authorize the expectation of much benefit from their labours. The Waldensian Church itself is but a small body, compared with some of the churches of other lands; it has less than forty ministers. But it is the oldest evangelical church in Europe, dating its existence many centuries before the Reformation, and its pure doctrine, Presbyterian government, and well settled order, give it great power for good to the people of Italy, the greater because its members are themselves Italians. They are not of the plains, but of the mountains, in whose valleys they so long held forth their testimony for Christ, never acknowledging the authority of the bishop of Rome. At the call of Providence, they have now sent down into the plains of their country some of their ablest and best men. At Turin, Genoa, Milan, Leghorn, Pisa, Florence, Bologna, Naples, and a few other places, there are Waldensian ministers or colporteurs. The Theological Seminary was transferred during the last year from La Tour to Florence, to be nearer the centre of the work, and had nine or ten students under the instruction of two professors,—one of whom is Dr. Revel, with whom many of our Christian people had the pleasure of becoming acquainted a few years ago on his visit to our churches. Since the middle of October last, one of the Waldensian ministers has been stationed in Naples, where he conducts services on Sabbath and Thursday, and meets with any who desire instruction; he also superintends the distribution of religious books in that city by colporteurs. A respected Scotch minister, who is settled at Florence, speaks in warm terms of the service which can now be rendered to religion by means of these publications: "Books for the times are all consulted eagerly. 'The Impossibility of Peter's Voyage to Rome,' 'The Primacy of the Pope,' 'The Life of St. Peter,' 'Good-bye to the Pope,' 'The Protestant's Catechism,' are very popular. Of these, thousands of copies are being now printed and scattered by us over the land." Especially may the greatest benefit be expected from the circulation of the Sacred Scriptures; and it forms indeed a marked event in the history of modern Italy, that even in Naples, "during the seven days immediately following the opening of the cases containing the Scriptures, 1,100 copies were sold."

It cannot be doubted that the corrupt church of Rome has lately met with great and heavy reverses. The loss of political power would be no calamity but rather a blessing to any Protestant church, but to the papal system it is a very serious if not a fatal loss. It will be followed by other losses, until the end of this tyranny over the bodies and souls of men shall come; and that end is not far distant. These missionary labours of our brethren in Europe are hastening its approach. It is the duty and the privilege of the Church for whom the Committee acts, to strengthen the hands of these brethren, and to help them with earnest prayers.

Mission to the Jews.

New York.—Rev. John Neander.

The labours of the missionary have been continued as in former years. As pastor of a German church in Williamsburgh, which has been gathered by the divine blessing on his ministry, he has met with much encouragement. Large congregations attend the services of the sanctuary, and fifty communicants were received last year on examination. In his work among the Jews, Mr. Neander has pursued the same general method as heretofore, visiting them at their houses or places of business, and endeavouring to direct their attention to Jesus. His report mentions that visits were thus made to from five to twenty-five families a week, the number varying with the length of time spent in conversation with them; sometimes from one to two hours is spent in a family. Visits were also made to the city prison and to the Broadway hospital; and many copies of religious tracts were placed in the hands of persons likely to read them with interest. Interesting notices are given of interviews held in this way with both Jews and Jewesses. Some of them have called at the missionary's house for further conversation, and a few have attended his church occasionally; but in general, the Jews will not come to hear the preaching of the gospel. It must be carried to them, for the most part, in nearly the same way as to the heathen. Hence the colporteur kind of work in which Mr. Neander is engaged is indispensable. It is work attended with difficulty and discouragement, and yet it gives the knowledge of the Saviour of sinners to many persons who otherwise would never learn the way of salvation.

Mr. Neander speaks of the Jewish body in New York as "large in numbers, but divided in their religious sentiments and mode of worship. Efforts are made by the so-called Reformed party to displace the Talmud, and to substitute for it a naked moral system, drawn from Moses and the Prophets, the chief use of which would be to promote the comfort of a material life here on earth. The Orthodox party still cling to a mere skeleton, a form of religion, and they hate the reformers with fierce hatred. Several of these Jews have said to me, 'We esteem you, though you are a Meshumad, much more than we do those wretched Jews who are neither Jews nor Christians.' There is still another class who have been disgusted with Rabbinical Judaism, and who consider the negation of a divine revelation as a poor basis on which to build a religious system. With several families of this class I am intimately acquainted; they receive me cordially as a friend, and I can converse with them freely on the truths of Christianity." Some instances are mentioned of earnest and continued attention to the subject of personal religion, but the missionary was not permitted to receive any of this people as members of the Christian church. There is reason to believe, nevertheless, that his labours have not been in vain.

Besides the work for the Jews thus far reported, the Committee gave their sanction to an effort of a different kind, by which it was hoped the attention of many might be arrested, and a knowledge of the gospel savingly embraced by them. This was a course of lectures on important subjects, of special interest to the Jewish mind, by a former missionary of the Board. It was regarded as an experimental measure, involving but a temporary and moderate expense, and not including the idea of any formal relation to the Committee on the part of the lecturer. These lectures were carefully prepared, and were able discourses. They were delivered in several of the principal cities, and in some places attracted much attention, being attended by large congregations. Some of the hearers were Israelites, and in some instances a considerable degree of interest was expressed by individuals among them in the topics thus brought under their consideration.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The foregoing Report, while it brings to view many encouraging facts to cheer the hearts of God's people, contains some things also of an opposite character that deserve their serious and prayerful consideration. Some of these facts of both classes need to be singled out for special notice. Of those of an unfavourable character, may be mentioned the one, that no less than six missionary labourers have been removed by death during the year, whilst a number of others, whose continued services seemed indispensable to the prosperity of the missions with which they were connected, have been compelled by failure of health to withdraw from their work for the purpose of recruiting. Of those who have been taken away by death, two were connected with the missions among the Indians, one in Northern India, one in China, one in Siam, and one in South America. All of these, except one, fell at their posts of labour, and in every case in the full and assured hope of a glorious immortality. Whilst these visitations have been keenly felt in all the families and missions to which these Christian brethren belonged, the providence was especially mysterious in the death of Rev. Messrs. Lowrie and Sharpe, the former in China, and the latter in South America. Both of these brethren were in the full vigour of youthful manhood; both had mastered the languages in which they were to preach; and before each a career of great and extensive usefulness had fully opened up itself. In relation to Mr. Lowrie it should be mentioned with gratitude, that he was spared to labour very effectively several years after he had acquired the language, and the fruits of these labours will no doubt show themselves in due time.

So far as the missionary work in foreign lands is concerned, its general aspect is decidedly encouraging. In all the fields occupied by the missionaries of the Board, with a single exception perhaps, the work, in all its varied departments of education, translation, circulation of the printed word, missionary itinerations and stated preaching of the gospel, has been carried on with efficiency, and with the most encouraging results, both present and prospective. The schools and seminaries have not only been conducted with system and energy, but are sending forth many educated native youths to become useful citizens in the ordinary avocations of life, or to enter upon the active duties of missionary work as colporteurs, catechists, teachers, and preachers. Through the agency of this class of persons a number of new positions have been taken up in China, India, and Africa, and the area of missionary labour has consequently been materially enlarged. In all the fields occupied by the missionaries of the Board, the good seed has been scattered broadcast, and almost every day brings new proof that it often falls into fruitful soil. A number of the mission churches have been favoured with the special influences of the Holy Ghost, as may be inferred from the number of persons that have been received to their communion during the year. One of these has had an accession to its membership, on a profession of faith, of eleven persons, another fifteen, a third eighteen, a fourth twenty-three, a fifth twenty-eight, a sixth thirty, a seventh thirty-seven, and an eighth thirty-eight. Surely such tokens of the divine favour as these ought to fill the hearts of God's people with gratitude, and stimulate them to renewed efforts to sustain and extend this good work.

No little anxiety is felt in relation to what should be done in the way of strengthening and enlarging the missionary work in the present disturbed state of our country. Several of the missions have been weakened by the deaths and withdrawals that have taken place, and a number of new and inviting positions in different parts of the heathen world have offered themselves for occupancy. At the same time, a larger number of young men than usual have offered their services; but in the present state of things the Committee will scarcely feel authorized to send them out unless some reliable guarantee of their future support can be had. And here a most solemn responsibility devolves upon the churches. These young men, in response to a call from the church and the great Head of the church, have said, "Here are we, send us!" They have the confidence of the various Presbyteries to which they belong; they are recommended by the Seminaries where they have prosecuted their studies; they are regarded by the Executive Committee as having all the necessary qualifications for the undertaking, but are liable to be kept back simply by the want of means to send them. Shall this be so? What then shall be said to these young brethren who have offered their services, and are willing to go and labour in the darkest and most remote portions of the earth? What shall be said to the missionaries on the ground, who have long borne the heat and burthen of the day, and who have been so earnestly asking for help, if these brethren are kept back? What shall be said to the scores and hundreds of heathen, who, in the providence of God, are waiting for the glad tidings that would be carried to them by these brethren? What must be the effect of a failure here upon the church herself? What reason is there to suppose that other young men will offer their services in future, or even ponder the claims of the great cause, if it is once understood that the church can not, or will not, furnish the necessary means of sending them out? These are questions that ought to be seriously pondered by all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and pray for the coming of his kingdom.

Action of the General Assembly.

On Friday, the 17th of May, the Report of the Board was presented to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and was referred to the Standing Committee on Foreign Missions, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. R. W. Dickinson, D. D., A. G. Hall, D. D., C. Forbes, D. G. Bullions, H. W. Biggs, J. L. Mackey, W. A. P. Martin, and Messrs. A. McLure and E. W. Scudder.

On Thursday, May 23d, this Committee reported the following resolutions, which were considered and adopted, as follows, viz:

The Committee appointed on the Twenty-fourth Annual Report of the Board of Foreign Missions, having examined with all due care the details of said Report, together with a Special Report of the Executive Committee, dated May 3, 1861, beg leave to submit to this Assembly the following resolutions, to wit:

1. Resolved, That the manner in which the Twenty-fourth Report of the Board has been prepared by the Executive Committee,—embodying, as it does, an outline of the field which the Church, in the name of her adorable Head, is called to enter, with a clear and succinct account of each separate mission, without exaggerating the importance or underrating the difficulties of either; presenting a vivid view of the several missionaries in their respective fields and amid the varying scenes of missionary life; disclosing with candor the exact condition and prospects of the great work in which the Church has been so long engaged, and appealing, with all the earnestness of pressing want, to the sympathy and aid of the Church, so that her every member, by consulting its pages, may ascertain for himself his duty in the premises,—entitles them to this Assembly's warm appreciation of the value of their services and faithful devotement to the cause of Foreign Missions.

2. Resolved, That in recording the fact that no less than six missionary labourers have, during the past year, been removed by death,—two among the Indians, one in Northern India, one in Siam, one in China, and one in South America,—this Assembly would bear testimony to the fidelity with which they prosecuted their work to the last, and cherish the memory of their self-denying love for the cause of Christ; and while humbly bowing to God's most holy will in these visitations of His providence—so severely felt in the families and missions to which those now sainted ones belonged—would devoutly recognise His claims on the gratitude of the Church, in having raised up a larger number than usual who have already offered themselves to the Board to go wherever they may be sent.

3. Resolved, That notwithstanding the losses which the cause has sustained by the decease of Lowrie and Sharpe, both in the glowing morning of their manhood, and eminently qualified by their talents and attainments for great usefulness in the respective fields which they had so resolutely entered; notwithstanding the number of missionary laborers in India is less than it was in 1857; and that a number, whose services seemed indispensable to the missions with which they were connected, have been constrained by the loss of health to suspend their labours; yet there is abundant cause for thanksgiving in view of the fact that in all the fields occupied by the Board, the work in its varied departments has been carried on with encouraging results; in particular, that the schools and seminaries are not only well conducted, but sending forth many educated youths fitted for various spheres of duty and usefulness; that through the agency of these youths the area of missionary labour in China, India, and Africa has been materially enlarged; that so many doors are now open for missionary enterprise; and that in response to the cry for more laborers, God has given the grace to so many of our own youth to say, "Here are we: send us."

4. Resolved, That in view of the diminished receipts of the past year, and the painful apprehension of the Board, that in consequence of the state of the times, the Treasury may be still more seriously embarrassed, —though it is always wise to economize, and may sometimes, as in other relations of life, be necessary to retrench,—yet this Assembly, not unmindful of its obligations to the great Head of the Church whose favor towards this work has so often been signally displayed; not forgetful of the interest which is felt by not a few of our communion, prompting, them to generous acts; and retaining its own deep conviction of the importance of this work to the cause of piety at home as well as abroad, may not assume the responsibility of advising the Board to retrench, by either withholding reinforcements, or lessening the number of auxiliary agencies, much less by recalling any missionary, until the churches shall have full and fair opportunity of duly considering both this annual and special Report, and of making such sacrifices as their regard for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom, and their faith in God's providence to his Church, may prompt them to make in view of the expenses of the case.

5. Resolved, That should God, in his all-wise counsels, be pleased to try the faith of his people in an extraordinary way; and that amid the dissentions and perils of the times, the Board should not be able to command the means now so urgently needed, then in that event it is recommended by this Assembly, that they who are now preparing themselves for the foreign field, continue their connection with the Board in all cases when it is practicable, at least for the present year.

6. Resolved, That to relieve the mind of the Board, this Assembly recommends to every pastor to take up this cause as his own—he being not his own but Christ's—and present it to his people at his earliest convenience,—that this cause of vital interest to the Church and the world may in all the solemnity and urgency of its claims be brought home to all the members of our wide-spread communion; and that in furtherance of this end it is earnestly recommended to every church session, and to the ruling elders of every vacant church to appoint one or more persons who may be willing to undertake this labour of love, to visit every member of the congregation, that each in turn may contribute or subscribe to this object, (all subscriptions payable within the year); and that the amounts so raised or pledged be immediately forwarded to the Treasurer of the Board at New York.

The Committee further report, that having in compliance with the resolution of the last Assembly, examined the Minutes of the Executive Committee and the Board, they find them to be in the most perfect order, and believe them to be in all respects accurate; and recommend that they be approved from the 7th of May, 1860, to May 6th, 1861.

While these resolutions were under consideration in the General Assembly, remarks were made by many members of that body. And in the evening of the same day a public meeting was held in the Seventh Presbyterian Church, in behalf of Foreign Missions, which was largely attended by members of the General Assembly and others.

MISCELLANY.

Save for Christ.

THERE is saving enough for ourselves, and for our lusts. So odious has this become, that the very name of frugality has lost its ancient charm. And indeed the saving of money for selfish ends, and the hoarding of it, for any ends, are hateful to God and to godly men. But there is a saving which is Christian. All wastefulness is sin. Our Saviour gave an indirect but intelligible lesson on this subject in connection with the miracle of the loaves and fishes. It is the servant's duty to be saving of his master's goods. It is the steward's duty to be saving of what is entrusted to him. It is the disciple's duty to be saving of his Lord's money. All we have is our Lord's. We have nothing that we have not received. Nay, we are not our own, but are bought with a price.

Some Christians, unmindful of this, give lavishly, and spend lavishly. Mercator is a wealthy citizen; his hand is open to every call; he heads great subscriptions, and takes the lead in beneficent enterprises; he gives thousands a year to Christ: but he might give many times more, if he did not likewise give tens of thousands to the world, in equipage, entertainments, and display. Benigna, is an industrious Christian woman; she lays by her in store something on the first day of every week, for good objects, as God hath prospered her, according to the apostolic order given to the churches of Galatia. 1 Cor. xvi. 1. But Benigna is a poor economist, and keeps no account-current. God prospers those most who are most faithful in their stewardship, and the weekly losses, from bad management in Benigna's household, would sustain two heathen children in Africa.

There are persons who have the fame of being very open-handed, who nevertheless give little in charity; the money they discharge, is all for their own pleasures. There are other persons who are called close and managing, whose yearly gifts to the Lord's treasury are munificent; they save in order to be charitable.

While good Philip Henry lived at Worthenburg, his son tells us, he constantly laid by the tenth of his income for the poor, which he carefully and faithfully disposed of, in the liberal things which he devised, especially the teaching of poor children; and "he would recommend it as a good rule to lay by for charity, (in some proportion, according as the circumstances are,) and then it will be the easier to lay out in charity. We should be more apt to seek for opportunities of doing good when we have money lying by us, of which we have said, 'This is not our own, but the poor's.' He would say, 'He is no fool who parts with that which he cannot lose.'"

One more anecdote, I trust, will be admitted. Every one has heard of that holy man, Augustus Hermann Franke, founder of the orphan-house at Halle. In 1705 he made a tour of collection through Holland, with his excellent co-worker the bookseller Elers. They were invited to the house of a very rich citizen of Amsterdam. To their surprise, the room in which they awaited the master of the house was without any light. "Here," said one to the other, "we shall get nothing; they carry economy even to the matter of a candle." This apprehension was not lessened when the wealthy Hollander entered, and talked with them a whole hour in the dark; saying that he was glad to save the expense of an unnecessary light, for that his business was to talk with them, and not to see them. When the visitors were about to go, he called for a light, dismissed them with great kindness, and gave them two costly pieces of plate for the orphan-house. Franke, in thanking him, was candid enough to express his surprise, saying that amidst so great frugality, he had scarcely expected so rich a gift to a foreign institution. "Mynheer Franke," said the Hollander, "he who is not frugal in little things, cannot be liberal in great things."* The instance is an extreme one, but the lesson is worth preservation. —Dr. J. W. Alexander.

The Two Mites.

WHAT may have been the meditation of the poor widow, as she entered the temple with her two mites? There were many thronging to make their offerings; (see Mark xii. 41, in the original.) At the time of the great feasts, thousands of strangers from all parts of the land came to Jerusalem, and their gifts were, no doubt, often large and ostentatious. 'Many that were rich, cast in much.' As the poor woman approached the Court of the Women, in which were the treasure-chests, on ascending the stairs from the Court of the Gentiles, she must needs behold many splendid fruits of liberality. There was the 'beautiful gate,' so called, as Josephus tells us, because the folding doors, lintel and posts, were all overlaid with Corinthian brass, a metal as valuable among the ancients as gold. This gate must have been thirty-five feet high, and fifteen wide. How very small must the two mites have felt in those attenuated fingers, as the good woman trod under that portal, upon that mosaic floor! For the area of the court was more than an acre, and was paved with marble. At the sides of the beautiful gate, were six of the treasury-chests; there were five more on the north and south sides, and two for the half-shekel, which were moveable. Into these were cast contributions for the sacrifices, and other temple-expenses.

The two mites, or lepta, of the widow were equal in value to a little more than the sixth part of a cent. Methinks I hear the poor widow saying, while she looks first at the crowd of givers and the sumptuous gifts, and then at her half-farthings—'Surely it is folly to think of giving these! It is but a drop to the ocean. There is enough without me. These rich men can support the cause of God. Besides, it is all the living that I have. Yet it is also all I have wherewith to show my love to the God of Israel. He reads the heart, and even if he despise me and my offering, I will cast them both, worthless as they are, at his feet."

Blessed be God, he doth not despise thee! Poor widow, there sits one over against the treasury, whom thou knowest not, but who knows thy thoughts. And he is even now following with his benignant eye, thy trembling hand, and saying, 'Of a truth, this poor widow has cast in more than they all!'

It was probably in this very part of the temple that our Lord meant to lay the scene of his parable of the publican and the pharisee, and where the latter boasted, "I give tithes of all I possess." But the silent, humble, farthing gift of the widow, is the example for the poor. Let us imitate it for our encouragement, seeing that "it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." —Dr. J. W. Alexander

The Want of Prayer.

ONE thing is greatly needed in the present condition of the efforts made by the Church for the spread of the gospel—the spirit of prayer believing, importunate, continued prayer. Whether we look at those efforts as undertaken here in the midst of the churches, or at their progress as developed among the heathen, we are alike impressed with the necessity of directing the attention of the people of God to the throne of grace.

The gospel is to be made known in other lands as in our own, by the use of means. All Christians agree in this matter. But when we consider what those means are, and reflect on the self-denial, the effort, the constant progress which the right use of them involves, and then consider the weakness and unsteady character of the piety of most Christians, we cannot but be strongly impressed with the necessity of looking to the unfailing source of all gracious influences, to revive and strengthen the faith of those who are engaged in this great work. Our church has made a fair beginning in her Lord's service in foreign lands; but whether her efforts are to be enlarged to the full measure of her ability, depends on the measure of divine grace which shall be granted to her members.

The outpouring of the influence of the Spirit of God on the missionaries and on the heathen, is acknowledged by all to be indispensable to the success of missionary labours. How perfectly in vain as to the salvation of a single heathen are the best efforts of missionaries, if unattended with divine influence, let every missionary journal and letter bear witness. But the time shall come when a nation shall be born in a day, when numerous conversions shall be expected under every sermon, as on the day of Pentecost.

Prayer is the chief means which God is pleased to own, in granting the influence of the Holy Spirit. It was after continued prayer that the power of the Spirit was displayed under the preaching of the apostle Peter. Everywhere in the history of the missionary labours of the apostles, we find them earnestly requesting the help of their fellow-disciples in prayer. And surely this means is not less indispensable to the success of missionary efforts of the present day.

The Missionary's Sacrifice.

IT was nearly dark when brother and sister Comstock, [American Baptist missionaries in Arracan,] were informed that we must be on board ship that night. It was a trying moment. Mrs. Comstock, taking her two children by the hand, walked with us a few yards. Here, gazing upon their up-turned faces for a little time, she impressed on their cheeks a mother's last kiss, and turned around, uttering in broken accents, "This I do for Christ! This I do for the heathen!"

Brother Comstock came on board ship with us, and remained till about nine o'clock this evening. But he must leave. Again and again he folded his Lucy and Oliver in his arms, gave them a father's last blessing, bathing their faces with his tears. His whole frame trembled with emotion. He went down the side of the ship, and as the little boat was gliding off in the dark, he looked up, and I heard—they were the last words I ever heard from that lamented missionary—"Brother Kincaid remember, six men for Arracan!"

In a few months his wife and his two youngest children lay side by side in a grave overshadowed by an aged tamarind tree. In less than one year more he followed his dear wife, and so they all sleep on the shores of Arracan.—Rev. E. Kincaid: in Memoir of Mrs. Comstock, p. 190.

Translation of a Hymn.

WRITTEN BY A NATIVE PREACHER NAMED KRISHNU.

HE who yielded once his breath,
Sinful man to save from death,
O my soul forget not Him!
Forget not Him.

Troubled soul! forget no more
God's best gift, thy richest store,—
Christ the Lord, whose holy name
Now saves from shame.

Cease thy fruitless toil and care,
Christ will all thy burden bear;
Grace and love shall soothe the breast
That sighs for rest.

He is truth and mercy mild—
He in death with pity smiled—
Shed his crimson blood abroad,
Leads man to God.

Faithful Friend! on thee I call,
By day, by night, my all in all;
Thy name, sweet Jesus, brings relief,
And stays my grief.

A Pastor's Sense of Responsibility.

SAID an eminent minister at a late meeting,—

"I believe it depends on me, whether or not my congregation shall do as well as the last year. I am persuaded that if I am faithful to Christ—if the influences of prayer and holy living, and faithful presentation of truth, are brought to bear, the people will not be backward. If I can only fill my own mind with the magnitude and glory of this great cause, and keep it filled—if in all my intercourse I make it manifest that my heart beats with love to Christ and to a dying world. I know that not only the previous measure of liberality will be attained, but a vastly greater one. I say this with fear and trembling. How great is my responsibility! How inexcusable shall it be, if, through my unfaithfulness, my people shall be kept back from doing what they might and ought to do! I came here because I was weighed down with my responsibility. I hoped it would prove a means of grace to my own heart—that I might obtain here that strong and holy impulse that needs nothing else to urge me to the full extent of my ability in my Master's service. So it has proved."

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

MISSION ROOMS,

No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. Tho's L. Janeway, D. D.
Treasurer—SAMUEL D. POWEL.

LETTERS relating to Missionary Appointments and other operations of the Board, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 910 Arch street, Philadelphia.

CONTRIBUTIONS should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:

J. D. WILLIAMS, Pittsburgh, Pa.
ANDREW DAVIDSON, Louisville, Ky.
WILLIAM RANKIN, JR., Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

SOUTH-WESTERN ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

Rev. R. A. DELANCEY, Secretary.
S. B. NEWMAN, Treasurer.
Office, No. 94 Camp street, New Orleans.

The undersigned, who, at any time, would approach the work to which he has been called with diffidence, now finds himself embarrassed by the financial condition of the Board. The late expansions, however desirable in themselves, as indicating the advance of our church, have not been sustained by the increased collections. The large balance reported March, 1859, is absorbed, and the treasury largely in debt. Money has been borrowed of the banks to meet accruing liabilities to the missionaries, to prevent suffering on the part of these faithful servants of the Lord. To meet these notes, shortly to mature, we have nothing. We owe, for services reported, upwards of nine thousand dollars—a total indebtedness of twenty-five thousand dollars. The alternative is, to borrow of the banks, if we can, still farther, or deny our missionaries their faithfully earned salaries. Will not the church justify the former? To overtake these loans we must rely on collections yet to be received.

Nor is this the most painful view of the case. The absorption of the balance, the decrease in receipts in the closing months of the last financial year, and the derangement of business, so crippled the ability of the Board that it was resolved, in December 1860, to direct the committees to reduce the future appropriations to the missionaries, and twenty-five per cent. was adopted as the present limit of the reduction. It was with sad reluctance this step was taken—only the sternest necessity could justify it. Alas! that we can give these devoted men, who bear the toil and hardship of the service, only our sympathy and prayers.

An impatient church seemed to require an advance. It was difficult to resist a call so pleasant. Events, in the providence of God have not borne us out. The fury of the storm is upon us. The facts are mentioned with pain, but the church is entitled to the knowledge thereof. The office has no concealments, but states the simple truth, in the hope that God's people will come to our aid. We may ask the sympathy of the churches, and the patience of our brethren in the missionary field. Rigorous economy shall rule in all expenses here, and every effort be made which, under God, may promise to increase our receipts.

Is it too much to hope that in these days of reduction and retrenchment the contributions to this cause be not reduced? Is it too much to hope that increased means may be placed in the hands of the Board, to escape from all debt, and to grant more liberal appropriations to the missionaries? The men who carry the gospel over the broad fields of the west, and to the empire which is rising, in such marvellous proportions, on the Pacific, need our sympathy, and all our aid. Many of whom the world is not worthy, bear, with uncomplaining patience, the toils by which the future destiny of our land is to be moulded. Painful as is the commercial crisis, paralyzed as business and the material interests of the country are, enough of ability remains with the people of our church to relieve the Board of all this pressure, and to meet the wishes of the church for ardent and generous effort. It was during the long wars of England, with France republican and France imperial, that the benevolent measures were commenced in England which have blessed and honoured her so much, and poured such untold mercies over a fallen world. Then were opened those springs of love and mercy which flow still, and will flow till earth shall no longer wait for the promised redemption. We dare not distrust God, for we have a kingdom which cannot be moved. We cannot afford, much less now in these days of peril and disaster, to contract the missions of the church. Too much is at stake in the precious interests of our land. The Board is but the almoner of the church; its task the pleasant one of dispensing, with ready cheerfulness, all that is given, and most happy will we be to depart, as soon as ordinary prudence will permit, from the retrenchment to which a painful necessity has compelled us.

While we write these humble lines, letters come to the office from missionaries, very touching in the way they speak of their hampered condition, and yet modest in the way they press their claims for relief. The former promptitude with which our treasury paid their salaries renders present delay more painful in the contrast. The response we write, and the melancholy negative, are among the most unpleasant duties which oppress us. Must it continue? Only the churches of God can prevent it.

To retrench now, to any greater extent, will undo much of the work already done, will endanger much already commenced. It surrenders recovered fields to thorns and briers. It withdraws the army of occupation, and causes it to fall back on its former lines. There is no estimate of the evil to accrue from hesitancy now, and even what appear slight reductions may create loss which years of after labour may hardly overtake. It is upon our distant and frontier missionaries that the blow falls the heaviest—men who hardly ever see money, except as it reaches them from our office. Their salaries, among a people themselves struggling, are made up by contributions of produce. It is the necessity of a newly-settled country. It renews the experience of the men who carried the gospel to the frontier, which has been gradually removing from the seaboard. Ah! could those who live amid the comforts and appliances of our established settlements know what we have seen and known, they would hear a voice no utterance of ours could give, and relief would be yielded in no stinted measure. It is our comfort to know, as we enter on this office, that domestic missions have a deep and permanent hold in the heart of our church. We seek no undue prominence above the other Boards, yet the influence is so commanding on the future of our land, and its work so connected with all that is precious to us as Christians and as patriots, that we can hardly speak above measure. We commit it to God and his church. We ask the prayers of God's people, not so much on the humble instrument whom the church has called to this work, but on the mighty cause committed for the time to his guidance and care.

THOMAS L. JANEWAY,
Corresponding Secretary.

July 1, 1861.

CONTRAST.

The parsimony of the church, in contributing to the great cause of the Redeemer, is in sad contrast with the readiness with which the world pours forth her treasure for enjoyments more or less sinful. The statistics are absolutely frightful, and would be incredible, were not the evidence reliable. A single gambling house in London cost $50,000, and its receipts were as enormous. The money lost in London alone, by various modes of gambling, annually amounts to thirty-five millions. At Crockford's, a noted resort for gamblers, five millions were lost and won in one night. An English nobleman gives fifteen hundred dollars for a box at the opera. An Italian singer receives an annual salary of seventy thousand dollars. This would sustain forty-six married missionaries among the heathen. In one year London wasted on one of its twenty-two theatres, sufficient to supply one hundred evangelists to the world. Great Britain expends annually on tobacco and ardent spirits, one hundred and twenty-five millions—enough to sustain sixty thousand mission families for a ruined world. In war, what enormous sums are expended.—Four of the prime powers of Europe maintain two millions in arms, at an annual expenditure of millions. There is no end to what the world expends to gratify the evil passions of our nature—while to spread the gospel and shed over earth the blessings of life, how scanty is the measure! Millions for evil, cents for righteousness.—Ah! how far removed is the day of millennial glory, and how dim as yet the dawn of the brightness, whose radiance is yet to kindle on every hill and valley of this sin-darkened world.

IMPORTANT.

We copy from the last Annual Report a matter important at all times, of special importance now, when embarrassments trouble us, and painful diligence is to be given to every application. It is a resolution of the General Assembly at its sessions in 1856.

"Resolved, That it be recommended to the Presbyteries to encourage more and more the union of small congregations in the support of one pastor, which separately are unable of themselves to sustain a minister, with a view to the more efficient support of the ordinances of God among them with less expense to the missionary fund."

This is but a reiteration of former action—it is eminently well now, and will enable the Board sooner to escape from its difficulties, and, in God's good time, to enter on large and vigorous action.

The subjoined, from the Presbyterian Banner, expresses pertinently the views of a labourer on this very subject.

HOME MISSIONS IN THE WEST.

In my last I promised to show that the pastorate, in its own nature, is illy adapted to the work of evangelization in the newer States. This I shall now endeavour to do.

The pastor seeks to build up, usually, at a single point. His labours are local and limited. He seeks to gather, train, and develope a Christian congregation at a particular place. The preparation for the pulpit, the labours of the Sabbath-school, of the Bible-class, and the prayer-meeting, occupy his time and thoughts. His people demand his whole services. He has neither time, inclination, nor permission, for effectual, persistent efforts beyond his own parish.

But in new and sparsely settled States and territories there are comparatively but few points which require the whole services of a minister, or which promise to make self-supporting churches in a few years. There are very few parishes in such regions that can raise half of a decent salary. The same amount of labour diffused over a wider field, supplying several neighbourhoods, would lay the foundation for many self-sustaining churches in the future. From this wider field the minister would receive a better support. The Presbyterian church owes it to her scattered members, and to the country at large, thus to provide the gospel for all. It is economy thus to relieve the Board, and to enable it to put more men in the field. Two objections may be made to this. First, it may be said that congregations will not thrive on such occasional services. But all through the West, in the operations of the leading denominations, it has been shown that congregations will prosper with only one sermon in two weeks. Second, it may be objected that people will pay only in proportion to the labour received, and that the minister will receive as much at one place, if he gives it his whole time, as at two, giving them each but half his time. But experience shows this to be fallacious. In general, people in the West give about so much for preaching, and do not vary much whether the preaching be weekly or semi-monthly. In fact people seem to contribute more cheerfully when they are not overburdened in supporting their minister.

The effect of the evangelist system on the ministers themselves, is worthy of notice. In small congregations, where the growth is necessarily slow, there is not enough to occupy a man's time nor thoughts. Want of support and want of full employment drive the minister to teaching or farming. He has then only a divided mind to give to his ministerial work. A larger field would furnish not only a living, but also enough to fill his whole thoughts and occupy his whole time, greatly to his own profit and that of the work.

Lastly, the sum total of results in a large field would be such as to cheer the minister's heart and develope his energies. Many a man that is now pining and rusting in a small charge, feeling as though his life were passing without results, would be quickened into new zeal and activity by a simple extension of his field, and consequent increase of hope. Such a mode of life would tend to make the minister less of a recluse and more of a preacher. One frequent fault of our clergy is, that their sermons are heavy compilations of theology out of their text-books. They fall dead on an audience in a western school-house. The preacher must read, mark, and digest, not compile. The fresh, off-hand style of even ignorant men, takes better than the learned but lumbering essays of our seminary graduates. Break up this minister's life of monotony, give him a horse and a pair of saddle-bags—give him a crowded school-house, people hungering for every return of their preacher, and you inspirit him with new life.

In my next, I shall propose a general plan for this work of evangelization.

A WESTERN ITINERANT.

From the Congregationalist.

The history of our Revolutionary war discloses the spirit with which each household looked on husbands, sons, or brothers, enlisted for the battles of freedom. Mothers melted down their pewter ladles to afford ammunition for the terrible service. Sisters plied busy fingers with the wheel, the loom, and the needle—love lightening the labour—to furnish clothing for the patriot soldiery. Venerable men sent supplies, and their patriarchal blessing together, to cheer the young champions marching to many a field of blood. All with one heart made common cause in the tremendous struggle; and the battles of the Revolution were not fought at Bennington, Trenton, and Yorktown only, but around home firesides, and in secret closets, where good men pleaded with the Almighty.

With a like interest ought we to look upon our home missionary messengers, sent from these eastern churches westward. They have gone to a longer campaign, in a nobler service. They meet a more formidable foe. They struggle, in the nation's behalf, for a richer prize. They encounter privations and sufferings hardly less painful; for the patriots of the Revolution led no wives or children into the stern service of the camp. Their dear ones—there was comfort in the thought—were left safe beneath the home-roof. But the bitterest sting in the bitter poverty of these home missionary friends and brethren of ours, is, that they suffer not alone, but must daily look upon the patient, uncomplaining grief, of beings dearer than life.

And they are doing our work, as truly as it is their own. The western region must be evangelized, it is true. But what exclusive obligation rests upon them more than upon us to suffer thus to achieve it? We have not gone to the work. We have lingered in cheerful New England homes, while they toil on in our stead. They are fairly entitled, in the common Master's name, to demand our aid in the work.

Look for a moment upon the practical meaning of this language. The pressure of want comes down on the missionary's home like a strong man armed. Which way to look for life's poorest necessities, save with tearful eyes heavenward, he knows not. He little thought to bring that frail young wife from her sumptuous home to an experience like this. But he finds something worse in reserve for him still. With resources exhausted to meet daily wants, he anticipates his dues from the Society, and begins wading into the dismal abyss of debt, with small hope of emerging from it without a stain upon his name. On he goes—drawn by the stern pressure of necessity—deeper and deeper into embarrassment, but looking forward to quarter-day for relief. That day at length arrives. His outstanding promises to meet his own liabilities have all been based upon it. He goes with a light heart to the mail—to be met only with a cruel disappointment. He goes again and again with the same result. Meanwhile, the dreaded grocer over the way demands the cash for those promises. He cares nothing about apologies, or about a society a thousand miles away. He knows that he has trusted a man who had apparently small prospect of ability to pay when he took the debt. He knows that that man is a preacher; and he is not slow to circulate his opinion of that style of doing business. So, presently, our missionary hears from every side that his personal honour—and, what is infinitely harder to bear, his good name as a Christian, nay, his standing and influence as a minister of Christ, are damaged almost beyond redemption. Can you conceive, reader, of a sharper pang than that will inflict on such a soul as every minister ought to possess?

IMPORTANCE OF HOME MISSIONS—THE NEED OF PRESENT ACTION.

Christ blamed the Jews for not discerning the signs which had relation to his kingdom. The same charge may, perhaps, be brought against his professing people now. They are quick in perceiving what will tend to their worldly wealth and prosperity, but dull in discovering the signs which should govern their conduct in promoting the welfare of Zion. It may seem to some that the importance of domestic missions must be very much the same at all times, as long as there shall remain regions destitute of the regular administration of the gospel. But it cannot but be obvious, on the slightest reflection, that this subject is invested with an importance in our country, which does not attach to it in the older countries; for there everything is in a more fixed and permanent state. But here, every year, large districts of country are filling up with inhabitants, where a few years ago there were none, except the children of the forest, and the wild beasts. These first settlers are seldom careful to carry the means of grace with them, and thus we have large districts with an increasing population, without the stated administration of the word and ordinances. If this population is neglected by evangelical Christians, they will either grow up in ignorance of the truth, or the teachers of error will sow among them the seeds of their pernicious doctrines, from which it will be difficult afterwards to deliver them. While society is forming, it is of the utmost importance to implant the principles of truth and piety. The labours of one evangelical missionary, passing transiently through a new settlement, have often not only a salutary, but a permanent effect. Too much has been said against the efficiency of the itinerant labour of faithful ministers. Some such have had seals of their ministry wherever they preached, and while they passed away, and might never know anything of the success of their labours, the fruit has been permanent. The writer could relate many instances of this kind which have fallen under his own observation. The truth is, the labours of missionaries in the new settlements are followed by more conversions than those of settled pastors; who often have to complain that their people become gospel-hardened, and they appear to labour in vain, and spend their strength for nought. No one who has not witnessed it can conceive of the eagerness with which people in the new settlements press to hear the gospel, and how sensibly they are often affected with the simple preaching of the truth.

But my main object in these remarks is, to point out the importance of the present time as a season for vigorous exertion. There are now a number of territories rapidly filling up, and some which were a few years ago a howling wilderness, knocking for admittance, as States, into the Union. There is Florida, Iowa, and Wisconsin, in which there will soon be found millions of immortal souls. The last two of these have been peopled with a rapidity which perhaps has never been equalled. One good missionary now may be of more value than ten some years hence. And the people are crying for help, and solicitous to have ministers sent among them. If we do not occupy this ground, others will; and it may be such as will, either wholly or in part, mislead the people from the right way. Besides these territories, in the Western and South-western States, there are hundreds of square miles, in regions easily accessible, where the sound of a Presbyterian's voice is never heard. And yet, probably, as many of these people are from a Presbyterian stock as any other. Now is the time for exertion in this cause. Now the same means will accomplish much more than at some future period. Providence evidently assigns to us the supplying of this wide destitution. But what is the church doing? Has she felt the importance of the duty which has devolved upon her? It is to be feared that a profound sleep has seized upon a majority of professors. O brethren, let us work while it is called to-day, before the night cometh when no man can work.

But can suitable missionaries be obtained to go to the far West? Yes, they can. There are now pious and well qualified young men who wish to go.—Dr. Alexander.

OFF THE BOARD.

Delavan, Ill., June 1861.

Dear Brethren—This is my last quarterly report to your Board. Six years ago the church of Delavan, Peoria Presbytery, Illinois, was organized. It commenced with about twenty members, chiefly from the old mother church of Mercersburg, Pa. One year afterwards I commenced to labour here. There have been added in all seventy-two members; some of whom have moved away, and others have gone to glory.

A church building, costing over four thousand dollars, has been built and neatly furnished; and in the way of being paid for. A reasonable salary has been raised, except the assistance given us by the Board. We have regularly two services on the Sabbath in the church, a weekly prayer-meeting and Sabbath-school.

We have had our discouragements also, such as failure of crops, financial difficulties, political excitements, worldly-mindedness, and spiritual apathy. But the Lord has blest us in the past, and we hope that he will be with us in the future. Blessed be his name. And when fully able, not only to stand but to walk alone, we trust that we shall be willing to help you, and others through you, that need it, as we have needed it.

In behalf of my church and self, I return you, and all who have aided us, our sincere thanks.

Yours fraternally,

S. M. TEMPLETON.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

REASONS FOR AIDING THE BOARD OF EDUCATION IN THE PRESENT CRISIS.

1. The preaching of the gospel is God's great ordinance for the salvation of men, and lies at the foundation of all legitimate efforts to fill the world with the knowledge of God.

2. The church has solemnly pledged herself to sustain her candidates. Her language is as follows: "As a universal principle, the Board will refuse no applicant for want of funds." This pledge the church has never failed to redeem for thirty-five years.

3. No class of men suffer so great privations, or practise so much self-denial, as the candidates of the Board. This consideration ought to have weight with those who are fellow-members with them of the mystical body of Christ. The Master suffers in their persons when in want. He hungers when they are destitute of food. When they are compelled, through the meagreness of the provision supplied by the church, to leave our seminaries and colleges, he goes forth a wanderer with them.

4. The interruption of the studies of our candidates would, in some cases, disorganize colleges and seminaries, and would in almost every instance seriously affect the prosperity of our institutions.

5. This is a time of trial—a time in which God is testing the faith, love, and fidelity of his people. What is to be the record written in the book of God in reference to our beneficence toward his servants? Will it be that which the Apostle has left as a testimony to the churches of Macedonia?—"That in a great trial of affliction our deep poverty abounded unto the riches of our liberality."

6. The country adopts the children of those who have fallen in battle. The children for whom we ask aid are, in many instances, the children of those who have fallen fighting under the banner of the cross. Many of them are the children of deceased ministers.

7. Does not consistency require that we cease praying for the increase of our candidates, if we do not furnish the means requisite for their support? Let us beware, and consider, whether we are in earnest when we approach the Lord of the harvest with the prayer, that he would send forth more labourers.

8. Will not our Christian ladies imitate the noble example of Miss Dix? If a lady can sacrifice so much for love of country, what obstacle will be esteemed insurmountable by a Christian lady, whose heart is warmed and pervaded by the love of Christ?

9. Our last reason for extra effort is found in the large increase of candidates. The aggregate number under the care of the Board is no less than 512. This is far above the aggregate of any former year, whilst the treasury is absolutely empty, and the fountains of supply dried up by unparalleled and universal distress.

The rapid and unprecedented increase of candidates for the gospel ministry, and the present distracted state of our country, have awakened deep solicitude in the minds of the friends of ministerial education, as to the ability of the Board of Education to sustain the young men under their care, during the present year. Their number is now five hundred and twelve. Some extra effort is indispensably necessary for their support.

A GREAT NATIONAL WANT.

The subject discussed in the following extract, taken from one of the organs of the Lutheran church, is at present beginning to attract great attention. The religious and scientific education of young men of promise who are themselves unable, through lack of means, to obtain a collegiate and professional training, is truly a subject demanding the most serious consideration, not only of the church, but also of the nation. The best talent is not always found in "the best society." The peerage of England has been enriched and ennobled by men taken from the humblest of England's sons. The rule has held in all lands and in all ages, but in no land, and in no age, has it received more general or nobler illustrations than in America. No nation on earth owes more to talent trained in the school of poverty than our own. It is chiefly to talent of this class, trained religiously, that the nation owes, under God, her liberties, her institutions, and her position among the nations of the earth; and if the liberties of the nation are to remain, and her institutions withstand those evil agencies which wrought the ruin of other republics, the church must go back to the old paths, and pervade, with the banner of Christian morality, that talent which is to control and shape the destiny of our country. This principle has been recognized and, to some extent, acted on by our Board of Education. Some Christian persons of enlarged views of the church's mission, have placed at the disposal of the Board funds for this specific purpose. These funds have been always held distinct from the fund for candidates, or for schools and colleges, and have been entitled the Miscellaneous Fund. We are sorry to say, however, that the Board have not been enabled to do more in this department, and that at present they are unable to do anything for this important class. We repeat it, the religious and scientific education of young men of promise, who are in indigent circumstances, is a great national desideratum. Let the church grasp the subject and enter upon the work.

BENEFICIARY EDUCATION.

"The question now, naturally arises, what plan can, then, be substituted in place of the present system, which may operate more efficiently and successfully for the attainment of the object which we desire to accomplish, for the best interests of Zion, and the advancement of God's glory. Our proposition is, that the enterprise be so conducted as to confer the advantages of a liberal education upon decided and promising talent, in every condition of society. Good moral character should, of course, be made a sine qua non, an indispensable requisite, for without it, the best talent furnishes no adequate prospect or security of usefulness, and the influence of the unprincipled and vicious is always mischievous and demoralizing. But no obligation should be required, from the subject, for any particular profession or pursuit. On the completion of his education, the young man should be left at liberty to follow the convictions of conscience, and the decisions of his own judgment. He should be required only to pledge his word and honour that he will improve his advantages, to the best of his ability, in acquiring a thorough education, and conducting himself with Christian propriety, during the prosecution of his studies; and his obligations to the church should be considered as cancelled if he shall faithfully employ his talents in that profession, or pursuit, which his own inclination and taste may dictate. The aid, of which he has been the recipient, should be regarded as the reward of diligent and successful effort, of exemplary and faithful deportment. There is no object more worthy of the benevolent action of the church, than the free admission, into our evangelical colleges, of indigent, deserving talent, and adequate provision for its systematic and thorough cultivation, under the influence of enlightened and pious instruction. The plan proposed is not a modern or novel idea. It has prevailed, for many centuries, in all the principal countries of Europe. In the Universities of Paris and Bologna, the benefactions of the wealthy conferred upon the indigent student effectual relief: houses were furnished, free board provided, and the necessary expenses of the schools defrayed. In some of the institutions of Scotland, at the present time, one-third of the students are thus aided. The generous assistance has, in many instances, been rendered by individuals who, themselves, in early life, encountered formidable difficulties, in consequence of their embarrassed circumstances. In England, at Oxford and Cambridge, colleges were endowed, for indigent students, by munificent patrons of letters; some of the ablest men, in every department of church and state, received their education in the charitable schools of the country, and in their subsequent laudable efforts for the amelioration of the race, and the advancement of the church, amply discharged all debt of obligation which they had incurred. This seems to have been, very much, the original design in the founding of colleges in the early history of our own land. The Pilgrim Fathers entertained the conviction that, by means of the college, they must undertake not only to prepare men for the ministry, but also to mould the thought and sentiment of the nation, in its whole extent, by the profound, liberal, and Christian education of leading minds; to sanctify, by the purifying, ennobling influences of the gospel, the literature and science of the country. We find the following language employed in one of their petitions presented to their Colonial Assembly: "That from a sincere regard to, and zeal for upholding the Protestant religion, by a succession of learned and orthodox men, they proposed that a collegiate school should be erected in the colony, wherein youth should be instructed in all parts of learning, to qualify them for public employments in church and state." Provision was made to sustain at college all young men of suitable character whose parents were not able to furnish them with the requisite means, no matter what was their intention in regard to their future profession. The idea was, that men were needed, not only as ministers of the church, but as ministers of the state; that there were other spheres of usefulness, mighty and influential, in which educated mind was to be exerted. The same feeling, too, existed among the patriarchs of the Lutheran church, and the same plan, to a limited extent, was practised in their parochial schools. For the want of adequate means, and the entirely missionary character of their operations, they were unable to found and endow collegiate institutions.

"Our colleges should, then, be placed under the most decided and efficient religious influences. They should sustain a different, a more intimate relation to the church. They should be patronized with high religious motives. More of the religious element should be infused into them. A larger amount of religious instruction should be imparted, and earnest, fervent supplication on their behalf, should ascend to the mercy-seat, all over the church, that God's work may be revived in them, that the mind therein educated may be sanctified, and the youth gathered within their halls may be all brought under the benign influences of Divine truth, and led to devote their cultivated intellect to the service of the church. Our youth of promising talent should be sent to them, and provision made for the support of the indigent, with the sanguine hope, and earnest prayer that, with the Divine blessing, they may acquire wisdom, human and divine, become qualified for usefulness, either in the church or state, and use their influence in the diffusion of human happiness, and the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.

"We believe the plan suggested would correct many of the evils at present connected with the education of young men in indigent circumstances for the Christian ministry. It would keep out of the sacred office many who seem utterly unfit for its duties, and others who, although intellectually qualified, have no heart for the work; it would not violate a principle which we adopt, under other circumstances, in connection with the varied professions and pursuits of life, or impose upon young men, in the early stages of their education, responsibilities which they cannot reasonably be expected to meet. The result of the change, we think, would be beneficial to the intellectual as well as the moral and religious condition of our colleges. The influence would be salutary and happy upon the character of all professions and pursuits, and operate most favourably upon the ministry, in elevating its character, and increasing its efficiency. Church and state would be greatly benefited by the change proposed, the standard of scholarship in our colleges elevated, morals improved, and the cause of religion advanced."—Evangelical Review.

HAVE WE MINISTERS ENOUGH?*

This important question is very suggestive. It is well fitted to awaken thought and impel to inquiry. We have sometimes heard it put in the form of an implied negative, thus: "Have we not ministers enough?"

In determining this question, it is necessary, first of all, to consider who is to judge in the premises.

As to this point there is no room left for conjecture. It belongs to God to fix the number of those who shall serve him in the gospel of his Son. He claims it as His prerogative to send forth labourers into his harvest, and to judge in all matters relative to numbers and times. It is true that his people have the privilege of praying for the increase of the labourers, but, whilst they ask for more, they are not invested with authority to say how many more. This is to be submitted to His sovereign will and good-pleasure. It is theirs simply to pray and labour; it is God's to determine the time of the answer, and the measure of the increase.

This right of judging and determining as to how many shall enter the harvest, is put forth in many ways in God's word. Wherever God reproves men for carrying his message unsent, wherever His servants are called ambassadors, wherever those who are invested with the office of the holy ministry ascribe their calling to God, wherever the qualifications requisite for the exercise of the functions of the ministry are represented as the gift of the Holy Spirit, wherever men sit in judgment upon the gifts of the candidate, this claim is advanced. The assumption, in all these cases is, that the calling of men to the sacred office, and, consequently, the determining of the number of the labourers is with God. And if it be with God to determine the number, it is manifestly not with us to say when that number is complete.

Another decisive consideration in shaping our answer to the question, "Have we ministers enough?" is presented in that text which has long served as the motto of this department of the Record. This text teaches us, that it is the duty of the church now, and always will be her duty while there is a harvest to reap, to pray the Lord of the harvest for an increase of labourers. It becomes not those who offer this prayer to say, or teach, that we have ministers enough. The prayer for more labourers, and the conclusion that there are already enough, are, of course, irreconcilable. The man who is persuaded that there are labourers enough, is bound by one of the most cogent reasons to cease asking for more. To ask from the Omniscient, at his mercy-seat, and that too through the atoning blood of the sin-atoning Lamb, a thing which we believe is not requisite, either to the advancement of God's glory, or the welfare of his church, is really a serious business. Is it not bordering very closely upon the sin of mocking God? If prayer embrace, as an essential, the earnest and sincere desire of him who offers it, what is to be thought of the prayer of him, who asks God to grant what he himself believes to be unnecessary? So patent is the incongruity between the prayer and the desire, in such a case, that we believe the case to be possible only in supposition. We believe that no Christian man, who has come to the conclusion, that there are already ministers enough, will be guilty of the sin of asking God for more.

Here, then, is one of the legitimate consequences of this oft-repeated remark. If carried out into practice, it would lead to the abandonment of this prayer. As soon as this opinion gains universal sway in the church, that prayer wherewith the Lord of the harvest taught his disciples to besiege his throne, must cease to have any place among her offerings at the mercy-seat! The wide field of the world, white to the harvest, with its teeming millions of men, may wave full before her gaze, and from its perishing sons and daughters the cry for help may come up into her ears, and yet, under the blinding, deafening influence of the fatal conclusion that there are ministers enough, she must not ask for more!

Again, if it be God who calls men unto, and qualifies them for the ministry, it must be manifestly wrong for any man to say there are ministers enough, while God continues to call and designate by the bestowal of the necessary gifts, additional labourers. To utter such an opinion, in presence of the fact that God is calling more, is to set our judgment up in opposition to infinite wisdom. The position which becomes the people of God, in this matter, is clearly not to sit as judges, who are to determine when the supply is sufficient. It is theirs to pray for an increase, to recognize the grace, and trace the purpose of God in the vocation of the labourers, to cherish gratitude towards Him for hearing and answering their prayers, and to manifest this gratitude by doing all that in them lies to sustain and employ the labourers bestowed. This position is the only one consistent with God's claims as the arbiter in this matter, and man's utter inability to bestow the gifts which enter into, and lie at the foundation of ministerial qualifications. It belongs to man simply to judge as to whom God has called, not to determine when he has called enough. So long as God continues to add to the number already in the field by calling others, it is at our peril we call in question the wisdom of His administration by announcing to the church and to a perishing world, that "there are ministers enough!"

Were our Presbyteries to carry out this doctrine into practice, what a fearful responsibility must they incur! Believing that there are enough already, they must refuse to examine any more candidates for the holy ministry! Is any man willing that our Presbyteries should take this position? Is there in our church, or in any other church, any Christian man who will take the responsibility of saying to our Presbyteries, "Cease your examination of candidates, for there are already ministers enough!"

In view of the obviousness of this conclusion, it seems strange that the opinion in question should be entertained. One would think that the mere statement of it might be sufficient to secure the condemnation of it by all intelligent Christian men. The opinion, however, does prevail, and that to the serious detriment of this Board, and of the other Boards which are so intimately connected with it. It is one of the many reasons assigned for not contributing to the Education cause. When funds are solicited for the sustentation of our candidates, it is very common to receive as our answer, the opinion referred to—"there are ministers enough." It is to meet this dangerous doctrine we have taken the pains to call the attention of the church to the false principles on which it rests, and some of the consequences to which it leads. We beseech the church of God to look at the points suggested, and in view of the field which Christ has sent her to evangelize, and in view of the resources at his command, to ask herself the question, are there really ministers enough? Look, O believer, look out upon the footstool—look at Asia, Africa, Europe, America, and the islands and Empires of the Sea, and then look up to the throne—look at the field to be won, and the mighty resources which are in possession of the enthroned Lamb to win it, and remembering that these resources are to be employed only in answer to prayer, can you say that there are ministers enough?

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

SCHOOLS.

The Board would call the attention of the church to the very serious fact, that their parochial schools, and some of their Academies, are in imminent danger of suspension. The importance of these institutions in their respective neighbourhoods, certainly warrants, and claims, great sacrifices on the part of our people to prevent such a calamity. In view of the fact, that these institutions lie at the foundation of all successful efforts to extend the kingdom of Christ, and the no less notorious fact, that they are vitally and historically allied to our Presbyterianism, may we not put forward, in this hour of their need, a special plea in their behalf?

Here then is one great fact, to which we would ask the prayerful attention of the church: Our schools, academies, and colleges, present, in proportion to the numbers in attendance, a larger roll of converts than our churches. Now, dear brethren, servants of the living God, ye ambassadors of Christ, and all ye who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity, are these institutions to be abandoned? Is there sufficient reason for withholding our contributions from these institutions to be found in the present national crisis? Do the embarrassments of commerce, either present or prospective, justify those who are not their own, but the purchased ones of Christ, in refusing to contribute at all to this indispensable Christian agency? Can a servant of him, who had not where to lay his head, deliberately conclude, that it is better the school and college system, so far as it is directly or indirectly dependent upon the Board of Education, had better be suspended for one year, than that he should part with twenty or thirty cents? Dear brethren, consider the claims of our schools and colleges, and act in view of the issues which hang upon your decision.

We give the following as a specimen of the urgent appeals which the Board frequently receives.

"Instead of making a formal report of our parochial school for the half year, ending July 1st, 1861, will it not be sufficient for us to refer the Board to the account of our school which appears in the Annual Report? The state of things now is precisely what it was when that account was prepared, with the exception that the number of pupils is diminished somewhat, as is usual at this season of the year.

"In the reply to our last semi-annual report, there was something which pained us exceedingly—it was an intimation that the usual appropriation from the Board might be discontinued. If this is done for any reason, our school must die. We hope that nothing but absolute necessity will induce the Board to dry up this fountain of good, though it be comparatively small. With the jealousy of our Methodist friends, on the one hand, and the rivalry of the Free school on the other, we must of necessity keep our terms very low, and at the same time have a superior school, or we should be broken up at once. With the aid received from the Board, we have been able to have a superior school at low rates of tuition. But without that aid, how can this any longer be done; especially when one-third of our pupils pay nothing at all. We do not, of course, expect the Board to aid us unless it has the means. But if funds are placed at the disposal of the Board, as heretofore, we hope that our case will commend itself to the Board or committee, as one worthy of favourable consideration.

"We deem it no more than just to say, that it has not been without very considerable pecuniary sacrifice on the part of the teacher and members of the session, that the school has been sustained thus far."

ARS ET SCIENTIA DOCENDI.

Be it noted, however, that there is a wide difference between teaching and hearing lessons merely. The instructor, who depends alone upon his text-book, requiring, and only asking a verbatim recitation of the words of the author, does no more teaching than a scholar would perform who knew how to read. Such are simply prompters, not teachers. The art and the science of teaching are noble, elevated, and important; demanding peculiar qualifications, and requiring special exertion, deep thought, and an earnest purpose to succeed. A calm self-possession, thorough mental discipline, a knowledge of human nature, good executive ability, sweetness of temper, urbanity in deportment, accessible to the most timid, and a ready facility for illustration and instruction, are attributes which carry the teacher successfully through every devious path of his difficult art, and beautifully exhibit the ornaments and peculiarities of his sublime science.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
July 12th, 1861.

SAD NEWS FROM THE CHOCTAW MISSIONS.

We have seldom had to report more discouraging news than what is here given concerning the missions among the Choctaw Indians. The suspension of the mission schools was mentioned in our last number as probable; this, we now learn, has taken place. Over four hundred interesting children and young persons, lately enjoying the best kind of Christian instruction, are now deprived of this great advantage. Besides this, many of the missionary labourers have been compelled to leave the Indian country; some of them were ordered to leave by self-appointed "Vigilance Committees," consisting chiefly of lawless persons from Texas, joined by some of the Indians.

The Rev. Messrs. Hobbs, Edwards, and Ainslie; Messrs. Wiggins, Lee, and Ives; Mrs. Hobbs, Mrs. Edwards, Mrs. Wiggins, Mrs. Lee, Miss Wiggins, Miss Diament, Miss Davidson, Miss Hitchcock, and Miss McBeth, have reached their homes in the North. Most of the other labourers will probably have to withdraw, some of them having been warned to leave by the lawless Committees. Those above mentioned, who were not forced to withdraw by these violent men, considered it a duty to come away, on account of the disturbed state of the Indian country rendering their residence in it unsafe, and their being unable to carry forward their missionary work.

We look with some solicitude for further accounts of the Indian missions in the South-west—among not only the Choctaws, but the Creeks, Chickasaws, and Seminoles. It is probable they will all be suspended; but we trust the personal safety of the missionaries will be secured. They are in the keeping of God. We ask for them a special interest in the prayers of our readers.

We regret to add, that Mrs. Young, wife of Mr. R. Young, teacher at Spencer, was so ill that her recovery was not expected, when Messrs. Lee and Wiggins left that station. The Rev. C. C. Copeland, of the Choctaw station at Bennington, was also suffering from sickness, so that he could not comply with the order of the lawless Texans, to leave the country within ten days, and was allowed a month. He has a wife and seven children, and is compelled by wicked men to leave a work in which he has been faithfully engaged for many years. "Lord, how long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph?"

Recent Intelligence.

INDIAN TRIBES.

The chief news of the month from this part of the missionary field will be found in the preceding article, which reports the sad state of the Choctaw mission. From the Chippewa mission we have received a letter dated June 26th; Iowa, June 14th; and Omaha, June 26th. Some of the members of the Bear River church, Chippewa mission, had been misled by the efforts of members of another denomination in the neighbourhood. The number of scholars in the Orphan Institute, Iowa, was reduced to nineteen. One of the most promising boys in the Omaha school had died, after giving pleasing evidence of his having a good hope in Christ. The father of this boy is spoken of as moved by much religious feeling, and as having "a mind stored with all Indian superstitions, but struggling against their influence, and seeking light. He has profited by former labours and prayers."

INDIA.

We have received letters dated, at Allahabad, May 4th; Mynpurie, May 4th; Dehra, May 3d; Ambala, April 8th; Lodiana, May 4th; Lahor, May 3d; and from Messrs. Morrison and Barnes, in London, on their way home, June 4th,—both having received benefit from the voyage. Mr. Walsh mentions his having had fever for several weeks, from which he was recovering; this had prevented him from preparing an obituary sketch of Gopeenath Nundi. He also mentions that Mr. Johnson had gone to Futtehpore, taking the charge of that station by the appointment of the mission. At Mynpurie, Mr. Brodhead speaks of interesting and hopeful cases of inquiry, one of them a Brahman lad in the school, who reads the Bible daily, and seems to be not far from the kingdom of heaven. Mr. Munnis gives encouraging accounts of the school at Ambala, where there is apparent religious interest among those connected with it; he also reports the baptism of a hopeful convert. At Lodiana the number of orphan girls had increased to thirty-eight. Mr. Rudolph refers to "several inquirers," including some of the pupils in the school. Mr. Forman's letter, in another column, gives an account of matters at Lahor.

SIAM.

Dr. House writes from Bangkok on the 20th of April. He mentions with thankfulness the convalescence of Mrs. McDonald, speaking of her as "most wonderfully raised up from the brink of the grave, as it were." The building of a chapel and school edifice was going on well. A donation of $100 for the chapel had been received from an English merchant, and the brethren hoped to complete the building without increased expense to the Board.

CHINA.

Letters have come to hand from Ningpo, dated to April 20th; from Shanghai, April 23d. We regret to learn the death of Alice, Mr. and Mrs. Culbertson's youngest child, at Shanghai. Mrs. Rankin and her children embarked for this country in the ship Eliza and Ella, on the 16th of March, and the Rev. E. B. Inslee and his family in the ship Potosi on the 19th of April. We regret to learn that the health of Mrs. Danforth was seriously impaired; on this account Mr. and Mrs. Danforth had left Ningpo on a visit to one of the northern provinces. They would accompany Mr. and Mrs. Gayley, who make this journey on account of Mr. Gayley's health. Mr. and Mrs. Nevius were at Ningpo, but would probably have to spend the summer also at the north. Dr. McCartee, at the request of Commodore Stribling, United States Navy, would accompany the American expedition up the Yang-tsz, as interpreter, expecting to be absent from Ningpo about two months. In their missionary work the brethren at Ningpo were still meeting with encouragement. Two persons were baptized in the Sanpoh district, one of them a prisoner in a jail under most interesting circumstances, which are mentioned in Mr. Rankin's letter in another column.

Mr. Loomis's labours among the Chinese in California continue to possess much interest: see his letter on a subsequent page. We are glad to learn that the esteem of Christian friends in San Francisco has put it in the power of Mr. and Mrs. Loomis to spend some time in the interior of the State. This will be of service to their health, and will afford opportunities of visiting many of the Chinese.

JAPAN.

Advices have been received from Kanagawa to the 9th of April. Dr. Hepburn had opened a Dispensary, and had prescribed to a good many patients.

SAILING OF MISSIONARIES.

On the 2d of July, the Rev. James L. Mackey and his wife, the Rev. Robert H. Nassau, and Mrs. G. McQueen, embarked in the brig Ocean Eagle for Corisco, West Africa. Mr. and Mrs. Mackey return to Corisco with health much improved, and Mrs. McQueen, widow of the Rev. George McQueen, Jr., formerly of this mission, also goes back to the missionary work. Mr. Nassau is a son of the Rev. Dr. Nassau, of the Presbytery of New Brunswick. We ask for these missionary friends the prayers of our readers.

MORE MEN TO BE SENT OUT.

Since our last issue we have received funds for sending out three new missionaries. It will be remembered that special donations for sending out three new missionaries were acknowledged last month. These most liberal gifts are additional to the usual contributions of the donors. In this respect, they will serve, as we trust and hope, to suggest to many others among our Christian friends, the question of duty and of privilege, in making additional offerings in support of this cause, thus supplying the lack of service on the part of some, perhaps many, of the warmest friends of missions in these sad times.

With the earnest calls for more labourers from the mission fields, and with several approved brethren under appointment, when these funds were offered, the Committee could not hesitate longer as to the path of duty; and they are taking measures to send out two more men to Canton, and one to Kanagawa, besides the three referred to last month for Ningpo.

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, AT THEIR MEETING ON MONDAY, JULY 8, 1861.

"The Committee spent some time in considering 'An Address to the Presbyterian churches in the South,' published in some of the newspapers, and signed by the Rev. A. W. Leland, D. D., and others, ministers of our church in South Carolina, under date of June 8, 1861—which Address seeks to obtain funds for the immediate support of the missions to the South-Western Indians, and also looks to the action of the Presbyterian churches in the South independently of the Board, and to the support of certain missions and missionaries by them—implying that the rest are not equally entitled to their support:

"Whereupon the Committee agreed to express their deep regret, that any of their Christian brethren should contemplate a withdrawal from the missionary work of the church as conducted by the Board; and also their earnest conviction that, as all the missionaries of the Board were sent out by the whole church, a common obligation rests upon all her members to support these brethren, without reference to sectional distinctions.

"The Committee further agreed, that as they cordially recognize the duty of the Board, hereafter as heretofore, to support all the missionaries in its service, they ought to call the attention of the friends of missions to the probability that the action of some of the Southern churches, as mentioned in this Address, will withdraw a considerable part of the ordinary income of the Board, and will leave the burden of supporting the missions to rest upon a smaller number of their Christian brethren; but they trust, nevertheless, that the Lord will enable his people to provide means for carrying forward the work of missions without reduction.

"At the same time, in the special and trying circumstances of the Indian Missions in the South-West, the Committee would express their thankfulness to their brethren in the Southern churches, who have taken measures designed to send pecuniary support to these missions."

To the preceding Minute we add some brief remarks. (1.) As to "the Board in New York" relinquishing the South-Western Indian missions—this question has not been acted on by the Committee; nor would it be in their power to relinquish these missions in any way that would involve the transfer of the missionary labourers to new relations without their own consent. There has, indeed, been conversation in the Mission House about the probably destiny of these missions, in the event of the country or the church being permanently divided; in that sad event, they would naturally fall to the South for support. Beyond this opinion, so far as we know, there has been nothing that looked to a transfer of these missions.

Recently it was found impracticable to remit funds from the east to the missionaries, the communication by mail being cut off; neither could they sell drafts on New York, in the disturbed condition of the Indian country. In these circumstances, the proposal of brethren in the South to forward funds to them was gratefully acknowledged, as in the Minute of the Committee. The lamentable suspension of these missions, through the conduct of lawless men, will probably make the question of their support one of less practical moment. We trust the time will soon come, however, when the question of resuming their work can be considered under peaceful auspices.

(2.) It is not known to the Committee that any of the missionaries wish to withdraw from their relations to the Board.

(3.) The probability as to a falling off in the receipts of the Board from the usual sources is suggested, and deserves consideration. It is difficult to form an estimate of such deficiency. General causes, sufficiently obvious without remark, will no doubt prevent many of the warmest friends of missions from making their usual gifts. On the other hand, some of these friends may be enabled to give more liberally than heretofore. We fear the deficiency may be serious, in many places. So far as the contributions of the churches in the South are concerned, the amount given last year may be taken as a basis. From the Appendix to the Annual Report of the Board, we learn that the churches in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, Western Tennessee, Eastern Virginia, and North Carolina, contributed last year about $21,500.* Whatever deficiency may occur this year will be in part counterbalanced by the less expenditure for the South-western Indian missions. Last year the Board expended a little over $20,000 in supporting these missions, above the amount received from the Indian funds of the government on account of schools. The outlay for these missions will, no doubt, be less this year, though the painful circumstances under which so many of the labourers have had to leave the Indian country cause much extra expense.

(4.) The other missions of the Board are all placed on restricted estimates; the home expenses are on a reduced scale; new brethren are to be sent out for the present by special contributions; the Minutes of the General Assembly of 1860 show that over 217,000 communicants are in our churches in the parts of our country not enumerated above; and there are many of our Southern brethren, as we cannot but believe, who will continue to support these missions; thus there is a large body of Christian people, to whom this great work for our Lord and for a dying world, may look for an earnest support. If such support is given, can any one doubt that, even in these unprecedented times, this work may and ought to go forward? Let all give as God prospers them. Let all pray, in faith and with importunity. Then we may hope to see happiest results.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

JOURNAL OF MR. THACKWELL.

Mr. R. Thackwell, licentiate preacher, who is stationed at Lodiana, recently sent to us the following extracts from his journal of a visit to a mela, or fair, at Nandpur. We are struck with the good reception which was usually given to the message of the missionaries.

March 11*th*, 1861.—Camp Rámgurh. Reached this place to-day en route to Nandpur. Had a large and attentive congregation this evening. Many from this village have at different times become Christians, and the people generally seem to be most favourably disposed towards Christianity. I was much encouraged by their demeanor, and evident anxiety to hear me preach. The time is perhaps not far distant when Rámgurh will become a Christian village.

14*th*.—Camp Kakrálli. During the last three days Qádir Bakhsh and myself have preached in fourteen villages, and had large audiences in many of them. The want of rain is but too plainly evident in the stunted appearance of the crops. In many places large areas of fallow ground are to be seen, and in others but scanty blades of grain. The ground contiguous to the different villages is covered by flourishing crops, watered from the village wells, but beyond, all is sterile.

The people here seem desirous for us to prolong our stay, and, in compliance with their wishes, we will not proceed to our next encamping ground till to-morrow. They have listened attentively to the word, and although they attempted to defend their own systems of religion, yet they bore with great patience the arguments advanced in opposition.

15*th*.—Camp Ratangarh. Visited five villages to-day, and Qádir Bakhsh as many more. Had good audiences in many of them, and the people almost universally seemed particularly well disposed to listen to us. They now begin to regard us as friends, and this is a great deal gained, and is matter for encouragement. We leave for the village of Pipál Májrah to-morrow. Provisions very dear, and most difficult to procure.

16*th*.—Camp Pipál Májrah. Had a large and orderly congregation in one of the villages through which I passed. Rain has at last fallen in great abundance in the surrounding districts. It is to be hoped that famine prices will no longer prevail.

18*th*.—Rained all day yesterday, so the harvest, such as it is, is secured.

19*th*.—Camp Jhallian. Had large audiences in some of the villages to-day. Met with opposition, yet, on the whole, we trust the word will not have been preached in vain. We have visited, up to the present date, about forty villages.

23*d*.—Camp Nandpur. The Sikh town of Nandpur is situated on the slope of a hill, backed by the majestic Himála, its snow-capped head towering to the skies. At different points several large and imposing blocks of buildings catch the eye. These are the residences of the Sodhí, descendants of the founder of the Sikh religion, and generally very wealthy, and much respected by the people. In the foreground, and towards the south-east, through the valley below, meanders a branch of the river Sutlej, its banks studded with fruit gardens; and with the western sun reflected on its surface, the river can be traced winding its way like a huge serpent till it is lost in the distant horizon, the whole presenting a very picturesque scene. To-day the people are flocking in, and there promises to be a mela, although, on account of the famine, it will be but thinly attended.

26*th*.—Had a most interesting interview with a faqir of great repute in this quarter. I was conducted to his hut by a Sodhí, and we found him seated on a platform slightly raised above the level of the ground, and surrounded by his disciples. After the usual salutations, I opened the discussion by remarking to the Dervish, that I was glad to learn that he discountenanced idolatry, and inveighed against it in his teachings. This immediately led to his questioning me; and the unity of the Deity; his omnipresence, nature, and essence; the relation we sustain to him; the nature of sin; the fallen state of man, and his inability to save himself; the necessity, therefore, for a Saviour, were all discussed; and on all of these points, so entire was his unanimity with me, that I could not but conclude that he had drawn his theology from the Bible, although he professed to have arrived at his views by the force of his own mind—employed in close and constant thought. After directing him to Christ as the Saviour, I left him with the conviction that he was not far from the kingdom of heaven.

* This sum was over $11,000 less than the donations of the same churches in the preceding year.

I subsequently sent him a copy of Luke's Gospel, and of the Pilgrim's Progress, with which, I am told, he was much pleased. After the interview was over, the Sodhi who accompanied me, told me that the Faqir had been very much persecuted by a native prince, the present patron of the Sikh religion, on account of his doctrines. The prince is a superstitious idol worshipper, and quite unable to appreciate either the Faqir or his doctrines.

Qādir Bakhsh and myself preached for three days continuously to the people assembled at the fair, and gave many volumes of God's precious word away. May it accomplish that which he pleases, and prosper in the thing whereto it is sent. R. T.

THE CHURCH AND SCHOOL AT LAHOR.

Mr. Forman writes as follows, under date, at Lahor, of April 17th, 1861. He has to speak of discouragements, but he is sowing good seed in hundreds of young minds.

It has been a long time since we have had an addition either to our English or Hindustani church, and I cannot speak very highly of the deportment of all those who are communicants in the native church. Of these there are only eleven now, and one of them will probably be excommunicated at the next meeting of session. We have already excommunicated three or four this year—one for immoral conduct, and two for denying the faith and professing Mohammedanism again. Notwithstanding all that has been written and spoken regarding the progress of the gospel in India, it seems to me that almost no visible progress has been made—that the gospel has hardly taken root at all. We have inquirers sometimes, but they are too often influenced by mere covetousness. We, not unfrequently, have applications from converts connected with other missions to receive them, but we want to discourage, as far as we can, the practice of going from station to station, which is so common among native Christians. Besides those who go about seeking better places, there is a large number of native Christians who are mere wandering beggars. There are, however, some here, as in almost every station, who give evidence of being true converts. I must say that the most moral are those who have been pretty thoroughly instructed in our schools and orphanages. This leads me to speak of our school.

We have now more than 300 pupils reading English, and about 50 reading Urdu. Not a few of these are very intelligent lads, and give satisfaction by their diligence and good conduct. I am just now teaching geography to a class of 100, orally. This gives me many opportunities of showing the falsehood of their system, the progress Christianity is making, and the benefits resulting, even in this world, from Christianity. I have the whole school assembled once a day for worship, and am now going through the book of Acts with them. At the distribution of prizes in the government school, during the winter, our excellent lieutenant-governor gave several scholarships to some of the best pupils, and remarked, in his speech to the school, that all persons educated in the institution might expect government employ. The hope of getting such prizes induced a number of our more advanced pupils to go over to the government school, and, for some time, I found that our pupils generally would leave us just at the time they might expect to compete for rewards, or were almost ready for employment, and thus we would become little more than hewers of wood and drawers of water for the government school. However, at our request, the lieutenant-governor, with the financial and judicial commissioners, visited our school the other day, and told our pupils they, too, might certainly expect government employ whenever I should certify that they were qualified. He has also increased our grant-in-aid. We have many more pupils than the other school, which is owing to the fact that a monthly fee is levied in it. Few of the people will pay eight annas, or a quarter of a dollar, a month for the privilege of not reading the Bible.

MISSION IN CHINA.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. H. V. RANKIN, NINGPO, APRIL 18, 1861.

Various interesting notices.

When I last wrote, Mr. Nevius and I expected to proceed at once to Hang-chau. In this we were disappointed, as the letter from Mr. Wong, our landlord there, stated that affairs were very unsatisfactory.

Mr. Nevius spent the Sabbath in Sanpoh, where he baptized the sister of Mrs. Yih, who had been before the session at my last visit there, and was then regarded as hopeful. At Yuyiao, on Monday last, he baptized, in the jail, the headman, of whom I have frequently written. It was a very solemn and interesting occasion, and I hope that God will bring great good out of it. Already ten of the twenty-two prisoners express religious interest, and pray, and keep the Sabbath. It was exceedingly interesting to notice their savage-looking faces, (for some of them have been guilty of manslaughter,) listening on that occasion, as well as on the day before when I was there, with intense eagerness to the word spoken. A general reformation has also taken place in the prison, the men having applied themselves to making straw shoes, through the head-man's instrumentality, and thereby making some money for themselves. The officer in charge is delighted with the change from their former habits of gambling, and cursing, and idleness; and the news will be spread outside also, and do good.

I conducted the communion services at the mission house on the Sabbath. I mentioned the baptism of the carpenter, Dzing, in my last visit. He it was who first carried the gospel to the prison, and one of the two tobacconists whom he, on that occasion, induced to keep the Sabbath, still holds on his way, and is very hopeful. Another hopeful inquirer is a tailor. The shoemaker who has long been on the list as an inquirer is still not quite satisfactory. Mr. Morrison was disappointed about getting a residence at Yuyiao for his family, and has located them, for the present, at Mr. Danforth's former residence here. He expects to spend much of his time at Yuyiao, and hopes to reside there as soon as possible.

We have just received a visit from the "Saginaw," which has come, by direction of Commodore Stribling, to convey Dr. McCartee to Shanghai, to accompany the American expedition up the Yang-tsz as interpreter. He will be absent about two months. Mrs. Nevius is not at all strong, and Mr. Nevius feels it his duty to go to the North with her shortly, for which the mission has given him permission, so that Mr. Green and I will have to carry on the operations here as well as we can for the present. Thus we come and go. I feel so thankful that I am privileged to remain, though I had hoped to find a resting-place among the hill cities to the south of this, and may yet, before my wife returns. These changes are sad enough to one who is constantly witnessing them, and how much more so to the persons themselves.

In the general work here matters remain very much as before. The means of grace are in use continually, but, in Ningpo itself, there is at present no sign of special progress. O for the Holy Spirit to be poured out with power upon this vast people, not only, but upon ourselves also, that we may abound in the love and in the work of the Lord. Our sympathies and prayers are with you at the Mission House, especially in this critical time of our country, and we will be as careful as possible in expenditures here.

As ever, affectionately yours,
H. V. RANKIN.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

LETTER OF MR. LOOMIS.

Writing on the 5th of June, at San Francisco, Mr. Loomis mentions various matters of interest. We observe with much pleasure the cordial interest taken by Christian friends at that city in our excellent missionary and his wife. They have never recovered fully from the illness brought on by their residence in China, but we trust they will be spared for many years of good service to the Chinese in California.

Though it has been some time since I wrote, yet our work has been going on as usual. We have had some sickness, not very severe, but enough to remind us of the necessity of some sanitary measures. At the time I last wrote, Mrs. Loomis was suffering with chill and fever. She recovered, and last week I was a little more than half sick. For some time our friends have been urging us to go into the country, and to go to some place where we may, for a time, be free from all care; and last week, to make it sure that we would go, they sent in a purse of money, with the special instruction to use it in a journey to the country. We have made our arrangements to leave here near the close of this week. We will visit Napa and Santa Rosa valleys. During the summer I propose to visit the Chinamen in some of the mining districts.

For several weeks we have been much engaged with the newly arrived Chinamen. About half of the time for two months, perhaps, we have been out once or twice a day. Yesterday I made four addresses and distributed books. To-day I have been out twice, and expect to go again as soon as I get rested. For a few days my teacher has been unwell, so that I have had more to do; for when we go together, I have him do a good share of the talking. I am anxious, if possible, to see every company that arrives, and give them the opportunity of hearing at least a few words of truth. They tarry in the city but a short time, and after they leave the city and scatter over the country, they are not likely to be in the way of hearing very much about the way of life. I hope that the books they receive are carried by them to their new homes in the mountains. I also embrace opportunities of sending books to Chinese settlements in the interior. These may do good; there is power in them; there is vitality in this seed. It may seem a dry, husky substance, like the grain of wheat that is cast into the earth, yet the germ is made to start and come up; just so, I think, almost every time I give a tract or portion of Scripture; the Spirit can bless it to the awakening and conversion of some soul, either now, or a long time hence—perhaps after the distributor has finished his labours; and so I was thinking this afternoon, as I sat among a crowd of people who yesterday came ashore from their ships. One would hear a few sentences, and go off, repeating it to his companions. Another is struck with a different portion of the discourse, and he repeats it to his neighbour. Still another is impressed with a statement which, though new, yet seems worthy of remark, and he repeats it, and again he repeats it; and so on till we have done talking; and when we leave we still hear them repeating scraps of what they have heard. Now how do we know but these little isolated truths are the seeds which are to sprout and grow by and by? Nay, why ought we not to believe that such will be the case, and to pray just as though we expected God would give the increase to this planting and watering.

After writing the above, I filled my pockets with books, and started for one of the company houses. Found a man looking into the Gospel of Matthew, which I left with him yesterday; found another company in the room, which is fitted up for a temple. They were rendering thanksgiving for a safe voyage. The oldest person of the party was attending to the ceremonies, while the rest were sitting or lounging about the room. Now and then one of the crowd came forward and bowed before the idol. Painted candles were lighted and set upon the altar; also incense-sticks were left to burn in the brazen pots before the image of Kwan-ti. Offerings of wine were poured out before him, and a platter of cooked food sat smoking on the altar. Much gilt paper was burned, which was to represent money. As the poor man lifted up the different articles and waved them before the dumb idol, as he kneeled and bowed his head reverently so many times to the earth, as he muttered his prayer each time that he tried the divining sticks, my heart pitied him. O, how I wished that he but knew the true God, so that he might no longer weary himself for vanity.

I remained a silent spectator till the ceremonies were closed; then I began quietly to talk with those who were sitting near me. Presently others drew near, then others; and so I talked for a while to an attentive and inquisitive group of young Chinamen, who were lately from the paddy-fields of the south of China. When I first began to talk I offered books, but they hesitated, and seemed afraid of them; but as I was about leaving, they asked for the books, and seemed eager to get them.

Speaking of the thank-offerings which they are accustomed to offer after a voyage, reminds me of the protracted and more than usually expensive ceremonies of the passengers who recently arrived by the ship Coquimbo. They had been more than six months on the way from Hong-Kong to this port—a company numbering upwards of three hundred. In making their northing from Hong-Kong, they met with severe weather, and the old ship with difficulty lived through it. It was as much as all hands could do to keep her afloat until they made the harbour of Kanagawa. The Chinese report that the passengers were very much alarmed—a few, they say, actually died with fright; and some others have not yet recovered from the shock. In their distress, "they called every man upon his god;" and they made their vows. So when they finally reached this port with their lives, but with scarce anything besides, they began to prepare offerings, and had prayers chanted; and thanksgivings offered at one of the company houses, one day, at another the next; and on the third, at another place, and so on.

As we had made arrangements to be gone into the country for a short time, I conversed with my teacher about it, and gave him permission to employ the time as he saw best—intimating that the chapel would be shut up until we returned. Yesterday he came, requesting that the chapel might be open as usual during our absence. He stated that he had been conversing with those who are accustomed to attend, and they seemed desirous that the meetings should not be interrupted. So I expect they will meet, to read and pray. Will not the Holy Spirit be with them? We will pray for his presence—His special presence.

In the meeting, last evening, I enjoyed the teacher's address very much. He was animated, and said many excellent things; and the people heard what was uttered. Oh that we might hear of souls awakened!

With affectionate regards, yours truly,

A. W. Loomis.

MISSION IN NEW GRENADA.

DISCOURAGING PROSPECTS.

We insert here some extracts from letters lately received from the Rev. W. E. McLaren. These letters contain references to the civil war in New Grenada, most of which we omit, as later accounts have reached the public through the newspapers. Of the prospects of missionary labour, Mr. McLaren is constrained to take views by no means encouraging. This war interrupts work of this kind in many ways, and there are hindrances to its progress besides the war. But our missionary brother is still engaged in learning the language, and is not yet able to preach in it. Prayer should be offered that an open door may be set before him when he is prepared to make active efforts in spreading the gospel—the great remedy for the misery which now afflicts the country.

After speaking of his services in English, which are held in his own house, and attended by only a few hearers, Mr. McLaren proceeds as follows:

I would now refer you to the natives, with the remark, that I do not pretend to a thorough knowledge of them. They are a race not readily understood, and they are so much influenced by fear of the priests, (for, be assured the Church here is not the effete, tottering thing she is sometimes represented to be,) that it is difficult to get at their real sentiments. I speak this of the better class. There is no difficulty in determining the status of the lower orders, who constitute 90 per cent. of the population. They are, 1. Ignorant beyond belief. 2. Immoral, especially in reference to the obligations of the third and seventh Commandments. 3. Superstitious and fanatical. 4. But one remove from open violence against "heretics."

With regard to the middle class, the artisans, who are somewhat educated, hopeful things have heretofore been written you, and not without foundation. Very many of them, however, are exceedingly bigoted.

Of the intelligent and wealthy class, constituting politically the two parties, Conservative and Liberal, a considerable share are firm in their traditionary beliefs, loyal to the church of their fathers, and would rejoice to see us driven from the country. They persist in calling Bogota "Santa Fé," and long for the old days. The present President is a fair type of this class.

Another and larger share are more liberal, and are found in the ranks of both parties. To them we owe the establishment of religious freedom, not so much from love of it as from imitation of our laws, in the vain hope that a mere law would do for them what they dare not do for themselves, viz., throw off the yoke of ecclesiastical bondage. They are utterly indifferent to religion, and are seriously tinctured with various phases of unbelief, while they look (they dare not speak or act) in our favour, not so much from love of us as hate of Rome.

Then there is another share who are extremists—radicals of the French school—who are undoubtedly a great curse to any nation. They are much detested here, and some of the fanatics seem to delight in coupling us with them.

. . . . . The women of all classes are devoted to the church, and I hope there is many a Mary among them, who looks beyond the heresies, and corruptions, and idols, and chooses "the better part;" but there is no doubt the sex are the supporting pillar of the church in this land.

Now pervading this entire native population there is (with exceptions) a laxity of morals, a want of personal honour and integrity, a spiritual numbness, that nothing can remedy but the all-sufficient gospel of Jesus Christ. But whether that remedy can be applied, is a problem of the future. They need it but do not want it. . . . . The question of present duty is plain. I desire to remain here labouring on as I can through the darkness. . . . . In the meantime let the church know the real state of affairs here, and the possible failure of the experiment, that she may invoke Almighty power and grace, to hasten the day of spiritual regeneration to this unhappy land.

A distressing occurrence.

My writing to-day [March 7,] has been repeatedly interrupted by a most distressing occurrence. About two o'clock we heard the loud "vivas" of an excited soldiery, and on going to our balconies found the city in a state of intense excitement, mounted officers dashing at full speed in every direction, and companies of soldiers running with almost equal haste towards the mountains which tower above us to the east. On inquiry I ascertained that one hundred and sixty political prisoners, confined in one of the prisons, had overpowered the guard and escaped, taking refuge amid the almost perpendicular declivities of Mont-Serrate. The troops were soon in pursuit, and from our balconies we could see them shooting the poor fellows down. It was a terrible sight. The prisoners are mostly young men, of liberal opinions, and have been in prison for months, where they have been most barbarously treated. The escape was foolishly planned, both as to time and manner, and they have paid dearly for it. Nine or ten were shot dead on the mountain, and some thirty wounded more or less severely—some of them cruelly lanced after they had surrendered. They continued to hunt them down until darkness prevented further search. Probably fifty or sixty are now again in the prisons, from which only a few hours ago they escaped, the most of them suffering from severe wounds and brutal usage. I was out through the streets on a tour of observation, but was warned by an English friend that there was danger, and acting on his advice, came home by unfrequented streets.

[Writing on the 13th of April, Mr. McLaren adds:]

. . . . . Words cannot represent the prostrate condition of every interest in this country at present. The condition of things is unparelleled, inured as these people are to revolutions, and the expenditure of millions of money drawn from a poverty-stricken people, and the loss of many thousands of men drawn wholly from the productive classes, is by no means a full statement of the disastrous effects of this war. Industry is withdrawn, debt is incurred, the hatreds of races are intensified, confidence in the future is rooted up.

It must be acknowledged that the prospects of this mission are not encouraging, but we must not give up hoping and praying for brighter days. The work of every missionary, above that of most ministers, is a leaven-implanting, seed-sowing work. Its results do not immediately appear. But the lessons of the missionary in public or in private, to many or to few, his example and daily life, his prayers, and those of the churches by whom he is sent forth, are parts of the means by which God is pleased to save lost souls, and to regenerate nations, no matter how hopeless to human view their condition may be. While the door is open, therefore, let the labourer feel encouraged to hope for success. If the door is closed, then the church may have to wait, not ceasing to pray.

MISSION IN BRAZIL.

MR. SIMONTON'S JOURNAL.

We insert the concluding part of Mr. Simonton's journal of his visit to the southern provinces of Brazil, which has but lately reached us. The former part was published in the Record for April. We need not commend this narrative and its interesting notices to the attention of our readers.

Election of Deputies—One of the best of the Brazilian Clergy.

During my sojourn in San Paulo, the general election for members of the House of Deputies took place. Occurring every four years, and affording to the people an opportunity of wholly remodelling the government, it could not fail to remind me of electoral campaigns at home. The difference in the manner of conducting the election is, however, so great, and so characteristic of the two countries, that never, even for a moment, and when the strongest fit of abstraction and reverie was on me, did I lose my hold upon the waking consciousness that I was in Brazil and not in the United States. The process of voting for electors is dragged tediously through days; the electors, weeks after, assemble in "circles," to express the will of the people, so far as it accords with their own, and finally, months after, a general count is made of the voting in the "circles," and the result is definitely announced. Public meetings for discussing the issues of an election are unknown. This famous Anglo-Saxon plan of promoting any public interest seems contradictory to the character of this people. It will require time to root up the old habits and doctrines of the Portuguese school, and give them the manners as well as the rights of freemen. The parties which divide the nation are called Liberals and Conservatives, and these names are as exact in indicating their principles as are political names in general. The excitement and interest attending the present election were greater than for many previous years, and so strong a dissatisfaction was shown with the present administration as to lead many to believe that a radical revolution might not be far distant. Feeling keenly the evils of the present state of things, and seeing how far Brazil is left behind by other nations without her vast resources, many are disposed to heap all the blame on government. The enmity of some stops short with the party in power; that of others is directed against the very construction of the government. They declaim against the uselessness of a head, which naturally, from the possession and love of power, plots to restrict their liberties. It would be well for Brazil if her maladies admitted of so easy a remedy. In my opinion, the whole body politic is infected and corrupt, and nothing less than an entire moral, intellectual, and spiritual renovation, will introduce Brazil to the true path to prosperity and greatness.

Having been favoured with a letter to ———, who is referred to as one of the best educated of the Brazilian clergy, I called upon him. He received me with real kindliness of manner, which was not in the least diminished when I frankly informed him that I was occupied in the distribution and sale of the Bible in his province. Referring to the Papal Bull which prohibited the unrestricted circulation of the Bible, and denounced by name the societies engaged in that work, he said he was in favour of full toleration, and considered their end a worthy one. The pretensions of the Pope to infallibility he did not recognize, even though a Jesuitical party in his church cried out at any denial of this doctrine, "Blasphemy! blasphemy!" When I took leave of him, after repeated conversations, he presented me with a number of his printed sermons, written in a highly rhetorical and, by an English standard, inflated style, and only trenching on the Scripture in the Latin text prefixed to them, and by chance allusions to facts of Scripture history. One of the best of the clergy of this land, intelligent and liberal in his views and kindly in his manners, neither his sermons, his conversation with me, nor his manner of life in the community, indicated that he knew the gospel as the wisdom of God, and the power of God, unto salvation.

Distribution of the Scriptures at Sorocaba in spite of friars and bishops.

Sorocaba was the next point in which I made some delay. It is a city of from 5000 to 8000 inhabitants, and owes much of its importance to an annual fair for the sale of mules and horses. These are brought from the south in large droves, and distributed from this point to all parts of the empire. I soon learned of the visit of the Rev. Mr. Kidder to that city many years before, and that his Bibles, which were not the authorized version, were condemned by the bishop. The Brazilian gentleman who had entertained him invited me to his house, and showed me much kindness. On his showing me an excellent engraving of Luther, I expressed my surprise at his harbouring so arch a heretic. His reply was, "Is there then no toleration in Brazil?" I here made deposits of Bibles for sale in two of the principal shops. They sold readily, until the only friar in the city, true to the principles and instincts of his order, told one of the shopkeepers that these were "Protestant Bibles, and should not be sold." He, being an honest, simple-minded man, approving of the distribution of God's word, and yet not willing to disobey the church, told me that he would write to the bishop, and if he obtained permission would gladly receive a larger supply for sale. I showed him plainly the despotism of the system he was under, and his right and duty to read the word of God.

As is the case with all Brazilians, he was astonished when I told him that, by the laws of his church, he was not allowed to read the Bible without a written licence from his bishop, and that, even then, he must read a Bible with Roman Catholic notes. They almost all regard such a law as an insult to their good sense and liberties as freemen. The other shopkeeper, a man of education and high character, finds, in the approval of his good sense and his conscience, so firm a support, that he will continue to act as an agent for the sale of Bibles in spite of friars and bishops. He is one of a multitude in Brazil who are in open rebellion against all intolerance and despotism in church or state, and against the many abuses in the religion of Brazil. They openly declare that there must be a religious reformation before Brazil can prosper. I have since sent to him a large supply of Bibles and Testaments to meet the demand during the time of the approaching fair.

Appearance of the Country—Condition of the People—Conversations with priests and others.

From Sorocaba to Itapetininga is a distance of about fifty miles, in a westerly direction. It is a dreary journey to a body capable of fatigue, and a spirit alive to the saddening contrast between the boundless riches and beauties of nature and the beggarly poverty and unthrift of the miserable recipients of her favours. The only proofs that it is not a discovery of yesterday are the destruction of the first growth of timber by repeated burnings-over of the land, a cultivated field here and there, and occasional road-side hovels, with their lazy, dirty, clay and sallow-faced occupants lounging at the door, or stretched at length on the mud floors within. That sentimental philosophy which pictures happiness as consisting in a primitive, uncaring, simple life, of fewest wants, finds a sufficient answer in the condition of this country and people. They do enjoy peace, but it is the peace of the grave. Nothing short of a moral renovation will meet their case, and it should be welcomed, though it come attended with storm, and whirlwind, and earthquake. Among the few who do plant, one of the exciting topics of conversation concerns the propriety of bringing into use the new invention for turning over the soil, instead of continuing the old and still universal mode. In shorter terms, it is "plough versus hoe." It is a significant fact that not one in a thousand of Brazilians has ever seen a plough on his farm. Every foot of land cultivated is laboriously turned over with the hoe. I frequently took part in these discussions, of course an humble apologist of the plough. I found that few laurels were to be gathered by any severe attacks upon the hoe. We were regarded as plausible enthusiasts and innovators, with too little practical good sense to see how impracticable were our views. The favourite home-thrust of the champions of the hoe was the downright impossibility of getting through, over, or under a root. At this hitch we plough-men generally stuck, and, however loath, had to abandon the field.

It is a curious sight to see a considerable town, without any signs of cultivation, within miles of the small gardens surrounding it. Outside of the proper limits of Itapetininga a beautiful rolling prairie stretches away in every direction, whose soil, richly worthy of culture, has been trodden for a hundred years by a race too feeble and listless to give themselves to this trouble. The natural pasturage which it would afford is little used, and, not rarely, butter from Ireland, selling at seventy-five cents a pound, passes over it on its way inland. I often found myself trying to forecast the future of Brazil, when met by some more than usually glaring proof of the incapacity of its present inhabitants to develope its grand resources. They themselves confess and lament this, casting the blame upon the Portuguese, whose system and habits they have inherited. I have never before heard any people deal out such abuse to their ancestors as is frequently uttered by Brazilians against the Portuguese. What they say may all be true, and yet not excuse themselves. I succeeded in selling a number of Bibles and Testaments, and left others to meet a further demand. I fell into a discussion with a couple of priests upon the right and duty of the people to read the Scriptures. The arguments adduced by the principal spokesman were the threadbare allegations, that the Bible was difficult, the people stupid, and Protestants, who did study it, never could agree. They were very respectful, and, on parting, I was asked for a Bible by the most intelligent of them.

I next visited Itu, the residence of the bishop of the province. I was most hospitably entertained by one of his relatives and of the nobility of Brazil. He is a firm Roman Catholic, and spoke unwillingly of the abuses daily passing before his eyes. He tried to pass them over, but often could not restrain the strong language of condemnation, which he confessed his good sense was dictating. The bishop, who was much disliked and persecuted for his Jesuitism, had fixed his residence at Itu rather than San Paulo, which is the natural seat of the bishop. It was impossible to determine how far the very general opposition made against him was owing to his being a Jesuit, and how far to his effort to restrain the gross immorality of his clergy. Whoever are the attempted reformers, whether popes, bishops, emperors, or kings, and whether Rome or an insignificant bishopric of Brazil be the field of operation, the task is beyond their powers. The whole system is corrupt. I could give facts, conclusive enough, as respects this land, were it decent to make my readers blush for men whose lives unblushingly belie their profession.

Trial of a planter for the death of slaves—The Protestant "Padre"—German colonists; their urgent need of the Gospel.

From Itu, I proceeded to Campuras, the centre of a fine coffee-growing region. I noted, for a rarity, finding here a Brazilian town, evidently interested, and in their measure excited, by a great event taking place. It was the trial of a "fazendeiro" or planter, for causing the death of several slaves by brutal whipping. First of all, the criminal was interrogated by the judge. From this I learned, that on the denunciation of a female slave, and guided by her, the authorities had disinterred several bodies on his plantation, while burial is only permitted in public cemeteries. The prisoner alleged that the slaves had poisoned each other to injure himself. Whatever may seem the antecedent probability of such an occurrence, I am informed on all sides, that such cases are very frequent. It is very plain that the slaves of Brazil set a cheap value on life, and will kill themselves or their fellows, sometimes on a slight provocation, to be revenged of their masters, by involving him in a loss. An acquittal was brought in, though the whole community was satisfied that the crime had been perpetrated—the wife, who had escaped, being considered the real master on the plantation, and the true culprit.

The news that a Protestant padre was present, had evidently a quick and wide circulation among the assembled crowds, and I found myself the centre of some broad staring. I was, however, kindly treated by all with whom I came in contact, any incivilities, if such they could be called, going no greater length than simple astonishment that I had no crown on my head, no flowing black habit or frock reaching to my feet, and wore a beard.

After making every arrangement to put the Bible within the reach of all, as well as selling a number of copies, I prosecuted my journey to Simeira, Ibicaba, and San Joao de Rio Claro. This is one of the principal centres of German colonization, there being within forty miles of the latter place, from four to five thousand German and Swiss colonists. This immigration differs from that which has poured into the United States, in not being voluntary, but by contract. Wealthy Brazilian planters, through their agents in Europe, enter into contract with labourers and families there, the planter engaging to pay their passage to Brazil and to his plantation, to furnish the necessaries of life and a house, and to give a quantity of land proportioned to the forces of each family—the colonist binding himself to consider the money advanced for him a debt owing the planter, to till carefully his share of land, and to remain with the planter until his debt is either paid or security given for its payment. The nett proceeds of the coffee crop are divided between the parties. There are a number of colonies, and vary in size, from fifty to one thousand persons. No regard was paid to their religion in the selection, nor in their present treatment. More than one-half are Protestants.

I visited the colony of Ibicaba, which numbers nearly one thousand souls, and was deeply moved at the abandonment and destitution of these people. They are living without any of the means of grace, and in the midst of a very demoralized Roman Catholic population; from whom they in most cases differ only in name and in rejecting superstitions, and along with these, all religious belief. Their children are growing up in total ignorance of all that they ought to know. The colony of Ibicaba is the only one even of the large colonies which has a school, and it is effecting but little. There is no objection on the part of the government or the planters to the Protestants having their pastor and school-teacher; and they have contributed to the support of a Protestant pastor. One of these men invited a German pastor to visit the several points, and preach to the people, and himself defrayed all the expenses of the journey. This visit was joyfully received, and his appointments to preach always gathered a good audience. They are anxious to have him return, but his rationalistic faith leaves him little heart for such a work. To a German minister, with that simple faith in Jesus Christ, which worketh by love, here is a most interesting and important field. The numbers of these Protestants, their utter destitution, the immense influence they must exert on the future of Brazil, combine to plead for them with no common urgency.

If the Germans of the province of San Paulo were thoroughly vitalized by Christianity, their influence would soon become controlling among the weak and thriftless population which surround them. But if they grow up in true Roman Catholic ignorance and German unbelief, they can only differ from the multitudes around in plunging into deeper depths of sin. Who will pity and help their case? Being settled in colonies contiguous to each other, it is very practicable to reach them; and while it would not do to be entirely dependent on the support they out of their poverty could give, they would pay a considerable part of the expense of a mission to them.

Return to Santos—General remarks—Importance of Bible distribution in Brazil.

From San Joao de Rio Claro, I retraced my steps to Santos. Here I delivered to the editor of the Provincial Journal, which has the largest circulation, a considerable number of Bibles and Testaments, to be advertised in his paper, and sold at his office. The manner in which the Pope and all Jesuits are treated in almost every issue of this journal, would surprise those who have not received many other demonstrations of the tolerance of Brazilians, and their strong sympathy with any people struggling to be free. Although I had seen many proofs of a liberal and independent spirit in Rio, I was not prepared to find it ruling to such a degree through the interior. The number of Bibles already in possession of the people, was greater than I imagined. To what extent they are read, it is difficult to determine; but I fear the results of what has been done in this way are not large. The indifference which is so marked a trait of South American character, and the little inclination they feel to making a close study of anything, and much less of a book that is no more palatable in Brazil than in the United States, must moderate expectations of great results from this simple means.

It is a work of deep interest and importance to put the word of eternal life in the hands of those who do not possess it; and this can be done widely and successfully in all Brazil. But to rest here would be to forget one of the clear revelations of that authoritative word, that the preaching of the gospel is the great agency in the salvation of souls. Then, when the voice of the preacher is lifted up, to set forth vividly the way, the truth, and the life, and to press the message on heart and conscience, it is to be believed that many a Bible will be drawn from its covert, and many a truth, before dormant in the intellect, awakened to life. The very clamours of opposers will only call attention to the truth, and serve to hasten its spread and final victory.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLICATION ROOMS,

No. 821 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, donations of books and tracts, the appointment of Colporteurs, the editorial department of the Record and Sabbath-school Visitor, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to the Rev. William E. Schenck, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 821 Chestnut street.

All communications, reports, remittances of money, and orders for books, to be addressed to Mr. Winthrop Sargent, Superintendent of Colportage, and Business Correspondent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. Engles, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to James Dunlap, Esq., Treasurer.

OUR COLPORTAGE FUND.

The times upon which we have fallen furnish a severe test to the Christian liberality of our churches. It is far harder to give now, than it was to give an equal sum last year. Many individuals, too, are utterly unable, through a providential change of circumstances, to give as much as they then did. Hence there is imminent danger that the contributions to all the Boards will fall far short this year of the sum needful for the continuance of their work on the same scale as heretofore.

Our colportage work is now greatly hindered for want of money. The Colportage Fund is overdrawn to the extent of about $13,000, so that the Board not only feels unable at present to appoint any new colporteurs, but is even compelled to let many useful men, now in the field, cease from the work as their commissions expire. Under these circumstances, we earnestly appeal to the pastors and churches to give us each as large a contribution as they can, and to send it in at the earliest day they can, consistently with any systematic arrangements they may have previously made. We are happy to know that some of our pastors and sessions are resolved that the hard times shall cause no diminution in their contributions, and that they will, if possible, increase them, in view of the unusual necessities of the Boards.

"THE SOLDIER'S SERIES."

We wish to call the special attention of any who desire to do good, to the "Soldier's Series," a package of tracts adapted especially to the use of soldiers. It contains twelve exceedingly interesting tracts. Let those who have relatives or friends in the camp, procure and send to them this choice and suitable reading. The price is 10 cents. Persons sending this sum with 4 cents for postage, can have it mailed from the Depository to friends in camp whose address may be given.

COLPORTAGE IN THE CAMP.

The gathering of large numbers of men in the camp, opens a new and inviting field for the work of the colporteur. And the circumstances in which these recruits are placed, make it immensely important that they should be followed by Christian conversation, and supplied with suitable religious reading. Readers of the Record cannot fail to be interested in the report contained in the following columns, from a colporteur who has been labouring among the soldiers in and around Philadelphia. The Board has also made considerable grants of books and tracts for distribution among the soldiers in both the opposed armies in Virginia and in the West. We deeply lament that the lack of funds for colportage prevents us from doing far more among the soldiers in all parts of the country. Are there not some among those who may read these lines who will send us money for this special object.

THE COLPORTEUR AMONG SOLDIERS.

For three months past the Board has had a colporteur at work among the various companies and regiments collected successively in the city of Philadelphia. Below we give a part of his reports for the last two months. It will be seen that he has found great encouragement, and has been enabled to sow the good seed broadcast in that highly interesting field.

DISTRIBUTIONS IN MAY.

"During the month ending on the 25th of May, 1861, which the undersigned has been in the employ of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, labouring in this city and vicinity, among the soldiers who have volunteered for the public defence, three hundred and sixteen thousand pages of tracts have been distributed; sixty-three "Manuels of Devotion," and three copies of "James' Anxious Inquirer."

Armories of regiments and companies have been visited during the month, containing a total of regiments, 19; of companies, 139; and of men, 11,334.

When it was practicable, I put the tracts into the hands of the men myself; when they were not on hand, or it was otherwise inconvenient, I gave them to the officers, who in every case pledged their word to distribute them amongst the men under their command.

With one or two exceptions, my reception throughout was very cordial. The exceptions were chiefly among Roman Catholics.

About twenty thousand pages of tracts were delivered at the United States Arsenal, Grey's Ferry, which were packed along with the clothing, and forwarded to Washington. Fifteen thousand pages were also put in the pockets of the clothes made up at the Girard House for the use of the Pennsylvania troops.

INCIDENTS.

Several very interesting incidents occurred in the course of my visits to the armories. The officers received me with the utmost cordiality, and the men individually thanked me and the Board through me, for the tracts. On two occasions the officers in charge asked me to address their men on the subject of their soul's salvation, which I did as the Lord enabled me. On one occasion the men united in requesting me to address the Throne of Grace on their behalf, which I also did.

I have also had interesting conversations with individuals privately. Many seemed to realize the solemnity of their position, while others were indifferent or reckless. Amongst the former was Captain ———, who after some formal conversation, said to me, "Now I am going to fight in defence of the laws and institutions of my country. If I get killed, what is to become of my soul?" I saw from the way in which he put the question, that the idea underlying it was—that in consideration of the circumstances under which he was supposed to have fallen, God should compromise the matter of holiness, and not hold him to a strict account. I told him, if he were a true believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, his title to eternal life was beyond question. I then addressed myself to the idea which I saw was in his mind, and endeavoured to demonstrate that it is by the merits and blood of Jesus only, that God can be just, and yet the justifier of the ungodly—that for "all sorts and conditions of men" there is but one way to heaven. Acts iv. 12. On the next day I called again to see him, and gave him a copy of "James' Anxious Inquirer," for which he was very thankful, and promised to study it carefully and prayerfully.

I feel encouraged to hope that the publications of the Board, thus distributed, may not be unfruitful. May the Holy Spirit accompany the seed thus sown, and make it bear fruit abundantly to the honour and glory of God for Christ's sake. Amen.

DISTRIBUTIONS IN JUNE.

During the month which expired on the 25th of June, your colporteur has distributed amongst the soldiers quartered in this city and passing through it to other points, about two hundred thousand pages of tracts, one hundred and thirty-one copies of the "Manual of Devotion for Soldiers and Sailors," and six copies of the "Christian Soldier." In connection with the same agency, and with the consent of the Quarter-Master-General of this State, tracts have been placed in the pockets of about two thousand suits of military clothing.

Eighty-three companies, numbering about eight thousand three hundred men in the aggregate, have been visited and supplied. The plan originally contemplated for the carrying out of this mission—the distribution of single tracts by the colporteur—was found to be very objectionable. Owing to the hurry and excitement incident to the initiatory steps in military life, the men had neither time nor inclination to devote to the study of religious literature, and after they had vacated the armories, many tracts were found torn up and strewn over the floor. With the consent, therefore, of the agents immediately superintending this business, this plan has been abandoned, and during the last month, the tracts and devotional books have been assorted and made up into neat parcels of one hundred, and given into the care of the captain of each company, to distribute to his men when they get to camp, with the suggestion that he might lend them out, in the meantime, to any of the men desiring to read them, but, in this case, to require their return.

I have spoken to every captain, and to many of the subordinate officers, in the eighty-three companies, and, in every case, my reception has been most cordial. They have invariably thanked the Board, in the kindest manner, for the presents furnished them, and promised, not only to read them themselves, but to do all in their power to induce the men under their command to do likewise. I found them uniformly of opinion that the plan of camp-distribution was unquestionably the best; as men, when they have been a few days, either in camp or on sea, generally become very "hard up" for reading matter, and will read with avidity anything in this shape which they can pick up. Many of the officers and men who have served in other campaigns related anecdotes illustrating this fact. When they have met with a piece of old newspaper, torn, it might have been, diagonally, they have considered it a luxury, and have sat down and read it over and over again, even to the very point, though part of the column was torn away.

THE SOLDIER'S SERIES.

The Soldier's Series of tracts, in a package, recently brought out by the Board, are very popular with all ranks, and I think, with the blessing of God, destined to do much good. The neat and attractive shape in which they are gotten up renders them general favourites. The soldiers see at a glance that they have been prepared expressly for their use, and at no small cost, and this circumstance flatters and pleases them not a little.

CONVERSATIONS IN THE CAMP.

I have spent a good deal more time in the armories this month than the preceding one, and have spoken considerably more with the men. I have found every variety of character and sentiment amongst them, from the openly avowed scoffer, and profane swearer, to the meek and simple Christian. Of the latter class, I am happy to say, there are not a few, even amongst the rude and reckless soldiery, who have recently made a public profession of following the Lord Jesus, and who are resolved, with God's help, to manifest their Christianity in their life and conversation in the midst of a "crooked and perverse generation." With these it was gladdening and encouraging to speak, and I would fain hope that their worthy life and godly conversation may not be without its influence upon their more careless companions.

THE SELF-RIGHTEOUS SOLDIER.

I have also met with representatives of the moral and self-righteous class, who "do no harm," and hope to be saved by their own good deeds. As an instance of this kind, I will mention the case of a man, of genteel appearance, and some pretension to education, whom I met at one of the armories, and who received me very politely, and asked me to sit down and converse a while with him and the boys. He said he respected my calling very highly, and would not be where the slightest incivility should be offered me. He said he had read a good deal, and went to church "once in a while." I asked him if he hoped to go to heaven when he died. He answered, Yes. "Why do you hope?" "Because I hope I do as I ought to do." "Does the Bible anywhere teach that men will be saved by anything they can do?" Could not say. "What was Christ's object in coming into this world?" This question seemed to open a new idea to his mind, and after a short pause he replied, "Well, we all know that He came into the world to die for our sins." "And if Christ came into the world to die for our sins, and if sin was the great barrier between us and heaven, will not he have something to do with our salvation—nay, will not our salvation be entirely his work?" After this I endeavoured to demonstrate, not only to him, but to all present, man's condemned and helpless condition, through the offence of the first Adam, and the atonement and righteousness of the Second Adam, as the only way by which he can be restored to the favour of God. I quoted many passages from St. Paul, and finally gave him two tracts for his own special use—"Salvation by Grace," and the "Sin-bearer." He received them thankfully, and hoped he would not only profit by them himself, but that his wife and children might also be benefited by them. All the bystanders seemed deeply interested in the conversation, and hoped that we might meet again. Cases of this kind are met with every day.

Then there are others who believe in "rewards and punishments," for the "deeds done in the body," but who do not believe in "eternal punishment." And there are yet others, who believe everything the Bible teaches on this subject, but act as if all its solemn sanctions and denunciations were but fables. I have endeavoured, as far as the Spirit enabled me, to say a word suited to the case of every one with whom I conversed, and to recommend the tracts and other books to their special consideration; adding that they were the gifts of kind Christian friends, who accompanied them with their prayers and wishes; that they were written by the best men in the church, and were not placed in their hands without some trouble and much expense. It was therefore hoped they would endeavour to profit by them, which was the best and only compensation the donors desired. The truth has been thus brought to their ears, and within their reach. God the Spirit only can bring it home to their hearts."

J. R.

THE SABBATH-SCHOOL VISITOR.

The improvements introduced into the Sabbath-school Visitor have met with a highly encouraging measure of appreciation. Its circulation, which was last year reported at 60,000, has increased to 75,000. Warm testimonials as to the esteem in which it is held, are constantly received. Great care is taken in regard to the paper, typography, and engravings used, and it is believed that no paper for juvenile readers, issued in this or any other country, is its superior in these respects. Every effort is likewise made to adapt its contents to the minds of children, yet also to make them as rich in religious instruction as possible. The aid of pastors, Sabbath-school superintendents, and teachers, is earnestly requested in extending the circulation of the Visitor.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. Letters of John Calvin. Compiled from the original manuscripts and edited with historical notes, by Dr. Jules Bonnet. Vol. IV. Translated from the Latin and French language, by Marcus Robert Gilchrist. Pp. 467. Price $1 30, or $5.20 for the four volumes. Postage 30 cents.

The issue of the fourth volume completes this interesting work. All who have read the former ones will hasten to procure and read this volume also. The fact that this undertaking, which failed to be carried through in Europe after having been undertaken there, has now been successfully completed here, is a just cause for self-congratulation by our Presbyterian Church in these United States. The liberal pecuniary aid of a gentleman in New York has enabled the Board thus to complete this costly work, and to offer it at so moderate a price.

This fourth volume contains a copious Index to all the four volumes, by the aid of which any name or topic in them may be at once referred to. This index adds greatly to the value of the volumes.

II. The Child's Pilgrim's Progress. Part First. 32mo. pp. 192. Price 25 cents. Postage 3 cents.

This little volume is merely a simplification of the Pilgrim's Progress, for the use of little children. The editor says: "No endeavour has been made in this little book to improve Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. To do so, would be simply absurd. To bring prominently into view scenes supposed to be most attractive to children has been attempted, and, while the Dreamer's narrative is preserved, others of less striking character have been thrown into the back ground. The quaint, simple language of the incomparable Bunyan is for the most part retained."

III. The Child's Pilgrim's Progress. Part Second. Christiana and her Children. 32mo. pp. 192. Price 25 cents. Postage 3 cents.

This is a companion volume to the preceding. "A mother leading her children through a sinful world up towards Mount Zion, presents a picture of touching interest. Our great limner (Bunyan) here shows it to us in hallowed light, reflected from the word of God.

IV. Emma Allen, or the Lord's Prayer in Daily Life. 18mo. pp. 162. Price 20 and 25 cents. Postage 6 cents.

A truly beautiful and instructive little volume. The spirit of our Lord's prayer is admirably exhibited in the narrative, which is well written and adapted to make a happy impression on juvenile readers.

V. Alice Rosedale, or the power of a constant Christian Life. By Mrs. Caroline L. Blake. 18mo. pp. 186. Price 25 and 30 cents. Postage 6 cents.

The intent of the book is exhibited in its title-page. It will well repay a careful perusal.

VI. Mary Reed. By the author of "George Miller and his Mother." 18mo. pp. 324. Price 35 and 40 cents. Postage 9 cents.

Those who have read "George Miller," sometime since issued by the Board from the pen of this author, will not desire any other recommendation of Mary Reed, than to know it came from the same pen.

JAMES DUNLAP, Treasurer.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.

No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St. Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

WHAT IS WANTED.

What is wanted to enable our church to carry forward its benevolent enterprises with the necessary vigour, is simply care and effort on the part of every pastor and church session in our connection. Six cents a week from every member of our church in the States not torn by civil war on their own soil, or cut off from communication with our ecclesiastical centres, will furnish our church organizations with the means of prosecuting their labours with undiminished vigour. The particular facts on which this statement is founded we may present somewhat in detail in the next Record. Who that knows the means and spirit of our people can doubt, that a very moderate effort on the part of each pastor and session would secure this sum from our churches. Cannot even the poorest among us lay aside a cent a day for God's cause? A wide acquaintance among our feeblest churches satisfies us that we have very few that could not do even more than this. The great want is some one in each church to see to it, that each member is invited to swell the dwindling stream of contribution.

STATEMENT.

We have now on file applications from one hundred and two churches, calling for $39,250. Twenty-eight of these asking for $9,750, have furnished the necessary information, and are only awaiting our receipt of funds to aid them. Twenty-five of these churches asking for $8,450, have finished houses imperilled by debt, or unfinished ones in such a state of progress that they cannot stop without the loss of a large part of what has been expended. It is represented to us, that in most of these cases the withholding of aid will necessitate the sacrifice of the church edifice and the disbanding of the church. Two or three hundred dollars would in nearly every instance avert this result. The Board has hardly enough on hand to meet appropriations already made, and can now give aid only as funds are received. Ten cents from each member of our church would furnish ample means to save our feeble flocks from dispersion. Trying as are the times, can you not secure at least that sum from your people for your fellow-disciples in distress? We plead not at present for new church enterprises, however much they may be needed, but for sanctuaries and churches caught in the general crash. We plead not for means to carry on the Board. Its expenditures, always as small as was consistent with efficiency, have from the beginning been almost entirely borne by a few individuals, and this is expected to continue. We plead simply for poor churches, put in peril by causes beyond their control.

Especially would we plead with our churches in the North-west. During the last six years the Board has expended nearly $55,000 in aid of churches in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, and has received less than $16,000 from our eleven hundred churches in those States. Other portions of the church have cheerfully and freely aided the North-west in its past struggles. Shall not these days of trial prove that the North-western church is rich in labours of love towards suffering brethren, most of whom dwell on its own soil?

FOUR REASONS.

Allow us to suggest four prominent reasons why aid should be given to the Church Extension enterprise in this crisis.

1. True economy demands it. One of the Secretaries of the Board of Domestic Missions said in the last General Assembly, "Either the want of edifices, or the burden of debt on those (churches) that have houses, is the great cause of continued demands on the Domestic Board. The very best method of economizing the missionary funds is to build houses."

2. The life of many churches seems now to depend on their receiving aid. Some churches are now at the point where a house of worship or a dissolution seem to be the only alternatives. To a much larger number the removal of their debt or their disbanding, is a speedy necessity.

3. The ministry to the saints requires it. To help our fellow-disciples in distress, is a paramount duty. This is obvious from Paul's declaration, (Gal. vi. 10,) "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Many of our poor brethren are now bowing under an intolerable burden, from which they should be relieved.

4. The honour of religion demands such aid. In not a few instances, church debts and unfinished church edifices are bringing shame on the cause of Christ, and giving the enemies of our Redeemer occasion to blaspheme. Shall not those who love our Lord, as far as in them lies, shield his cause from needless reproach?

SIMULTANEOUS COLLECTIONS.

The action of the General Assembly of 1861 on the subject of simultaneous collections is especially worthy of the attention of all our churches that have no fixed times for collections. As a church, we know little of the amazing power of simultaneous effort. It is in this power that a well-trained army exceeds an undisciplined multitude. It is by this power that vast fabrics are lifted from their solid foundations. If the sacramental host of God's elect is to conquer the world—if the nations are to be lifted from the depths of woe into which they have sunk—it must be, in large part, by simultaneous effort on the part of the saints. Humanly speaking, the chariot of salvation will not roll over the earth until the myriad hands of Christians, with one accord, lay hold of its goodly form and urge it on its glorious way.

Outside of our large cities there seems to be no insuperable objections to the general adoption of the times suggested by the Assembly. There are some great and manifest advantages that would result from their adoption by our churches. According to the Assembly's recommendation, July and August are specially set apart for Church Extension; at least, collections during these months will not interfere with any other objects recommended by the Assembly. Will not our brethren who have no fixed times for the purpose, take up a collection for the Board of Church Extension before August closes.

The following is the Assembly's action on the subject:

Whereas, Many of our churches do not contribute to our benevolent enterprises, and it is desirable to test the power of simultaneous effort, and whereas an emergency has arisen requiring the coöperation of all our churches to save our Boards from most serious embarrassment; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That this Assembly earnestly request all our churches that have no fixed times for the purpose to take up annual collections as follows, viz:—For the Board of Domestic Missions on the first Sabbath of November; for the Board of Foreign Missions on the first Sabbath of January; for the Board of Education on the first Sabbath of March; for the Board of Publication on the first Sabbath of May; for the Board of Church Extension on the first Sabbath of July; for the Disabled Ministers' Fund on the first Sabbath of September.

Resolved 2. That in all cases where it may be found impracticable to take up the annual collection on the days designated, it be recommended that the collection be taken as soon thereafter as possible.

Resolved 3. That the different Boards be directed to aid this effort at simultaneous collections by all proper means within their reach.

Resolved 4. That the Assembly respectfully solicits the coöperation of the conductors of the various religious newspapers, circulating in our churches, in the effort now undertaken.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST

TO ANY OF THE

BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

SELFISHNESS, THE GREAT SIN OF THE CHURCH—THE DUTY OF PASTORS.

God is love, and creation is intended to manifest that love, glowing in all his creatures, and shining in all his works. Sin, so far as it could, has thwarted this blessed design. The happiness of the individual, and the mass, has been fearfully invaded. The scenes of primeval paradise have been succeeded by the frightful feuds, discords, and wars, which have cursed our race. Selfishness is the master-sin of fallen man, and in its outworkings, opposes the merciful designs of Divine benignity. The gospel was revealed to repair the desolations of the fall; in other words, to overcome selfishness. The Son of God came down, as the embodiment of Divine love, and poured from this infinite fountain blessings on the race; and the design of his teaching, and his death-agony, was, to overcome selfishness, to dethrone the idol, and restore the worship of love infinite. Religion is progressive, in as far as this result is achieved; and the ministers of religion succeed in proportion as they overthrow this idolatry, and disenthral the soul of the believer of this iron bondage. The war they wage is against selfishness; and the triumph of Christianity is complete only when every thought is brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ.

The Christian is partially sanctified; the love principle struggles with the selfish principle. The edification of the church is secured by the triumph of holy love, when the man looks no more on his own things, but those of Jesus Christ. We are not surprised to find selfishness in the church; nor amazed when, in the depression of godliness, it ascends to the throne, and sits in the temple, as God. The great sin of the church, in modern days, is its selfishness. The glow of holy love which came in its fervour over the early disciples; which melted into one mass all hearts, so that they had all in common, and exulted in sacrifices for the Saviour, was succeeded by a cold, calculating spirit, which reads of their charity with admiration, and fancies itself lost in the romance of benevolence. The age of self-denial is gone; that of calculation and cold economists has succeeded, and the glory of the church is eclipsed. It is not now, how much can I do for Christ? how far can I go in my self-denying exertions? but, at how small a rate can I escape? It is not now, the breaking of the box of precious ointment on the feet of Jesus; but, "Why was this waste?" The parsimony, not the necessity of the church, has taken the golden shields of Solomon from the walls of the temple, and hung in their place bucklers of brass. The transports of early Christianity, thinking no sacrifice too great, astonished heathendom; the colder temperament of the modern makes the world wonder, and ask in what they surpass her votaries?

Then, how far has that minister of Christ performed his duty, who has not grappled with this evil? How can the edification of the body of Christ proceed unless this evil be abated? And this leads us to the practical question, whether the backwardness of our people in contributing to the missionary cause is not chargeable to the ministers? I know the restiveness of congregations when money matters are introduced, and the claims of dying millions are presented; and ministers shrink back from the matter, and leave their people in the state they so much love. Are our ministers sufficiently acquainted with the grand matters in the missionary field? sufficiently alive to the mighty struggles which approach? No man can instruct, unless he be himself informed. A pious mind responds to the call of Christ. If the matter is presented, and held up in its overpowering greatness, the Christian mind will feel. This we must believe, or doubt the piety of thousands. The meagre attendance on the monthly concert, so symptomatic of this languid ignorance, may be the fault of the minister. Has he prepared his own mind—traversed the map of the world in search of the heaven-lighted spots where Jesus is preached? Or, has he computed the swell of that population which, in our own land, rolls onward to the Western sea, and gazed mournfully on its destitutions? Has he, in his own mind, any connected view of the greatness of the harvest, and the fewness of the labourers? Many men will hardly suspect their ignorance, until they sit down to an examination of their information. A good, practical address, at the meeting of Synod or Presbytery, is a rare occurrence.

One great, but much neglected, part of our duty is, to raise the tone of missionary feeling, and draw forth the hoarded stores. Prudence in this, as in other matters, is needful. But then, the cry which proceeds from our several Boards is to be echoed along the whole front of the sacramental host; the appeal should be passed from shepherd to shepherd, until all the flock shall hear. I am persuaded no duty is more imperative. The world does not present such a body of men as the ministers of our church; so concordant in the great matters of faith and practice. There is a wonderful unanimity; the gospel is preached faithfully, purely. But one thing we lack—a courageous dealing with the master-evil, selfishness. The idol is in the sanctuary, and must be expelled. Our people are to be taught, at the risk even of their displeasure, their duty to sustain the cause of Christ. A proper estimate of the work to be done, and an appreciation of their share of the burden, is duty. The evil is, a want of systematic benevolence. Thousands never give; it is our duty to make the appeal, to have it carried to them, and to endeavour to convince them that for the use of this, as well as of every other talent, they must render a solemn account. Many of our people, I am inclined to believe, are inactive for want of proper instruction. If so, then so far is the minister at fault. If the man has not come up to the help of the Lord, he was not summoned. We are not to presume that men have a full knowledge of their duty.

If every pastor would enter upon this work, and would first surcharge his own soul with the awful necessities of the world, be familiar with the glorious enterprises of Christian benevolence, and then, imploring God's blessing, go before his people, and fire them with his own zeal, how soon would this benevolence, swelling into the majesty of a river, and fed by a thousand tributaries, roll onward, until, like a sea, it should cover all lands? How shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they understand unless some one teach them? Let every minister, whose eye shall rest on these humble lines, resolve that this much neglected duty shall be performed. Let him resolve, in God's strength, to grapple with this evil until it be overcome. It may be unpleasant to one whose stipend is irregularly paid, to bring before his people any object which may seem to increase his own embarrassment; the issue of the trial, we are persuaded, will show, that so far as his people contribute to the blessed cause, his own comfort will be enhanced. Himself an example to the flock in this respect, let him urge them to give as the Lord may prosper them. How soon would the contributions to our several Boards be doubled, yea, increased four-fold? I feel that this is no small matter; it is a solemn responsibility, and we are answerable to God for the course of our people in this, as in other respects. The tide of selfishness may roll through the church; let us at least do our duty, and labour to check its awful flow. In this eventful period, our church expects every man to do his duty. The struggles of the great day of Almighty God draw on apace; the tokens of the times are full and impressive. What we do now may accomplish a work which will be too late next year. Could these lines, humble as they are, reach the eye of every dear brother in our church, I would ask him to give some consideration to these expressions, and, in the name of Him whose love was infinite, determine at once to bring the several causes of benevolence in which our church engages, fully, clearly, distinctly, before the mind of each communicant, and taking his seat by each one, ask, with a full heart and tearful eye—"How much owest thou unto thy Lord?"

REVIEW OF FIVE YEARS.

Illinois, July 2, 1861.

We have worshipped in schoolhouses and a church borrowed from another denomination until six weeks ago. We have now one of the neatest houses of worship in the country, owned and built by the congregation, at a cost of $1,800. Sixteen children have been baptized, and a good number have recited the whole of the Catechism. I have averaged only about two sermons a week. This may appear a small amount of actual preaching when compared with the amount of travel. During the first year, I lived at Marengo, and travelled, every other week, a distance of thirty-six miles and back. Since then, I have lived at Winnebago, and have travelled, every Sabbath, except when hindered by sickness or absence on duty, a distance of twelve, sixteen, twenty-three, or twenty-five miles, taking my family the round with me, if they went to meeting at all. Counting in week-day visiting, &c., I think I have driven horse and buggy in these five years about twelve thousand miles. One cause of so much travel and so little preaching, has been the want of a parsonage or residence of some kind in the bounds of the church.

I set out in this church with the hope of seeing a church grow up according to my notion of what a country church should be. I had a pleasant people, and a delightful country to encourage me in this attempt; and at present this church is one of the pleasantest, both as to people and location, that I know of in the West.

Some of the chief things I wished to see accomplished were these:

1st. Meetings every Sabbath. To do this I have given my whole time to this field for the last four years, though the size of the church, and the support given, seemed only to call for half the time.

2d. A missionary church; having Sabbath-schools, prayer-meetings, &c., in different parts of the neighbourhood. In this I have not been successful. One Sabbath-school has been kept up during the summer, but I have not been able to "set the people a-work" enough to take hold of other schools on the outskirts with much effect; and living at so great a distance myself, I could not attend night-meeting regularly.

3d. A meeting-house. Hard times retarded this for a while, but it is now a fact.

4th. A manse, or residence of some kind for the minister, within the bounds of the church—a failure so far. Neither the congregation nor myself can at present furnish a house for a minister to live in convenient to the church. Three things may account for this failure, not only in this case, but others, also.

1. Some people seem to regard a "hired minister" much as Western farmers regard their Irish tenants; as having only a temporary connection with them, and hence, for the time, may "find their own shanty." 2. A false delicacy on the part of the minister about urging this matter, lest he be considered working for his own interest. But nothing seems to me a more positive necessity for the good of a country church in the West than a parsonage, and hence ministers ought to advocate the matter in all prudent and proper ways. 3. The minister may be able of himself to own or rent property outside of the congregation, and can live without claiming that his rent be paid. People cannot see why he ought not to be willing to give his rent, and travel a long road, rather than ask them to lay out so much money. They do not consider how many interests of the flock suffer, because "the kids" are not "fed beside the shepherd's tent;" or that they could retain and support a minister much easier by having a place for him to live; or that the amount paid for rent, or given by the minister towards his own support, would soon build a house that would be a permanent good to the congregation. I still hope to see this accomplished here.

5th. Congregational singing. Whatever may be said of choir-singing in cities, I have no hope of good from it in a country congregation. False notions inculcated by singing teachers, &c., have hindered us in this to some extent. Still, something has been done, and we have some encouragement for the future.

6th. Regular contributions to religious and benevolent objects. In this we have succeeded, at least in "going through the motions." We have taken collections for all our Boards and the Fund for Disabled Ministers nearly every year, besides paying Presbyterial assessments, &c., &c.

Other things have been attempted, some with and some without success.

Yours in the gospel,

W. P. C.

CHURCHES BUILT IN TROUBLOUS TIMES.

Missouri, June 1861.

We deemed it of such great importance to the advance of Presbyterianism in this section, that we have made great exertion to accomplish this desirable end, to wit, to have houses of our own; and we have succeeded. We entered both the same week. The want of suitable houses of worship has heretofore been one of our most serious hindrances, which now, by the blessing of God, has been removed. The house in Albany is free from all casualty of debt. Over the one at Samson Creek hangs a debt, which will tax our people there much beyond their means, unless they are aided from abroad. But we can say, "Hitherto hath the Lord blessed us," and we feel sure by his blessing, we will succeed in removing this difficulty. In both churches, we have not as many as forty communicants, poor in this world's goods, with the pressure of an almost entire failure of crops on last year, the very unusual stringency in money matters, and worst, most depressing of all, the fierce contention of political factions, that would turn the energies of the people to war and bloodshed—amid all these discouragements this has been accomplished. The difference of sentiment among the people in this locality, with regard to the "crisis" that is upon the land, rendered it peculiarly alarming. Indeed, it seemed at times that the awful curse of anarchy was inevitable; but we hope now the principles of "law and order" are prevailing. But sometimes we hear the suppressed murmurings of the turbid waters of the opposing faction yet. God grant that it may never break forth: simply to preserve the equanimity of the Christian mind in such circumstances, is of itself a great work. And in order to this, the accomplishment of the enterprises spoken of above, has been a means used for this purpose. I conclude by one single remark. If this report should meet the eye of any of our brethren wishing to emigrate, I would say, now is the golden moment to occupy this field. I may safely say that real estate, from various causes, may be obtained for about one-fourth its former value; and the most wicked characters are now becoming restless, and so anxious to get away; the change this locality is undergoing does not suit them. How exceedingly desirable is it, their places should be occupied by better citizens. Providence seems to be opening the way for the advance of our cause, so let us enter in and possess the land.

I am your brother in Christ, J. N. Y.

THE STRAITS OF GOD'S SERVANTS.

M——, Illinois, July 1861.

Dear Brother—All things are going on quietly and harmoniously. Our great trouble, to outward appearance, is the present prostration of business. My churches have paid scarcely anything on salary this spring or summer. They have, many of them, great cribs of corn, but the market has been such as to bring them no amount when they did sell any. For some weeks corn has been worth, at our place, from 10 to 15 cents per bushel. My wife has earned something by teaching music, and keeping a couple of boarders, which has helped to procure the means of living, though by it she has overtaxed her strength, so that we fear it will be no gain in the end. Really the future looks dark as to support: I hope we may not distrust Him who feeds the young ravens when they cry.

Your brother in the Lord, J. C. B.

NOTICE.

The Board of Education, at their regular monthly meeting on the 2d of August, unanimously determined to go forward, and in reliance on Divine Providence, and the concurrence of the churches, to redeem all the pledges made to candidates for the ministry under their care. This will give great satisfaction to the Professors in our Seminaries, and to the officers of Colleges and Academies, and will remove a heavy burden from the minds of more than half a thousand young men. This action is an eminently wise one. A different decision would undoubtedly have greatly embarrassed both our young men and many of our institutions. We trust the churches will approve of this high resolve of the Board, and manifest their approbation by prompt and liberal contributions. God is calling upon his people, both by his providence and his grace. He is shaking the nations before his chariot, as it rolls forward on the wide field of the world, and calling large numbers of labourers to the work of reaping. How marvellous is it that the stir and tumult of war have not diminished the accessions to the church's roll of candidates! The Board, for the past quarter, report twenty-five new candidates—a number considerably in advance of the number received during the corresponding period of last year. We are persuaded that such a fact as this will be rightly interpreted and acknowledged by the church.

This resolution of the Board is intended to shape their policy for the entire year. It would have been unwise to have restricted this action to the past, or the current quarter; as our young men could not be expected to enter upon the studies of a year with no guaranty from the Board, beyond the assurance of a quarter's appropriation. We trust that our churches will rally around the Board in the present national emergency, and enable them to perform all they have promised.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

WHO IS TO BLAME?

Who is to blame for the present embarrassment of all our Boards? This question may be answered negatively and positively.

1. Negatively. The General Assembly is not to blame. The Assembly has discussed the subject of Systematic Beneficence year after year, and, at the late meeting in Philadelphia, this all-important subject occupied a large share of the attention of the body. We subjoin the discussion, that the church may have the benefit of the thoughts of men who have studied the subject, and whose experience and position entitle them to a respectful hearing.

SYSTEMATIC BENEVOLENCE.

Rev. Dr. Studdiford, from the Committee on Systematic Benevolence, made a report on that subject, which contained the statement that for the last year this cause had not made progress. Fewer Presbyteries than formerly had reported The report made certain recommendations, which will appear when the report is published. Dr. Studdiford made a brief statement explanatory of the report and of the progress of this cause, the reasons of its slow advance, and setting forth the importance of it. He detailed the statistics of the number of contributing churches; and in an earnest manner urged the importance of more vigorous and well-sustained efforts to bring up all our churches to this work. He referred to the Methodist system of finance and the vigour with which it is worked; and asked why Presbyterians could not be as faithful and efficient as Methodist Bishops and Conferences? He suggested that the column for Miscellaneous be discontinued and replaced by a column of Bible Contributions.

The report was accepted.

Rev. Dr. Dickson, from the Committee appointed last year at Rochester, to report on the subject of Systematic Benevolence, reported. Dr. Locke, the chairman of the Committee, being absent, sent the report through him, which, being submitted to the Committee, was modified and agreed to. Dr. Dickson added some very interesting remarks illustrative of the best method of advancing this cause. He detailed his own experience, showing the great importance of beginning with the children, training them to the habit of giving, and of cultivating in their hearts the principles of benevolence. Beneficence must become more of a principle, and less of an impulse. More of a habit, and less a spasmodic effort. This could only be done by beginning with the children. Benevolence must be made a part of education—a part of the religious training of the young; and when once we have fully opened the fountain in the hearts of a full generation, the streams will flow on and be more perennial. It was vain to try to reach fully the present incorrigible generation. We must begin with the children. Dr. Dickson continued in an earnest and impressive strain, urging the duty of the efficient organization of the churches, and especially of the Sabbath-schools, and pointing at the great benefits to the cause of piety and evangelization that must result.

Rev. Dr. Schenck had listened to these reports, especially the latter, with intense interest. It was the department of most importance. He had listened with great interest to Dr. Dickson's remarks; he admired the diligence, system, and success of Dr. Dickson's efforts with the children of his charge in Westminster Church, Baltimore. Great results had followed, and it was a demonstration of the value of the plan of eliciting small contributions. He spoke in commendation of the North Church, Chicago, mentioned by Mr. C. A. Spring. He dwelt upon the desirableness of bringing up the children in habits and principles of benevolence, and gave instances of the happy and life-enduring effects of proper training of the young. What a blessed thing it would be when a whole generation of such should arise! Dr. A. Alexander had predicted such a time; and for this we ought to labour and pray. The church cannot accomplish her mission until this is done.

The Moderator said the discussion could proceed no further until a motion was made.

A motion was made to adopt the reports. The reading of them was called for. Dr. Studdiford read his, which was considered seriatim. In progress of which

Rev. Mr. Stone expressed the opinion that the defects of our operations consisted not in the lack of system, but the lack of energy, and patience, and perseverance in working them. The systems of systematic beneficence were well digested, perfect enough, well compacted. He had no fault to find with them; any one of them, if well worked, would accomplish the ends aimed at. But they were not well-worked. There was a lack of regularity and industry in carrying them out. If the Presbyteries, pastors, and sessions would only be diligent, the whole body of the people could be reached. Where is the fault in the working? Not in the church courts. The Assembly, the Synod, the Presbytery, all vote and talk right. The mind-work is well done. Like the Dutch burgomaster, they smoke round the whole subject every six months, but it ends in smoke. The things talked about are not done. We don't go to the people—to the individual members, and ask them for their contributions, great and small. Put the thing right before the adult members of the church. He would not wait for the children to come forward; that keeps this cause in abeyance. He had no objection to educate the children, but what we need is immediate action. If every pastor would do his duty, the ruling elders would do theirs, the people would do theirs, and our treasuries would be filled. He objected to the custom of some contributors selecting pet objects and rejecting others. It embarrassed the Boards, and was itself an injury to the cause of the Boards rejected by the contributor, not only by his withholding his contribution, but setting an example to others to do so.

Rev. Dr. Edwards feared that we were in danger of being carried away, in our ardour, to the adoption of an unsound principle. He did not believe that the present generation was incorrigible. He did not believe that the children were our only hope. The children of God, of adult life, church-members, ought to be taught, and if taught, they will do their duty. He contended that children do not give from principle in a majority of cases. They ought to be taught and trained to this part of religion—but we must not neglect the adult members. We are in danger of suffering from theories, and he deemed the line of remarks of the brethren Utopian. He objected to the interminable list of contributions; and objected especially to having a separate day for a contribution to Colportage. He thought the Board of Publication should sustain its salesmen without a special collection.

Dr. Studdiford explained. He thought the last speaker had misapprehended the tone of the Report. They did not recommend appealing to the children to the exclusion of adults.

Rev. Mr. Hubbard wished to advert to this point, viz., that the pocket was the best medium of reaching the conscience. He would propose that no aid be given to any church which would not contribute something, however small, to each of our Boards.

The Rev. Mr. Crozier, of Illinois, dissented from Dr. Dickson's opinion of the incorrigibility of the present generation. He contended that until we based this matter of giving upon religious principle, and made an appeal to the conscience, the strength of the church could not be drawn out. We must put it to the people on broad, scriptural grounds. We must impress the great truth, that giving is as much a part of religion as prayer, praise, or the sacraments. He insisted that first-day collections (the scriptural plan) is the most efficient. He related his experience as a pastor and an agent, and urged that frequent, regular, and never-omitted collections, even when little is given at a time, was the best way, and the most efficient. A dime on Sabbath will put forty cents a month in the treasury; but a monthly collection will only put twenty-five cents. He closed with an earnest appeal to the brethren to go actively and persistently to work in the cause.

Mr. E. B. Miller (ruling elder) objected to the shape of the report in relation to the action of the Board of Church Extension. He proposed a negative allusion to the conduct of that Board in regard to the Children's Church at St. Anne. He wished it to be said, that the Assembly did not disapprove of their action in that matter.

Rev. Mr. Vaill considered the two reports as equivalent in intention, and substantially the same. He considered that the present generation was in process of being schooled into the doctrine that alms-giving was a part of worship. Our people were learning this fast, and its effects were showing themselves. He would not have it otherwise. This was the true doctrine, and the true practice was coming in slowly. But whilst he rejoiced in this, he was also favourable to bringing up the children of the church in the doctrine, the duty, and the habit of systematic contribution. Let us not neglect the adult portion of our congregations, but do the best we can with them; whilst, as a means of securing a more glorious future, let us train the children. He would say no more, but yield the floor to a gentleman who, on this subject, was higher authority, because possessed of more practical experience than any man he knew. He alluded to Mr. C. A. Spring, of Chicago, to whom he yielded the floor. But as that gentleman did not spring to his feet, his friend's call did not avail to secure him the floor, which was obtained by

Mr. Clark, of Detroit, (ruling elder) who objected to the omission of the column for the report of Miscellaneous contributions, and gave as a reason for retaining it, that a large part of the contributions of the churches would be unmentioned if this column were omitted. He thought the Secretary of Church Extension had, in his remarks, underrated the average amount of contributions from each member. He thought the average amount larger than this. He professed to amend the report, so as to enjoin the giving of at least four cents a week from each member.

Mr. C. A. Spring felt oppressed by the call of his brother, (Mr. Vaill,) he was unworthy of it, but still he would say that in view of what had been done, and prepared to be done, in regard to interesting the children in this great work, he could not but think it a fulfilment of the prediction at the close of the ancient dispensation, that the heart of the fathers should be turned to the children, and of the children to the fathers. He told an anecdote illustrative of the difficulty of casting out the covetous devil. A Methodist clergyman was in low circumstances—out of meat for his family. He made his condition known to a brother of the church, poor as himself. He counselled him to go to brother Newcomer, who had recently been admitted to the church. He went. Brother Newcomer said, "Go to my smoke-house, and get a ham—take a good big one." The pastor went, and got one weighing some twenty pounds. As the giver saw him carrying it, his avaricious feeling rose—he struggled with it, got the mastery of it, and said, "Brother, go back and get two—and take rousers this time." He afterwards composed the struggle in his mind, and said the only way to kill the covetous devil out of the heart, was to spite him by increased charity; said he had told the devil if he wouldn't stop tempting him, he'd give away all the hams in his smoke-house. He urged the necessity of beginning with the children, so as to eradicate from their young minds, by proper training and instruction, this covetous propensity.

The extent and ability of this discussion, as well as the subsequent action, are sufficient evidence of the interest taken by the Assembly in the subject of systematic beneficence. The Assembly has done its duty, let the blame rest where it may.

Again: the blame does not rest with the people. The people are ready and willing to give. The people, in their congregational capacity, have never, when an opportunity was given, refused to contribute. We challenge any minister or elder, in our denomination, to give an instance to the contrary. The people may not give much, but, when asked, they always give something; and on this, however small, depends the life of our Boards.

2. Positively, the blame is to be distributed between the Presbyteries and the church sessions. There are many of our sessions (nearly one-half of them) who have either so little interest in the operations of our Boards, or are so destitute of moral courage to face their people, that they do not give them the opportunity of contributing to the support of the aggressive movements of our church in that field into which she has been sent by her exalted Head. Surely such sessions are blameworthy.

Presbyteries are, in many instances, deservedly sharers in the blame resting upon sessions. Wherever sessional neglect is allowed to pass unnoticed, or where the entire influence and moral power of Presbytery is not brought to bear upon the delinquent pastor and elders, great blame must attach to the Presbytery. The Assembly entrusts its plan of systematic beneficence chiefly to its Presbyteries, and where the Presbytery does not employ all its authority to carry out the will of the Assembly, there rests upon it the guilt of unfaithfulness to its high stewardship as the servant of Christ.

We here plead, not for one Board, but for all our Boards; not for ourselves, but for Christ, and a perishing world, groaning under the burden of the curse. Brethren, arise to the help of the Lord. Forget not the Boards in your prayers; withhold not your contributions in this the hour of our need.

SPEECH OF DR. CHESTER BEFORE THE ASSEMBLY.

TRIBUTE TO DR. VAN RENSSELAER; THE NECESSITY OF PRESBYTERIAL SUPERVISION OF CANDIDATES.

Rev. Dr. W. C. Mathews, from the Committee to which was referred the report of the Board of Education, made a report.

The report being under consideration,

The Rev. Dr. Chester, Secretary of the Board, began his remarks with an eloquent and impressive tribute to the late Corresponding Secretary, the Rev. Dr. Van Rensselaer. He spoke of his lovely, well-balanced, and unique Christian character; of his singular devotion to all the interests of the Presbyterian Church; of his self-sacrificing toils and liberal benefactions; of his large-hearted zeal for all the interests of Zion; of the breadth of his views, and the devotion of his aims, and the liberality of his hand in every wise scheme of Christian philanthropy. He dwelt touchingly upon the intimacy and sweetness of their private fellowship as ministers, friends, and officers of the Board, and dwelt upon the peculiar zeal and efficiency of that lovely and beloved man in the great cause that claimed the efforts of the Board of Education. Dr. Chester, in regard to the present condition of the Board, said that they had gotten through the year without borrowing any money—the first time in twenty years that the thing has been done. The Board had never violated a pledge to any of our young candidates. The hand of Breckinridge had written upon their banner this resolve of faithfulness to pledges; and it had never been broken. He spoke of the difficulties surrounding this Board. It was the least popular of the Boards. Their task was peculiarly delicate and difficult. The young men had to be tried; sometimes they did not stand the test, and had to be dropped; and difficulties inseparable from such an enterprise had to be encountered in performing their mission. The Board was little else than a machine in the hands of the Presbyteries. To the Presbyteries it pertained to select and recommend candidates; and if errors were committed by the Presbyteries, the blame of all such blunder, was laid, by popular voice upon the Board, who really have no control over the matter. He urged upon the Presbyteries the importance of renewed care and firmness in watching over the moral and spiritual character and condition of the candidates under their care; and urged that the Board, with all the diligence they could with their present force exercise, could not keep themselves minutely informed of these things. No candidate ought to be recommended except after the most thorough, searching, and honest examination; and perpetual vigilance over the growth in grace, and in every other element of ministerial character, ought to be exercised. The Board had power to dismiss only in such cases as the Assembly had prescribed; and they could only reach the facts upon which they could act, through the report of teachers and professors. He called attention to the fact that the Board was left with an empty treasury, and urged immediate efforts to replenish it. He spoke of the amazing and lamentable apathy of the churches in regard to this great enterprise; detailed the large number of churches that did nothing; appealed touchingly and earnestly to the heart and conscience of the people of God in behalf of the candidates—many of them ministers' sons, some orphans, all poor, who must suffer unless the churches come up to the help of the Board.

Dr. Chester spoke of the efforts of the Board to aid colleges and seminaries, and detailed the success of the Board. He said one good work in which the Board has been successful was in killing colleges. He meant diminishing the number, and increasing the efficiency of colleges. They had been instrumental in inducing some colleges to cease operations, and to join in supporting others, which he deemed a great gain. He called attention to the fact that in this college enterprise such caution had been exercised by the Board that not a dollar had been lost. He urged universal attention on the part of the churches, and said that if every church that was able would give ten dollars each, the funds would be abundant.

Hon. Judge Ewing inquired why it was that some of the candidates never reported to the Board, and yet were supported by the Board?

Dr. Chester replied that the Board, by the rules prescribed to them by the Assembly, depended upon the Presbyteries to say how long aid should be continued to the candidate, and depended upon the surveillance of the Presbyteries, the Board needing only to be informed by the teacher's report, that the candidate was still pursuing study.

Judge Ewing would recommend that no money be paid to candidates, unless upon yearly requisition by the Presbytery.

Rev. Mr. Waller moved the re-commitment of the seventh resolution, (the one making two Co-ordinate Secretaries,) with instructions to inquire and report whether the business of the Board could not be carried on with one Secretary.

Dr. Matthews hoped the motion would not carry, alleging that it was made under a misapprehension. He said the Committee recommended nothing concerning that matter, but left it discretionary with the Board.

Rev. Mr. Farquhar asked Dr. Chester if there was no way of discharging a young man from the aid of the Board, except through the Presbytery?

Dr. Chester replied that for certain causes, well ascertained, a candidate might be dropped by the Board; but in all cases affecting character the Board referred it to the Presbytery, and in all cases the Presbytery was informed of the proceedings in the case.

Rev. Dr. Wines inquired whether the Board did not sometimes recommend that the name of an accused candidate be stricken from the list?

Dr. Chester replied that the Board had no power of discipline, but always referred the case to the Presbytery; but in cases where the Assembly authorized the Board to drop a candidate, it was done; but when character was involved, it was always referred to his Presbytery.

Dr. Wines explained his reasons for inquiring, and explained that the Faculty of Washington College (of which he was once a Professor) had exercised great care to inspect the conduct of candidates of the Board under their tuition, and that the Faculty of a college had better opportunities of knowing the status of young men.

Dr. Chester expressed gratitude to Boards of Teachers who had aided in such supervision; but insisted that no supervision could supersede the necessity of constant vigilance and faithfulness on the part of Presbyteries.

We are happy to be able to say, that we have good reason to believe that this discussion has not been in vain. There are already indications that Presbyteries are setting themselves to this work in good earnest. We publish the speech and the incident discussion, with the hope that a wider circulation of the doctrine inculcated may be productive of still greater good.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

GERMAN PAROCHIAL SCHOOL, PATERSON, NEW JERSEY.

The school was opened on the 12th of November, 1860, by the present teacher, under the rules and regulations of the Presbyterian Board of Education, and is under the authority of the session of the church. The teacher is a member of the church. The schoolroom is the basement of the church edifice; and is furnished with the necessary materials and utensils.

The number of scholars at present is 25, mostly small children. The parents of the children are, almost without exception, poor, for which cause, and on account of the present hard times, each individual child pays only 25 cents every two weeks, two children of the same family pay three shillings in two weeks, and three children (of the same family) pay only 50 cents every two weeks; so that the average income of the teacher is from ten to twelve dollars a month. The school is divided into two classes; the first or upper class of the more advanced scholars, the second or lower class, of beginners. The following branches are taught.

I. Religion.

First class: the histories of the Old and New Testaments, also catechetical instruction of the Ten Commandments, the Confession of Faith, and the Lord's Prayer. Second class received oral instruction from the teacher on the attributes of God, the history of the creation, the histories of the patriarchs, from Abraham to Joseph, but especially the life of our Saviour. Particular attention was paid to those scriptural narratives in which the Founder of our holy religion appears most conspicuous as the "Children's Friend."

II. Exercises for the memory.

First class committed to memory the Ten Commandments, the Confession of Faith, the Lord's Prayer, the form of Baptism, and the Lord's Supper, and 62 Bible verses, as they are found in the Tract Primer of the American Tract Society. Second class, by means of oral instruction, have learned some short prayers and Bible verses, by repetition from the teacher.

III. Reading.

First class: the New Testament, the Primer of the American Tract Society, hymns in our Hymn-book, and the Second Book of Reffelt's Reader for German schools in the United States. Second class: spelling and Reffelt's First Book.

IV. Writing.

First class: English and German copies, also compositions on the slate. Second class: first lessons in drawing and writing, and compositions.

V. Arithmetic, both Mental and Practical.

First class: exercises in the fundamental rules. Second class: counting according to the different tables to 100.

VI. Geography.

Description of the earth and the different parts thereof, the points of the compass, climates, and the topography of Paterson and vicinity.

VII. Natural History.

1. Description of the most distinguished classes of domestic animals, together with birds, fishes, reptiles, insects, and worms. 2. Description of the most important plants which serve for food or clothing, and those poisonous plants with which children may come in contact. 3. Description of the minerals which are found and known here.

VIII. Natural Philosophy.

1. Air, wind, and storm. 2. Fire, light, heat. 3. Water, and as fog, dew, vapour, clouds, rain, snow, ice, &c., and the necessity and usefulness of them, as well as their danger and destructiveness. In connection with the two preceding branches, natural history and natural philosophy, different stories were related to the children by the teacher, and the necessary lessons impressed upon their minds.

IX. Singing.

Several hymns from our "Hymn-book," as likewise a number of tunes from the "Sabbath-school Bell," and the "Evangelical Children's Harp." Singing forms a part of the devotional exercises at the beginning and closing of the school.

God grant that through this feeble effort great good may be accomplished, to the glory of God and the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom among our German population. We have great reason to believe that such will be the result; wherefore we ask, in the infancy of this school, your Christian sympathy and assistance.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
August 12th, 1861.

SUSPENSION OF THE CREEK MISSION.

It is with more regret than surprise we have to report the forced suspension of the Creek Mission, at least so far as its principal station is concerned. This sad event was caused by violent and lawless men, who required the missionaries to leave Tallahassee, giving them but short notice, and who seized the missionary premises and property. These men were Indians, but it is probable that they acted in concert with white men, or at their instigation. Thus upwards of one hundred Creek boys and girls, pupils in the boarding-school which has long been under the efficient superintendence of Mr. Loughridge, are taken away from the best kind of Christian influence and instruction; the church is deprived of its minister, and other missionary labours are interrupted. We have not learned where Mr. Loughridge, who is a native of the South, would go with his family. Mr. Robertson, teacher, and his family would endeavour to reach their friends in the North, and we trust they will be kept in safety on the way. Miss Turner, Miss Mills, Miss Shepherd, and Miss Vance, we are glad to mention, have safely reached their homes in the north. Mr. McCullough, the farmer, and his family, had left Tallahassee some time ago; and Mr. Davis, the other male teacher, would probably remain in the Indian country. We have not heard from the two native brethren at other stations, but we hope they will not be molested in their work. The intelligence of these things is dated to the 24th of July at Tallahassee.

Recent Intelligence.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

The chief news of the month is the painful state of things mentioned in the preceding article about the Creek Mission. Letters have reached us from the Chippewa Mission, July 23d; Iowa, July 26th; and Omaha, July 18th. Mr. Williams had been exposed to very serious danger, by being thrown from a load of wheat, and one wheel of the wagon passing over him, so that he barely escaped from death; but he was recovering well from the injury. Arrangements were in progress for building a chapel among the Omahas, instead of the temporary place of worship at first contemplated.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Our latest letters are dated at Bogota, to the 31st of May, speaking of public affairs in New Grenada as being still in a very disturbed condition; and at Rio de Janeiro to the 24th of June. The brethren in Brazil were still encouraged by the prospects of their work.

AFRICA.

Death of Mr. Ogden.—It is with great regret we learn the death of the Rev. Thomas S. Ogden, at Corisco, May 12th. His illness was the African fever; see Dr. Loomis's obituary notice in another column. His heart was in his work to the end. We deeply lament the early removal of a valuable labourer, but he has entered into rest. Mrs. Ogden will receive much Christian sympathy. She expected to continue in her missionary work. Letters from Dr. Loomis, Mr. DeHeer, and Miss Latta, dated to the 20th of May, give the particulars of this sad bereavement, but speak of the other members of the mission as being in usual health. They also mention that two native assistants had been stationed among native tribes on the main land, about fifty miles distant from Corisco.

The Rev. E. W. Blyden of the Liberia mission has been on a visit to England and this country for his health. He sailed from Boston on his return to Monrovia, on the 10th of this month. Mr. Blyden has been the principal of the Alexander High School for several years, and has conducted this academy with efficiency and success. Having been appointed a Professor in the Liberia College, he will enter upon a new sphere of service with the best wishes of many friends for his continued usefulness. We regret to add that the Alexander High School will probably be suspended for some time. It has been a very useful means of higher and religious education to a number of the young men of Liberia.

INDIA.

Letters have been received from Lahor, June 1st; Dehra, to June 18th; Landour, June 1st; Mynpurie, May 8th; and Futtehgurh, May 14th. Dr. Campbell, Mr. Caldwell, and Mrs. Fullerton, were at Landour on account of health. Mr. Herron writes in encouraging terms of the school at Dehra for the daughters of native Christians, which has proved quite successful. Twenty-three scholars were in attendance, and three more would soon enter it. A new building has been erected for its use at a cost of about $1000, which was obtained from local sources.

The Rev. G. O. Barnes and his family arrived in this country on the 7th of August. Mr. Barnes's health is much improved by the voyage, as we are glad to learn, though he is not yet free from severe disease.

SIAM.

Mr. Mattoon writes from Bangkok under date of May 28th, mentioning the complete recovery of Mrs. McDonald, and speaking of the missionary work as being steadily prosecuted, but without marked change.

CHINA.

Letters have reached us from Canton, May 24th; Shanghai, May 18th; and Ningpo, April 24th. The letters from Shanghai contain pleasing notices of the prospect of usefulness by means of the printing-press, now removed to that station. Mr. Culbertson says, "The field for distribution now opening before us is almost boundless. . . . . Already steamers are running up the Yang-tsze every week almost, and it will be easy to reach the very heart of the empire by this means." Mr. Culbertson speaks also in the highest terms of Mr. Gamble's efficiency and skill as superintendent of the press.

JAPAN.

Letters have come to hand from Dr. Hepburn, dated to the 17th of May. He is much encouraged by the prospect before him, and is anxious to be joined, without delay, by another missionary. His dispensary was not disturbed by the officials, and was quietly doing a good work.

"THIS IS FROM MY PRINCIPAL."

Thus said a good man, a few days ago, as he handed a donation to one of the officers of the Board for the missionary treasury. And he acted in this with an intelligent purpose. In his circumstances, and in the pressing wants of the cause of missions, he considered it proper to give a portion of his capital to the service of the Redeemer. He did this, moreover, after having considered the claims of his family.

His example reminds us of a subject, to which we wish briefly to call attention—that in many cases the increase of property, and not merely its current income, should be made tributary to the service of religion. There are many whose property is every year becoming more valuable, who are yet not accustomed to regard this increase as a part of the means by which, from year to year, they ought to promote religious objects. Sometimes it is even true that they are in debt, as a means of increasing their worldly estate, as when they are able to purchase additional property, paying in part for it, and giving a note for the rest; and in such cases it is hardly true or grateful to make the remark, "One must pay his debts before he gives anything to benevolence." How many of our farmers, mechanics, and merchants, find themselves, at the end of a given period, say of ten years, worth double what they possessed at the beginning; and yet, perhaps, all the time they were more or less in debt. Debts evidently ought not to be made a reason for not aiding religious and benevolent objects, if those who owe them are steadily growing rich, through the goodness of God. We could refer, moreover, as an example of increased property and stationary liberality, to a congregation that gives about as much now to the cause of Christ as it gave fifteen years ago, though it is now possessed of property several-fold larger in amount than was the case at the beginning of this period.

But our purpose in this little article is not to treat this subject at any length; we wish merely to refer to it in such a way as may lead some of our readers to reflect upon it, especially in these times.

"In these times,"—for we may well lay to heart the lessons which God is now teaching his people as to the uncertain tenure of earthly treasures. How many there are who now regret that they had not used a larger part of their property for the cause of religion, while it was in their power to use it in this way! It is only Divine influence, however—it is only the love of Christ, coupled with a conviction of the deep moment of eternal things, which will lead us to make a right use of property. In vain do we discuss different plans of benevolence, unless our hearts are penetrated with the spirit of the gospel—unless we "have tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come." What our churches most need, to keep them from being carried away by the excitement of the times, and to lead them to an earnest and onward movement in the support of our missionary work, is mainly one thing, and that is, the descent upon them of the Holy Ghost. Would that we could feel this deeply! Let us pray more for this. We were much struck with the earnestness of the Christian friend whose remark has suggested these thoughts —"This is from my principal. I wish to give it now. I may not have long to live."

MISSIONS IN CHINA.

VIEWS OF THE MISSIONARY WORK.

Difficulties—Encouragements—Duty.

The following extracts from a letter of the late Rev. Reuben Lowrie, of the Shanghai mission, have been recently handed to us, with a request for their re-publication. They were first printed in the Presbyterian Herald, Louisville, Kentucky, but they have not probably been seen by many of the readers of the Record. They are considered well worthy of a place in these columns.

The Society of Religious Inquiry, of Danville Theological Seminary, received lately a letter from the Rev. Reuben Lowrie, missionary at Shanghai, China, which, for excellence of matter, richness of tone and feeling, and searching analysis, surpasses any letter ever read before them. Believing that it would be of general interest, they ordered the Committee of Correspondence to publish a few extracts. The date is Shanghai, June 15th, 1857.

Speaking of the difficulty of acquiring the language, he says: "Any one who can master French or German, I was going to say any man who had learned to speak English, will find little more difficulty in mastering the colloquial of Shanghai. This is what we preach in, and all conversation is done in this. The books are written in a kind of short-hand, or hieroglyphics, which you can do as much or as little as you please with; though it is better to grapple with it awhile at least. It is hard. In the colloquial, I commenced family worship with my servants in six months, and preaching in a year. Others have been more rapid, and more successful than this; few are less so. At Canton, however, it requires two or three years to preach confidently. Much has been done at Ningpo and here in the way of translations and primary books, to assist in learning the colloquial."

He presents as another difficulty, "Their erroneous theology, or rather moral philosophy, which, with a vague recognition of 'Heaven' as a power co-ordinate with earth and man, really exalts man to the supreme control; and teaching his natural innocence, calls upon him to purify himself from his failings; and regards him as perfect when he has fulfilled his relative duties to his fellow-men. Their self-satisfaction is flattered by this theory, and their aversion to examine further leads them to adopt such maxims as—sects differ, but doctrine is one and the same; and to him that thinks it is so, it is so, to him that has no faith in it, it is not so; as though our opinions were the limit of our obligation. Then there are the superstitions and idolatries besides of the Budhists and Taouists, which have a strong hold upon the popular mind." Then, "the opium trade, and the licentious lives of foreigners, which bring disgrace, by implication, on the doctrines preached by foreigners. 'Of what use can a religion be to us, which has plainly failed to reform your countrymen?' 'You foreigners are like us, some good, some bad The doctrine makes no material difference.' 'Why do you bring opium and sell it to us?'

"The Roman Catholic church, for five centuries has moved heaven and earth to conquer China. She has been in high places of imperial honour. She is now spread throughout all the provinces, numbers her converts by hundreds of thousands, and has her foreign priests in disguise administering the sacraments in all parts of the empire. My personal teacher is a Roman Catholic by descent. His family is very influential here, and has been Roman Catholic for several generations. But, after all, the main difficulty here, as elsewhere, is the rooted pride and unbelief of the human heart, of which the above are but the accidental and formal outcroppings. 'Children of wrath, even as others,' and 'enemies of God by wicked works.'"

Mr. Lowrie mentions some things favourable to the introduction of the gospel.

1. "The remarkably peaceful dispositions of the people, and their great admiration of a certain ceremonial politeness, which consists in exaggerated self-depreciation and mutual adulation. This gives a foothold for addressing them without the fear of a rough answer or rude treatment in the first instance, and it affords security for free intercourse, and extensive itineration.

2. "Their high reverence for education and literary attainments. They even make a merit of sending persons through the streets to collect paper that has any characters written or printed on it, to burn them up, and rescue them from dishonour. The opening of a free school for children is considered an act of benevolence, and is readily filled with boys, for all parents wish their boys to know something of books.

3. "Their literature, especially the writings of Confucius and Mencius, contain much sound doctrine on the subject of man's social and relative duties, and some invaluable concessions and universally recognized principles, to which we can appeal, secure of their assent, and on which we can engraft much of our argument for Divine truth. They have even the custom of writing and distributing gratuitously 'tracts' for the 'reformation of the age,' so called by them, and so intended, and an employment of expounding the sacred books is not at all surprising to them."

Speaking of the extensive and growing acquaintance of the people of the five ports with the Christian doctrine, he says:

"The little boys point at us when we go by, and say 'foreigner' still as they used to do, but they very often now, instead of that, call out 'preacher,' or 'doctrine of Jesus.' Blessed privilege, to be known by that dear name wherever we go, even from lips that never uttered his praise! Those who come to our chapels begin to get the outlines of our doctrine.

"The native church in connection with our mission at Ningpo is as interesting as any of its size in the world, perhaps. The membership is but forty or fifty, [now upwards of one hundred,] but there are the infants of days presented by pious natives for baptism; there is the little child delighting to repeat her hymns and Scripture verses; the young man longing to bring his young friends to the Saviour, and urgent to be permitted to earn his subsistence in some way unconnected with the mission, that it may not be cast in his teeth continually, that he has joined the church only for his rice. There is a whole household—the mother, her son and his wife and the children—all walking in the fear of God. There is the aged believer standing on the borders of the tomb, and drinking in the sweet truth of Christ and his gospel like a little child. Their dead, too, that have died in the Lord, are precious."

To the question as to the need of labourers, he gives the impassioned reply: "What shall I say? In Shanghai are two hundred thousand souls, and an immense concourse of strangers from all parts of the empire. How many missionaries do you think are enough, or could be stationed here without interfering with one another. How many would you think might safely go to a thriving Western city of the same size and settle there without interfering with each other? Our two brethren here recently went out with an older missionary of another Board, and visited the towns in a single line of travel within two hundred miles. The places in which they stopped were of forty to ninety thousand inhabitants, and the number of places was twelve or fourteen; the aggregate population was upwards of eight hundred thousand. This was but a single track; but the country around Shanghai is perfectly intersected with canals, and towns like these are on every side. Ningpo and its province have literally millions of people, all accessible to the gospel, yet wholly given to idolatry and worldly, atheistic heathenism. Is not this a most important vacancy?

"You at home feel that the ministry is indispensable, and that it takes a man's best gifts, his life's labour, his soul's most earnest efforts, most fervent prayers, to compass so arduous and responsible a work. Well, dear brethren, the only difference between the ministry at home and abroad, in domestic and foreign missions, is in the amount that has been already done; the amount of influence, wealth, and numerical strength, which the church has conquered for Christ, and can now rely upon to support and advance her cause. At home there is a Christian civilization, Christian laws and institutions, Christianized public opinion, a general acquaintance with more or less Bible truth, a well-known and widely-reverenced Sabbath day, and a numerous, powerful, and highly respected church, of living, as well as nominal members, to support and promote the gospel. The preacher's work is often half-done before he begins. He inherits the Christian labours and the prayers of seventeen centuries. And with all this, and with Sunday-schools, and tracts, and Bibles throughout the land, the minister of Christ yet feels that he has a great and momentous trust, for which he is not sufficient. He feels its weight and moment not a grain too much. It is all so, and more by far. But what then is it to preach the gospel among the heathen, not only without, but against all these powerful auxiliary forces, which at home have been already conquered for Christ? Here, no Sabbath breaks the full tide of worldliness that fills these ungodly hearts from New Year to New Year. No Bible lessons, like early dew, ever sink into their hearts in childhood. No word of God has been a lamp to their feet in life, a step to support them in the dark valley of death. God is the 'unknown.' Christ is a stranger to them. The very foundations must be laid beneath your feet before you can approach them with warning and the sweet voice of gospel mercy.

"What will you do? Call them fools and stupid? but they are not, and if they were, they need the gospel just as much; or will you leave them to their twilight and their blindness, and hope that God will be merciful? Do not do it! I have stood by a heathen's death-bed; there is no hope in their death. I have heard the wailings of them that sorrow without hope. This dream of the innocence of the heathen is a delusion of the devil, to bind fast the slumbering church of God until it is too late to save them. They are sinners above other men. Will a man, and above all, a minister of the gospel, pay so poor a tribute to the grace and truth of his Lord, as to think that a world without God, a world without Christ, a world without the Holy Spirit, without the Bible, the Sabbath, and the church, can be any other than the gate of hell? They are sinners, and they know it. But they know no Saviour. Among all their sages, all their gods, there is no Saviour. Guilty and unclean, how are they to enter heaven? Our Lord points out the way when he said to his disciples, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned.' Their punishment will be light who perish 'without the law,' compared with that of those who reject the gospel; but who of us would wish to be left to perish from the world which Christ died to save, because ours would be the lightest strokes in the world of endless woe? On that principle our Lord need never have come from heaven to die for men. It is not a question, however, merely of good or evil to the heathen, though that is infinite. It is a question of our Saviour's honour, and the success of his work, and the triumphant fulfilment of his predicted glory. How long, O how long shall half mankind offer no morning and evening worship to their Maker, and live and die without a word of praise, or a thought of love to their Redeemer—because they never heard of him!"

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT SABATHU.

This station was occupied by the Rev. John Newton and a native assistant, during the year reviewed in the following report—though Mr. Newton spent a large part of the year in missionary labours at Lodiana. He has since been transferred to Lahor, and Sabáthú is at present destitute of missionary instruction. This report is dated October 1, 1860.

Having had my time occupied mainly with indoor duties connected with the press, I have very little of an interesting nature to report. The reading of proofs, though it may involve much labour, especially when it has to keep pace with the action of several presses; and though viewed as a means of providing one of the great instrumentalities for evangelizing the heathen and edifying the church, it may be of great utility, is not a subject one is expected to say much about in a report.

It may be more in place to notice the works prepared for the press in the course of the year. These are all in Panjábi, and are as follows: Muktimálá (The Rosary of Salvation,) Dharm Pustak dá Sár (The Substance of the Holy Book,) and Vivád Khándan (The Refutation, or Removal of Objections.) Besides these, the revision of the Panjábi version of Mark and Luke has been completed. The three works first mentioned are, in the main, translations from Hindí publications of the North India Tract Society, and were prepared with the aid of the Press Pandit. Muktimálá consists of twelve parts, explaining and proving, somewhat in detail, the great doctrines of Christianity—such as Regeneration, Atonement, Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Pardon, Sanctification, Love, Hope, Resurrection, Divine Approval, and Supreme Blessedness. Every point is illustrated and confirmed by citations from Scripture, thrown into a poetic form. . . . . The object of versifying these passages was to adapt them to native taste, and induce readers to commit them to memory. The teachings of their own prophets, which many have stored up to a large extent in their memories, are all recorded in verse. The Substance of the Bible—a tract of twenty pages—is likewise in poetry. It is the merest outline of the most important truths, such as the Attributes of God, the Creation, the Fall of Man, the Incarnation of Christ; his Miracles, Death, and Resurrection; the Necessity of Faith, etc.—with slight references, all through, to the errors of Hinduism. Following all this, is the Apostle's Creed, in prose. The Vivád Khandan takes up the most common objections to the belief and profession of Christianity—especially those offered by Hindús; and answers them in a way which is likely to satisfy, at least the judgment, of every candid reader.

I have, as usual, spent only the summer months at Sabáthú. From the beginning of November to the end of March, I was on the plains, chiefly at Lodiana. For want of pecuniary means, I was able to do but little in the way of itinerant preaching. Preaching at Lodiana, however, and afterwards at Sabáthú, was scarcely ever omitted, even for a day, when time and strength were available for this work. Yet, for want of these, I have been compelled to content myself with a smaller amount of personal labour in this department than formerly. In the Sabáthú bazár, the Scripture Reader has laboured most of the year in the usual way, with but little interruption. He has also done something in the bazárs of Kussowlie and Dugshai.

Always, when I have been at the station, there has been regular Hindustaní preaching on the morning of the Sabbath, and a Bible-class, in the same language, in the afternoon. Besides these exercises, I have, during the latter part of the summer, preached an English sermon every Sabbath evening, to a small congregation, consisting chiefly of English soldiers. This service, it is believed, has not been in vain. From among the natives one adult has been baptized—the wife of the Scripture Reader.

It may be mentioned, in connection with these Sabbath services, that we have latterly adopted the practice of taking up weekly contributions for religious objects. One design of this was to establish among the native brethren the habit of giving systematically. The success of the plan, thus far, has been most satisfactory.

I have visited this year, and preached at three of the most important fairs within my reach—the first, in the latter part of March, at the temple of Mansá Deví (the goddess who fulfils the wishes of her votaries,) near Manimájirá; the second, in the end of April, at Pinjaur; and the third, at Jwálá Mukhí, in the middle of October. The work at the last-named place extended through nine days; at each of the others, about four days. The native brethren also were at the Manimájirá fair; and, in addition to this, attended the fairs held in the early part of the summer at Kathár, Kunihár, Chubachchá, Juhar, and Deulgí; and the Scripture Reader accompanied Mr. Thackwell, in the spring, to the great Sikh fair at Nandpur. There are no better opportunities for preaching to the masses, than are offered at these gatherings; not that the people who attend them are anxious for salvation, but they have then abundant leisure to hear. The thing sought by almost all votaries of the subordinate deities, is some earthly good. The Hindús generally care as little for eternal salvation, as the masses of worldly people in Christendom. Indeed, they care much less; because they have less conscience, and so have fewer fears of eternal judgment. While the multitude, both on the hills and on the plains, worship the great Indian goddess, under various names and forms, at Jwálá Mukhí, Manimájirá, and other places, as the giver of temporal blessings, it is common on the hills to worship, in addition, a noted demon named Sid—confessedly a malignant being, and almost identical, in name and character, with Satan—with the design of propitiating his favour, and thus averting the temporal ills he is wont to inflict on mortals. The Supreme God is seldom or never worshipped by orthodox Hindús; nor, if he were, would salvation be looked for, either as the necessary effect of such worship, or as a gift freely bestowed by Him in answer to prayer. Salvation, if obtained at all, must be bought by the merit of good works; or by the mortification of the flesh; or by abstract meditation on God, as divested of those attributes which are the glory of his nature. Such at least is the common view.

When will these errors give place to gospel truth! When will conscience be reproduced in the sensualized and rocky hearts of these Hindús? When will the heaven of a holy God become to them an object of desire!

REPORT OF THE STATION AT LODIANA.

The Rev. A. Rudolph, Mr. R. Thackwell, licentiate preacher, and two native Christian assistants, are the labourers at this station. On the 1st of October last, they gave the following report of the missionary work for the preceding year.

The present year has, in several respects, been a trying one. Mr. Thackwell, having been taken ill in December, was obliged, in January, to seek a change in the hills. There he improved sufficiently to attend the Nandpur fair, in March; after which he returned to his station. It soon became apparent, however, that his health was not established; and, in the middle of May, he had again to repair to the hills. The duties of the station have thus devolved, for most of the year, on the remaining missionary. Relief, however, was experienced by the opportune arrival of Mr. Newton, who spent several months of the cold weather at Lodiana.

Preaching—Itinerations—the church.

The two stated services on Sunday, two weekly meetings, and the concert for prayer every first Monday in the month, have been maintained throughout the year. The open-air preaching in the bazar, by the missionary and native assistants, has been kept up with a good deal of regularity. In accordance with the invitation to united prayer issued by this mission, the second week of January last was observed here as a special season of humiliation and supplication. We most earnestly hoped for a copious outpouring of God's Spirit, and for a large share of that blessing which the Lord has promised in answer to united prayer. It has, however, not pleased the Lord thus to visit this station. We have not been able to observe a greater interest, on the part of the heathen, in the preaching of the word of God, nor have they manifested, on an average, more of a spirit of inquiry than usual. While we acknowledge the sovereignty of the Head of the church, whose plans are all laid in infinite and unerring wisdom, we feel, also, how much it becomes us to lie low before Him in the dust, in view of his having thus far withheld these blessings from us, and to plead with increased earnestness for the conversion of this people.

An itineration was made by Mr. Rudolph in the immediate neighbourhood of Lodiana. Most of the villages visited were inhabited by Mohammedans, and these of the poorest and most degraded class; and consequently he had to encounter much unreasonable prejudice, or a total indifference. He was out for a month on this occasion, and was accompanied by Qádir Bakhsh, who displayed his usual energy and zeal in this work. Mr. Thackwell, on his return from the hills in the spring, attended the Nandpur fair, and made the journey home a preaching tour. Qádir Bakhsh attended the two semi-annual fairs at Jwálá Mukhí, and several smaller ones in the neighbourhood of Lodiana.

We have to report the conversion of two Mohammedans. One of them was led to renounce the religion of his forefathers by the study of the Scriptures, and the perusal of controversial works; the other, by meeting, as he said, with nothing among his co-religionists but falsehood, deceit, and selfishness. His first acquaintance with the missionary is dated a number of years back, when he sought relief from a toothache at the dispensary then kept up on the mission premises.

It has been the painful duty of the session, in the course of the year, to cut off from the communion of the church two members, who, after having forsaken the Lord, showed no signs of repentance. One was a case of the basest ingratitude, and of the most shameful denial of our Saviour, that is remembered in connection with this church.

Several inquirers have appeared to be in earnest; but family ties, and the fear of man, have, thus far, kept them from making, in public, that professsion of faith which they have often repeated to the pastor in private. One of their number, who had long professed to be convinced of the truth of Christianity, and had shown a desire to be united with the church, but could not make up his mind fully, was called suddenly to his last account.

Schools—the Press.

1. The City School. On account of Mr. Thackwell's absence, the management of this institution has, for the greater part of the year, been in the hands of the native head-teacher. In numbers there has been a steady increase in both departments; and the increasing desire for learning English, reported last year, has continued unabated. Now, at the close of the year, there are 314 scholars enrolled. Of these 226 belong to the English department, and 88 to the Vernacular. The average daily attendance has been 235. Owing to much sickness among the children in the city, the attendance during the summer has not been as good as usual. The English department is at present divided into 13 classes; and the Persian into 6. The instruction, even in the highest classes, is of a more elementary nature now than it has been for many years past. The absence of the superintendent, and the breaking up of the first two classes, have contributed much to produce this effect. But we look for improvement in this respect almost immediately.

2. Orphan Girls' School. Early in the hot weather the measles broke out amongst the girls, and prostrated about half their number at once. All, however, recovered gradually, except one—a little babe of eight months, which had been made over to us a few months before, when almost in a dying state from starvation and neglect. She had not had time to rally, and she sunk under the influence of this disease. Greater trials, however, followed; for the small-pox broke out towards the end of July, and attacked, successively, three of the girls. Two of these recovered, but the smallest—a babe of a year and a half, fell a victim to this dreadful disease. We feel much indebted to Dr. W. B. Butt, whose untiring kindness and attention to the orphan children have, under Providence, been the means of bringing relief when it was much needed. All are now pretty well, with the exception of one, whose health is still in a precarious state.

The number of orphans in the institution at the commencement of the year was 23; since which time 4 have been admitted. Now, at the end of the year, there are 25. Besides these, two day-scholars attend the school. When not interrupted by sickness, the girls have pursued their studies steadily. A considerable portion of their time is given to needle-work and domestic duties. We think we can discern progress in all of them.

In the department of the press some changes have been made during the year. The book-binding has been placed in charge of a native Christian, who has been for years a workman in the establishment. . . . . The typographic presses are in charge of another native Christian, who has arrived recently from Allahabad. The lithographic department continues in the hands of one of the former head-men, the other having been dismissed.

[A tabular statement shows that eleven works, in four of the native languages, were printed during the year. The whole number of pages printed was 6,759,475. About one-half of these were the Scriptures; the "Pilgrim's Progress," in Panjabi, was one of the works printed.]

REPORT OF THE STATION AT JALANDHAR.

The Rev. Golok Nath and three other native Christian labourers are at this station, who enjoy the confidence of our missionary brethren and other Christian friends. Their work for the year ending on the 1st of last October is thus described:

The routine of our daily work is so uniform and unvaried that very little can be said here which has not been already mentioned in the reports of former years. All we have attempted during the year, to disseminate the true knowledge of God, and the plan of salvation through Jesus Christ his Son, can be reported in a very few words. We have preached in our chapels regularly for the benefit of both Christian and heathen attendants. Many of the latter have attended our services, and listened quietly until the conclusion of our discourses. We have taught the people regularly, also, in the bazars of the city of Jalandhar, and in the neighbouring towns, the great truths of the Bible. The reasons in favour of Christianity, and the replies to Hindu and Musúlmán objections, have been subjects of daily conversation in the bazár. We are not always allowed to deliver regular discourses without interruption, but certainly we have been able to teach a great deal, and to undermine the belief of the people in their different systems of religion.

We have given away books, and explained the contents, to men inhabiting the villages and towns in our neighbourhood. During the last cold season we pitched our tents and prosecuted our missionary work in eight different towns of respectable size, in which there are collectorate stations. These towns are the common centres of from two to three hundred villages. The concourse of men and women from the villages to these towns, for exchange, and other business purposes, is so great, that we had good audiences, for eight or nine days, at each of them; and we hope to continue the plan this year, if life and strength be given to us.

Although we do not find any spirit of inquiry among the people, yet we can venture to say that they do always speak with respect of our religion, and sometimes openly declare their belief in its truth, and hatred of their own false gods.

It was thought desirable that considerable prominence should be given this year to private conversations with individuals interested in the subject of a future life and happiness; and we are thankful to say, that these meetings have been conducted with much friendly and good feeling. We confidently hope that hereafter we shall have the privilege of reporting some good resulting from this mode of communicating religious knowledge to individuals, not hampered by the presence of others.

We have also had several meetings with Pandits, Sádhs, and Maulavis, as representatives of communities. In these the most disputed points between their systems of theology and ours have been freely discussed in the presence of numerous hearers.

Instruction has been given regularly in our school composed of 250 boys, and divided into three departments. The subjects studied in the highest class of the English department are the Bible, history, prose, poetry, composition, grammar, geography, and arithmetic. Although we have not been able to carry our pupils much beyond the mere rudiments of the English language, because they leave the school as soon as they can get employment, and thus earn a decent livelihood, yet our grand object has always been to sow the seeds of Christian truth in their youthful minds. We teach our classes the first principles of astronomy and other sciences, to dispel from their minds the baneful prejudices they have conceived against the real truth by the instructions of their parents. It is really gratifying to see how some of the advanced pupils have learned to think and reason like ourselves on religious subjects; and we believe, that had it not been for the mountains of difficulties that lie in their way, they would long before this have forsaken heathenism and embraced the Christian faith.

The Persian and Hindi departments have been taught exactly on the same principles as the English.

We have lately opened a Sabbath class for the boys of the first and second English classes. The class is regularly attended by twenty lads, and promises much good. We thought it proper to teach them the "Pilgrim's Progress," and we find that it has turned out to be a very appropriate book for them.

While teaching, the teacher can spy in the faces of his pupils marks of strong sympathy for the "man clothed with rags, with his face from his own house, a book in his hand, and a great burden on his back;" and their minds become really affected when he speaks to them of the lost condition of man by nature, his first convictions of sin, the consequent thoughts of judgment and eternity, and the only way of escape from the wrath to come.

Our Sabbath-school, which was commenced in the year 1856 for the special benefit of the Christian children residing on the mission premises, and conducted by the daughters of the missionary, has been carried on to this time with pretty good prospects. It was opened with only two children, but now it numbers eighteen boys and girls. Since the beginning of the last year, the children have been divided into two classes: the first class consists of four children, and learns "The General Assembly's Catechism," "Child's Scripture Lessons," and psalms and hymns, which they commit to memory. The second division is composed of little ones, and learns "The Child's Catechism," hymns, and some Bible verses, which they also learn by heart. We believe if we are only faithful in the discharge of our duties, we may safely hope for a blessing.

In consequence of our desire and efforts to commence a Christian village in connection with this mission, two more houses have been added to the two built last year, for the accommodation of the brethren in the mission employ. In this we were aided by the friends of the mission; and 350 rupees, contributed by his highness the Maháráját of Patiálá were also appropriated to this object. The place does really look like the commencement of a Christian settlement.

The poor-house, which has been mentioned several times before, we are glad to say continues to draw the lively interest of the European friends of the mission, for which we feel not a little grateful.

On the whole we feel encouraged. There is evidence that our labours in the Lord are not in vain. The members of our little church seem to be growing in knowledge, and in grace also. There is, we think, a deeper and more general feeling of the absolute necessity of the influence of the Holy Spirit, to make the preaching of the gospel effectual to the enlightening and saving of men.

In conclusion, we would bring to the notice of the mission, that from the commencement of the last year we have begun, not to discourage the spirit of inquiry among the heathen, but to discourage their leaving their own profession and coming and falling on the mission for support; and those of the native Christians that are not quite willing or able to work as preachers and teachers, have been advised to take government employment, suited to their taste and abilities, and thus procure for themselves an honest livelihood.

"I WANT OTHERS TO HEAR OF JESUS, MA'AM."

"WILL YOU GIVE IT RIGHT AWAY?"

Annie C—— died on Monday night, the 8th of last July. She was seventeen years old. Her sickness lasted about three months; and I hope that, before her death, she was taught of God to know the plague of her own heart, and the way of salvation through Jesus Christ.

In the words of her Sabbath-school teacher, who had the joy of leading her to the Saviour, if any one had, I give the facts about Annie's desire for the salvation of the heathen. The statement that follows was furnished at my request, with the expectation, however, that I would prepare it for the press. I am sure the reader will prefer it just as it is.

On my going to the house she immediately asked to be put in her chair that she might talk to me, as when she was lying down the cough prevented her. I said:

"Were you disappointed yesterday?"

"Not much," she answered. "I looked for you all day. I knew you would come, if you could. I wanted to give you some money for the missionary box, but I think now I will wait until I get more. I have only twenty-five cents—I would like to give more."

"How did you get it?" I asked.

"Why, you know," she replied, "that father will sometimes give me a few pennies, and Alick often gives me some, and if I ask him, I know he will give me more. Alick is so kind. He always comes up before he goes to work, and tells me to keep heart, I will get well soon; and when he comes home at night he sits with me nearly the whole evening."

* * * * * * *

When I returned she was very much changed. I felt it keenly, but, of course, could not show it. Sitting down beside her, I said very little. She seemed perfectly content with my hand clasped in hers. As soon as her sister came in, she asked her to go and get the money. I said,

"You have the amount, then?"

"Yes, ma'am; Alick and father gave me a little every day until I had fifty cents."

I said, "Annie, you don't know how much pleasure it gives me to receive this from you. Shall I tell them you sent it?"

"No," she said, "but I wanted to give it."

"Why, Annie, do you send it?" I inquired.

"I want others to hear of Jesus, ma'am."

The next day, while I was sitting with her, she told me of her mother having so much trouble to get money enough to pay the taxes, and said she was so sorry for her. The tears were in her eyes. I thought, perhaps the small sum she had given me might, in her estimation, be of use, and said to her,

"Well, Annie, if you would rather, I will give you back the fifty cents, and put it in of my own, and you can pay me back some other time."

My hand lay on her knee. Closing it tightly over the money, she said, "No, ma'am, I want to give this in; (in a most earnest tone,) will you give it right away?"

I promised to do so as soon as possible; and then, observing that she lowered her voice as her mother came in, I said, "Do you wish your mother to know of it, Annie?"

She said, "I would like to tell her, but she is in so much trouble. She might think I was giving too much, and I want to give it all. I wish I had more."

Annie loved her mother tenderly, and her unwillingness, in this case, to let her know that she was giving half a dollar to the cause of missions, was not an unfilial act. She had consecrated it to the heathen. It was her last gift, and her mother would have no regret if she did not know that the money was given; and she has none, now that she knows how her beloved child gave it from love for those that were ready to perish.

OBITUARY.

Rev. Thomas S. Ogden, of the Corisco Mission.

A month of sickness—a day of death! Brother Ogden is no more. He died at Corisco, on the 12th of May, 1861.

The sad news spread rapidly through the native towns, and everywhere were heard expressions of sorrow, "Our missionary is dead!" "Our friend!" "Our father!" "We look on him no more!"

The funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, whose silent tears bespoke heartfelt grief. His remains sleep in our quiet graveyard, beside his little infant, and the two who have gone before him, to meet the Lord of the harvest. The bereaved mission feels the affliction sorely. Our hearts are cast down, but not in despair. Our Father chastens us, but it is in love.

Thomas Spencer Ogden, of the Presbytery of New Brunswick, N. J., sailed from New York on the 6th of October, 1857, and arrived at Corisco on the 14th of January, 1858. He immediately entered with zeal into the work of teaching the Benga boys, then at Evangasimba; but soon afterwards the school was transferred to Ugobi, when he took the entire charge, until the arrival of brother McQueen, in September. His first serious illness occurred in June, 1859—malignant, followed by typhoid fever. In hope of more speedy recovery, he was removed in July to Evangasimba. Here he soon after resumed the instruction of the more advanced boys from the Ugobi school, devoting full eight hours per day to this work, and to the candidates for licensure. In March, 1860, he suffered another attack of malignant fever. From this he recovered slowly. In accordance with medical advice, he made a month's voyage to Fernando Po and Calabar, which re-established his health. On the departure of Mr. Mackey for America, he was appointed to the charge of the girls' school, and the erection of a dwelling appropriated exclusively to that institution.

Such of the boys as the mission deemed worthy to remain, he still continued to teach, up to the time of his last illness. He engaged in earnest in the work of building and fitting up the school in its new location, putting his hand to all manner of work which the men were able to do.

On the first of October, on account of Mrs. Ogden's health, the mission unanimously gave him leave to return to America, yet, in view of the embarrassed state of the mission, after earnest prayer, they both decided to remain. He withdrew his request, and resumed his work, which was so far completed, that he took up his residence there with the school, on the 6th of November, 1860.

The out-door work being finished, he turned his attention with diligence to the completion of the translation of Luke, hearing lessons for six hours a day from his boys, and from candidates for the sacred work, in addition to the other duties of the station. The speedy decline of his health was noticed with concern, but he was unwilling to leave Mrs. Ogden, and desired to "keep up" until she was out of danger. In March appeared fearful signs of malignant fever. He still kept about his usual business, and took such medicines as were thought appropriate, before the actual invasion of disease. He was also desired to keep a good look-out for the first approach of the dreaded malady. During Mrs. Ogden's illness, he was busy, day and night, ministering to her comfort. On Sunday, 28th April, he was attacked with a severe turn of the disease, which scarcely left him strength to walk. A similar attack had probably occurred, unobserved, several times before, during the past month. The hæmorrhage was gradually arrested, and he steadily gained, until Sabbath, May 5th; then the pulse became feebler, and though supported by the best tonics we can command, the system did not rally. On Saturday, fever supervened—hope failed, and nature could hold out no longer. Gradually failing, without pain, he sank quietly, as to sleep, and ceased to breathe at the peaceful sunset of the Sabbath.

He seemed conscious of his approaching end, before any one else. He said his mind was at peace, but he thought he should never recover. Just before his death, he was asked if he found comfort in trusting in Christ, in a dying hour? He seemed surprised at the question, then replied with emphasis, "Yes: in whom else can we trust, but in Christ alone?"

From his first arrival in Corisco, he omitted no opportunity for preaching to pass unimproved—in the churches, in the towns, by the wayside, often at Ilobi, he urged assemblies and individuals to repentance. At his death, he was pastor of the church, and superintendent of the Sabbath-school at Evangasimba.

To rear up an efficient native ministry, and to give to them the word of God in their own native language, were the objects which called forth his most earnest efforts. He cheerfully struggled on against a hostile climate, happy both to toil and to suffer in God's work. He continued these labours when he should have been confined to his sick-bed. He fell, as he believed, at the post of duty, with the harness on. His dying words were, "Who will go? Can you go? Who will go to preach on the main-land?" C. L. L.

MISCELLANY.

Extracts from Missionary Addresses.

Truth spreading in India.

That knowledge is spreading, no one who goes over those parts of the country where the labours of the missionaries have been carried on, can for a moment doubt. He will find numbers who are acquainted with the great truths of Christianity. We meet with instances constantly occurring which indicate how truth is spreading in India. It is not long since there came to Bellary two natives, who had received one or two books from a missionary at one of the great festivals. They belonged to the meaner caste, and occupied their minds with vain inquiries as to the nature of the Divine essence. They were not satisfied with the views they held. They read the books which the missionaries had given to them; they studied them, and after a time retired occasionally to a small temple outside their village, and there they prayed in the name of that Mediator who was pointed out to them in those books. With the view of receiving further instruction they came to Bellary, where they were ultimately baptized. They afterwards returned to their village, where they immediately began to work for God, and were the means of gathering in some of their relatives and friends, and other heathen. Before I left Bellary I had the privilege of administering the Lord's Supper to thirty souls who had thus been brought to the knowledge and love of the truth. A church has been planted there, and I believe there is every sign that prosperity attends it. . . . I remember saying, before I left India, to my now sainted friend and brother, Mr. Lacroix, that I thought there was evidence that a great work was going on in India, and that, ere long, we should see people coming out in greater numbers than we had ever yet witnessed. His answer was, "Well, that is my conviction too, after long experience; go and tell the people of England not to be discouraged." This is the testimony of one who has gone to his rest; one of the most useful and honoured labourers that this society has ever had. I will testify, too, and I think all my brethren from India will bear me out in the statement I am about to make. My Christian friends, God has not left us merely with indications of coming success, he has granted us actual success in our great work. We can look upon tens of thousands, perhaps one hundred and forty thousand in India alone, and if we take in Burmah, the number is swollen to a quarter of a million, who have renounced idolatry, and are nominal Christians. By calling them nominal Christians, I mean that they attend our worship. I mean that we are instructing these people in the knowledge of the truth, and that the children who are placed under our care are trained in the knowledge and love of God, and in the way of salvation. Oh, it is a happy thing to have those children under our care, and to hear from so many thousands of infant voices the song of praise and prayer ascending to our common Lord and Master.—Rev. J. S. Wardlaw: Lond. Miss. Soc. Mag. 1861.

NEED OF DEPENDENCE ON GOD.

If we would have the old triumphs of the church over again, we must go back to her early days, in which they were wont, not only to take encouragement from what God did for her, but to learn, also, how she bore herself towards her God. And what, then, do we find? We find that these were emphatically the days of faith and prayer. In her very weakness the church was strong. Her very feebleness drove her and made her keep within the arms of the everlasting Father. Her felt and confessed dependence was her might. . . . . It was in answer to prayer that, of old, God opened the windows of heaven and poured down blessings, and he will do it again. Oh yes, while he demands our acknowledgments, and has established a close connection between our asking and his giving, he loves to be trusted, he loves the cry of heartfelt confidence. He so loves it, that he even condescends to place himself before us, so to speak, in the position of a servant, and says, "Concerning the work of my hands command ye me." Oh what blessings, what success may we not expect, if we have but the desire here—if our hearts thirst and cry out for the living God! Oh, then, let us pray, let us pray as well as act! Let us pray for the true spirit of prayer, for a more humble, conscious dependence on God, and faith in him in all that we do. Are more labourers wanted for the work? We must "pray the Lord of the harvest," that he would send them forth. Are men to be set apart to this sacred work? Then, as when Jesus sent forth his apostles, let it be preceded by fervent prayer "to that Eternal Spirit, who (as Milton grandly says) can enrich with all utterance and knowledge, and sendeth forth his seraphim with the hallowed fire of his altar to touch and purify the lips of whom he pleaseth." Is the truth of God at any time proclaimed in the ear, or unfolded to the eye, then must we pray that it "may have free course and be glorified." When, with a sublimer devotion than his, who, according to classic story, ran from Platæa to Delphi and back before sunset, to rekindle the quenched fire on the altar, and dropped dead just as he handed in the sacred flame, the missionaries of the cross go forth "ready to be bound and to die for the name of the Lord Jesus;" then, like the Ephesian elders gathering around the great missionary Paul, on the shore at Miletus, we must kneel down and pray with them. When we hear of persecutions, and threatenings, and discouragements—then, as when Peter and John departed from the council, we must "with one accord lift up our voice to God." Are any of Christ's servants imprisoned, or so fettered as to be unable to engage in his work? Then, as in the case of Peter, let "prayer be made by the church unto God" for them. Do any of them meet with a cruel death? Then, like the disciples of John, we must "take up the body and bury it, and go and tell Jesus." Does success smile upon any of our plans? Let us gratefully give God the praise. In everything connected with the great work of the salvation of men, "let us make our requests known to God by prayer and supplication." Oh, if we were thus more truly, earnestly, faithfully prayerful, we should be more powerful. Thus dependent and trustful, we should be honoured with abundant success. Strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, the worm Jacob would thresh the mountains. Then would our operations be largely increased, but, what is infinitely better, they would be blessed a thousand-fold. Then would come back the glorious days of Christianity's prime, yea, brighter and happier days than these. Then should we see the church shaking off all the efforts of foes, as the majestic lion shaketh off from his mane the dewdrops of the morning. Then should we see her going forth, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." "Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake as in the ancient days, as in the generations of old." "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us: that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations."—Rev. R. S. Drummond.

No 821 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, donations of books and tracts, the appointment of Colporteurs, the editorial department of the Record and Sabbath-school Visitor, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to the Rev. William E. Schenck, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 821 Chestnut street.

All communications, reports, remittances of money, and orders for books, to be addressed to Mr. Winthrop Sargent, Superintendent of Colportage, and Business Correspondent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. Engles, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to James Dunlap, Esq., Treasurer.

NEED OF FUNDS.

Our need of funds for colportage is such that we are compelled to keep it before our pastors and churches, even at the risk of growing wearisome by its frequent mention.

The Board's Colportage Fund is now overdrawn about $14,000. The Board has for some time declined to commission new colporteurs, but has struggled hard to keep in its service the band of devoted and laborious men who were already at work. It has lately felt constrained, however, to let a number of these cease from their work, as their commissions expired.

The case is so plain as to need no exposition. And as the time of the year in which much the larger number of our churches are accustomed to take their annual collections for the Colportage Fund is approaching, we hope pastors will lay the matter before the people, secure their aid, and forward their contributions at the earliest practicable day.

THE COLPORTEUR AMONG SOLDIERS.

In the August number of the Record was published a portion of a report from a colporteur labouring among the soldiers in and near Philadelphia. We now add another part of a later report from the same colporteur.

During the month which has ended on the 25th of July, your colporteur has distributed 234,132 pages of tracts; 100 "Soldier's Manuals;" and many other volumes. About 15,800 soldiers have been supplied. The Military Hospital has been twice visited, and about 2000 pages of tracts, and 10 "Manuals of Devotion" given to the establishment for the use of the invalids. For this attention the physicians, superintendents, &c., expressed warm thankfulness to the Board, and hoped the gifts would be appreciated by, and useful to, the parties for whose special use they were donated. Tracts have been put in the pockets of about 3500 suits of military clothing. In this connection your colporteur desires to acknowledge his obligations to the Army Clothing-Inspector for hearty co-operation and valuable assistance. Eight regiments from other States on their way to the "Seat of War," have been intercepted in this city, and each furnished with a parcel containing 1000 tracts. In three cases they were given to the chaplains, in the others to responsible regimental officers; and in all, although the baggage department was already heavily taxed, they were received gladly, and hearty thanks tendered to the donors.

The plan adopted last month—that of making the tracts into assorted parcels, and giving them in charge of the officers—has been pursued, and in all cases, (as before,) they have gladly consented to take the responsibility of distributing them, at a propitious season, to their men.

The details of my work during the last month have been much the same as before. Many interesting incidents in connection with the various characters and dispositions have been daily encountered. A very solemn impression seems to have been produced upon all ranks by the melancholy disasters consequent upon the late battles. The circumstances seemed naturally to reiterate with unusual emphasis, our Lord's admonition, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh;" and men seemed unusually willing to entertain serious thoughts of eternity, and the salvation of their souls; but in no case was there manifested any flagging of purpose, or hesitancy to go forward in defence of their beloved country. Your colporteur endeavoured, as far as in him lay, to take advantage of these openings, and to discharge the solemn responsibility incident to his calling. May the Lord add his blessing, without which all our efforts are vain.

COLPORTAGE IN IOWA.

A colporteur in Iowa writes to us as follows:

I have laboured principally in the counties of Linn, Benton, and Iowa, all of which are in great need of such books as I carry with me. One who has never travelled over this new region, could form no correct idea of what a colporteur is called to witness every day—destitution, ungodly conduct, and all that characterizes the man who is without God and without hope in the world, and the family who have no fixed religious belief, no church, no Sabbath-school, no Bible; yet many such families I have met with, in all those counties, and have done what I could by conversation, or by leaving books, to plant some good seed in the wild uncultivated wastes. One great obstacle in the way of my mission, is the total ignorance of many people as to what the business of a colporteur is. Some want to know if I am peddling books just to make money. Some look at my books for a few moments, and decide at once that I am out trying to establish some particular system of religion, and they watch me with great caution lest they should be imposed on, as many of them have been, by men who are teaching all kinds of new doctrine. I feel confident in asserting that no place on earth could give such a variety of religious views as this region. Sometimes the labours of one day will be spent in visiting the families through settlements of Bohemians; the next will be spent in a settlement of Norwegians; a third among Irish Roman Catholics; and perhaps a fourth among American infidels and Universalists. Almost every form of belief is met with in the journey of a single day. With respect to what I am able to accomplish, it is not for me to say. We know that the blessing is promised to the right use of means.

In those settlements of Bohemians they are principally Roman Catholic, and understand our language so imperfectly that but few of them can read English. The most I can do, is to converse with them, which they are very willing to do.

The Norwegians are an industrious people, but manifest little or no desire for books or religious instruction.

The Irish Roman Catholic portion of this community, in many places, are quite liberal, and many are willing to purchase the Bible and read it. They have but few churches, and depend on a casual visit from their priests. They are ready to read books in this new region, that they would not venture to keep in their houses if they had a regular priest among them. Among these people I am confident a good work can be done by the visits of a colporteur. I have sold as many as seven volumes, amounting to three dollars' worth, of our books, in one Roman Catholic family.

But the most important part of all my labours has been in and among those people who have no books, no religion, no interest in their soul's welfare. They are to be found in every portion of my field that I have traversed; sometimes families, with six, seven, or eight children, with father and mother, and not a Bible or religious book in the house; and when the Sabbath day comes, hunting and fishing are their principal occupations. Among such families as these, I make it my business to give some book or tract. By this method, I have convinced them that my object is not to make money, nor to deceive them. On making a second, and sometimes a third visit, I have been received into their houses and treated with great kindness, and even with evidences of great joy, especially from the youth of the family. I can state, from my own experience, that the work of a colporteur becomes easier and more successful every time he traverses the same country. Many proofs of this have occurred under my own observation, as, for instance, when a book has been sold in one family, and I return to the same region after two or three months, I frequently find that the book has passed all around the neighbourhood. The colporteur's work is explained by some one, and on my return they welcome me to their houses, where, three months before, I had scarcely an invitation to enter.

Now is the time to lay the foundation in this rapidly growing country, and one book now may be worth two ten years hence, when the love of the world, and the spirit of speculation, have taken full possession of the hearts and minds of the inhabitants.

I trust, by the supporting grace of God, all I can do will be done with fidelity. I humbly hope that the little seed scattered over these fertile prairies may one day bring forth a glorious harvest, when my hand shall have ceased to labour, and the kind friends who support this work have gone to their reward. May the Lord bless and further his own cause, and make all his servants faithful, is the sincere prayer of your humble servant.

BOOKS AND PAPERS.

Pastoral Letter of the General Assembly in 1839.

"The Assembly cannot refrain from a solemn warning to all their churches against books containing erroneous doctrines, however they may come recommended by men in high places. The Assembly is fully convinced, that all our ministers and members ought, with the greatest care, to guard this subject, and see that they become not the patrons of books already published or proposed to be published, unless they are well certified of their characters. The Assembly, moreover, feel constrained to admonish the churches of the great importance of taking and reading only such periodical papers as have the character of being sound in doctrine, and advocate the genuine principles of the Presbyterian government and order. It is by no means our wish to interfere in the least with the liberty of the people to buy and read such publications as they judge best, but it is our privilege and duty in all cases where the truth of God, or the order of his house is concerned, to admonish and warn all those who, in the providence of God, are placed under our watch and care. And when but one religious paper is taken in a family, in our connection, it is surely not unreasonable to advise, and expect, that it be one which can be recommended by the ministers and judicatories of the Presbyterian church. We are convinced, that the difficulties in which our beloved church has been involved, have been, in no small degree, owing to the periodical press; and we confidently believe, that unless more care be taken to guard against the circulation of unsuitable papers in our churches, the same evils from which we have escaped will again come in upon us, notwithstanding all the efforts of the pulpit to counteract them. But the only effectual remedy for the evil of which we complain is in the hands of the people. Let every member of the Presbyterian church resolve to introduce at least one weekly paper into his house; and let that be such a one as will, in all respects, have a salutary influence on those who peruse it. It would be invidious to designate particular periodicals, and this is entirely unnecessary. Let the person who wishes to subscribe for a religious newspaper take the advice of his pastor, or of some judicious friend, on whose honesty and judgment he can depend. The General Assembly would press this subject on the attention of their people. It has hitherto been too much overlooked, but is becoming, evidently, of primary importance. It is in vain that the pastor inculcates sound doctrine on the Sabbath day, if through the week the people are occupied with books, tracts, and papers, which insinuate, and even inculcate, a contrary doctrine."

These are sound instructions, and they are just now timely. They may be found in the Assembly's Digest, revised edition, pages 588, 589. I hope they may be heeded. As to books, there can be no harm in recommending to all our people the publications of the Presbyterian Board of Publication; for its books and tracts are among the best in the world, and all Presbyterians should buy, read, and circulate them. And so neither can there be any harm in recommending to all our people The Home and Foreign Record, The Foreign Missionary, and The Presbyterian Sabbath-school Visitor; for these are all publications of our own Boards, and should be taken and read by all our people. As to other papers, our people must, of course, choose for themselves, only let them patronize their own papers, papers of their own denomination, Presbyterian papers—such "papers as have the character of being sound in doctrine, and advocate the genuine principles of Presbyterian government and order"—such papers as "can be recommended by the ministers and judicatories of the Presbyterian church."

FRUIT AFTER MANY DAYS.

When the Rev. R. Knill was a young man, he distributed tracts among the Devon militia. As the regiment was about to be disembodied, he resolved that every man in it, if possible, should be supplied with a religious tract. Having visited other companies, he says:—"I proceeded to the Grenadiers, who were all pleased, until I came to one merry-andrew kind of fellow; he took the tract and held it up, swore at it, and asked: 'Are you going to convert me?' I said: 'Don't swear at the tract; you cannot hurt the tract, but swearing will injure your soul.' 'Who are you?' he exclaimed. 'Form a circle round him,' said he to his comrades, 'and I will swear at him.' They did so; he swore fearfully, and I wept. The tears moved the feelings of the other men, and they said: 'Let him go; he means to do us good.' So I distributed my tracts, and left them in the care of Him who said, 'My word shall not return unto me void.' Many years after I had taken my leave of those soldiers, I returned from India to my native country, and visited Ilfracombe; there I was invited to preach in the open air, a few miles distant. During the time that I was preaching, I saw a tall, gray-headed man in the crowd weeping, and a tall young man, who looked like his son, standing by his side, and weeping also. At the conclusion of the service, they both came up to me, and the father said, 'Do you recollect giving tracts to the local militia at Barnstaple some years ago?' 'Yes.' 'Do you recollect anything particular of that distribution?' 'Yes, I recollect one of the Grenadiers swore at me till he made me weep.' 'Stop,' said he; O, sir! 'I am the man! I never forgave myself for that wicked act. But I hope it has led me to repentance, and that God has forgiven me; and now let me ask, will you forgive me?' It quite overcame me for the moment, and we parted with a prayer, that we might meet in heaven."

THE FIRST CONVERT IN AVA.

The Rev. Mr. Kincaid, a Baptist missionary from Burmah, at a public meeting stated:—"The first convert in Ava, the Golden City as it is called, had his attention arrested by this Burmese tract (which Mr. Kincaid held up to the audience). A company of elderly people were seated in a house, and one of them was discoursing or preaching to them the mysteries of the sacred language of the Hindoos. A Christian preacher went near, and listened for some time. He then said to the people, 'I have a little book here I should like to read to you.' He was at once welcomed. He began reading this little work, which was an epitome of the great truths of the gospel. All listened; and when he had finished, they cried, 'Alas! what have we been about all this time?' 'Will you lend me this book?' inquired the leading man among them. 'Certainly,' replied the preacher; 'and when you want more, come to me.' The man came to me also, and after conversing an hour with him, I gave him some books, and he went away. He returned in a few days, and repeated his visits until he had read all our Christian books. He was convinced of his errors, and, having made a public profession of Christ, was admitted to the church, and became the first Christian in the 'Golden City.' This man was living twelve months ago. He has travelled many miles with me since his conversion, with a bundle of tracts on his back, although he was a person of importance, and had never carried a burden before. Is there, then, I ask, no benefit in diffusing these publications? Go, ask the little churches planted on heathen shores, and let them answer."

THE KAREN MOUNTAIN CHIEF.

The following incident is also related by Mr. Kincaid:—A young Karen mountain chief had heard of the Christian religion, which many of the heathen identify with reading Christian books; but this man could not read, as the Karens had then no written language. He insisted that he must learn to read the Christian books, and went two hundred and fifty miles, with three or four companions, expressly to learn to read. The missionary's wife taught him, and in a short time he was able to read. He was in great joy at his success. As he had much influence over twenty or thirty villages, he was extremely desirous to carry home some books. The Burman government, however, was very jealous of all intercourse with foreigners; and the missionaries tried to dissuade him from taking books home with him, as he would be subjected to persecution. But he placed a number of tracts in a basket, and covered them over with plantain-leaves, and thus tried to pass without suspicion. But he was detected, thrown into prison, and doomed to perpetual bondage as a pagoda slave. Through the influence of friends, however, he was released; but even then he refused to go home unless he could take books with him. This time he was more successful, as he was not detected, but reached his home in safety. He immediately taught his neighbours to read; the news spread to other villages, and great numbers came to his house to be taught. He supplied them with food, and so, through his instrumentality, the gospel was spread wonderfully abroad.

"The tract," says Mr. Kincaid, "that led to the conversion of the young Karen mountain chief cost one halfpenny, and yet it was the instrument of bringing him to the feet of Christ. Whose halfpenny was that? No one can tell; but it is recorded in heaven as the offering of Christian love."

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. The Wonderful Lamp, or Light for the darkest place. 18mo. pp. 239. Price 30 and 35 cents. Postage 8 cents.

This "Wonderful Lamp" is a far better one than that of Aladdin, of which no doubt many of our young readers have read in the "Arabian Nights." It is God's own pure and holy word. The volume shows how wonderful, how powerful, and how valuable this blessed Lamp is, especially to such as are called to walk along dark and thorny paths through this world. It is well written, and will amply repay perusal.

II. Madeleine, or, the Lost Bracelet. By the author of "Little Flora," "James Harwell," "Christmas at Home," &c. 18mo. pp. 100. Price 15 and 20 cents. Postage 5 cents.

This is another volume added to the Board's series for Sabbath-school libraries. It is an unusually instructive and entertaining little book. We can confidently recommend it to all juvenile readers.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, (or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c.) to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.

No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq.. Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

APPROPRIATIONS FROM THE GENERAL FUND.

No appropriation is made without the recommendation of the Presbytery, or the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery within whose bounds the church applying for aid is located.

No appropriation is paid until the Board receives a certificate from the Trustees of the church aided, stating that their church lot is properly secured, and that the amount appropriated will complete their house of worship and leave the whole property free from debt.

Appropriations not called for within two years of the date thereof, are regarded as withdrawn.

THE TIMES AND THE BOARDS.

The state of the country and of the church is likely to affect the Boards very seriously. The Presbyteries in the States of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, seem determined to withdraw from the General Assembly. The States of Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri, which last year furnished the five Boards, by contributions and legacies, fully $20,000 more than was expended in their bounds, cannot, in their present condition, reasonably be expected to do more than to take care of themselves, if, indeed, they can do that. It seems to us that our churches, and especially our judicatories soon to meet, should look the whole subject fairly in the face, and make provision for any increased burdens they may be called to bear.

To assist in this duty, we propose to bring together some facts respecting the incomes and expenditures of the Boards, and present estimates of their probable wants during this year. In doing so we lay no claim to perfect accuracy, as perfect data are not within our reach. Our statements, however, will be almost entirely based on official publications, and will be near enough to the truth to answer all practical purposes. We also premise that estimates of the wants of the Boards for any future period can, at best, be only probable. No Board, unless it be the Board of Foreign Missions, can tell beforehand what demands will be made upon it, and even that Board, peculiar as is its control over the work entrusted to it, may be subjected to large expenditures for which it can make no calculation. The estimates we shall make, will be based chiefly on the past, and be largely determined by the belief, that the first duty of the church now is to strengthen the things that remain and are ready to perish. We shall name only such sums as will enable the church to hold fields she has won at great cost and labour. Vastly larger amounts than those we shall mention can doubtless be disbursed by each Board with very great advantage to the church and the world. It can hardly be necessary to add that this article simply expresses the individual views of the writer, and that he alone is responsible for them.

THE BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

This, the oldest of our Boards, received last year $113,393.87, and appropriated to missionaries $130,866.75. Of the latter sum, according to a table given on the twenty-first page of the fifty-ninth Annual Report, $47,011 was expended in the eleven States first named above. As, however, that table, owing to the peculiar purpose for which it was constructed, foots up nearly $41,000 more of appropriations than was actually made, the proportional reduction would bring down the amounts actually appropriated in those States to $36,385. The receipts last year from all sources in those States are known to be at least $30,500, being within $6000 of the expenditures. Reckoning as above, the appropriations of this Board in Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri, last year, were $14,000, and the receipts just about the same.

The average annual appropriations of this Board, from 1852 to 1860 (eight years), were $88,038.18. If to this be added a fair allowance for enlarged appropriations of last year, extending into this year, it will be safe to say that the Board of Domestic Missions will need at least $100,000 to carry it through the fiscal year, ending March 1, 1862.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

This Board received last year $51,364.46. It appropriated to candidates and institutions of learning $57,647.90. For good reasons this Board does not give the names or locations of its beneficiaries. We have, therefore, no direct data by which to determine the relation of its receipts and expenditures in any particular region. As, however, about one-fifth of all the candidates reported to the General Assembly are in the eleven States, it is probable that the expenditures of the Board on their candidates were not far from $10,000, exceeding the receipts from these States about $3,000. Present appearances indicate that this Board will have more than four hundred candidates under its care this year, and that a number of institutions of learning will need enlarged aid, to keep them from suspension. We suppose $55,000 is a low estimate of its wants during the fiscal year, ending May 1, 1862.

THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

This Board received last year $207,563.86, of which sum $107,956.76 was from our churches in this country. Of this latter sum $22,400 was contributed by churches in the eleven States. Of the expenditures last year $32,332.27 was on account of the South-western Indians, being $20,013 more than the Board received from the United States government on account of those tribes. As these Indian missions are, for the present, broken up, it is probable that but a small part of this excess will be needed this year. Combining this fact with a statement in the special report of the Executive Committee to the General Assembly, we arrive at the conclusion that $160,000 from our churches will supply the wants of this Board during its fiscal year, ending May 1, 1862.

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

This Board received for colportage last year $28,433.97. It expended on colportage account $38,146.47; almost exactly one-fifth of its colportage labour was expended in the eleven States previously mentioned. It would, therefore, be fair to charge them with an expenditure of $7600, while their contributions from all sources are known to exceed $6400. If the colportage work is to be kept up to the standard of last year in the portion of the country still open to such labours, this Board will require about $30,000 a year.

THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

The receipts of this Board last year were $29,892.61, and its expenditures were $31,603.77. During the six years of its existence, this Board has received from the eleven States above named $23,350, and expended within their bounds $23,650. The receipts of this Board have always been far below the pressing calls of the seven hundred houseless churches in our connection. To meet only the most urgent demands that cannot be denied or postponed without serious injury to the church, this Board needs $30,000 during the fiscal year ending April 1, 1862.

DISABLED MINISTERS' FUND.

This fund received last year $5308.87, and expended $6782.51. Very few particulars have been published concerning its wants. What has appeared would indicate that, on its enlarged basis, it will need $10,000 the present year.

SUMMARY.

The sum of the facts and estimates given above, is that the five Boards expended last year in the eleven states so frequently referred to, and in the South-western Indian Territory, $8100 more than they are known to have received therefrom, and that over two hundred thousand members in the States not mentioned in this article, must probably furnish this year three hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars, or important interests of our Zion must suffer. Want of room compels us to reserve for the next number some further facts and suggestions on the same subject.

GEO. H. VAN GELDER,
Treasurer Trustees of General Assembly,
Office, No. 320 Walnut Street.

Philadelphia, August 16th, 1861.

FORM OF BEQUEST FOR DISABLED MINISTERS OR FAMILIES OF DECEASED MINISTERS.

I give and bequeath to my executors hereinafter named, —— dollars, in trust, nevertheless, that they shall within —— months after my decease, pay the same to George H. Van Gelder, Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, or to his successor for the time being in said office, for the use of such disabled ministers, and their families, as the said, The Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America shall or may designate.

NOTA.—This form will do for a pecuniary bequest. If stocks, or land, or other property is given, the phraseology should be modified to suit the case.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN REGARD TO COLLECTIONS.

Whereas, Many of our churches do not contribute to our benevolent enterprises, and whereas, it is desirable to test the power of simultaneous effort; and whereas, an emergency has arisen, requiring the cooperation of all our churches to save our Boards from serious embarrassment, therefore,

Resolved, 1. That this Assembly earnestly request all our churches that have no fixed times for the purpose, to take up annual collections as follows, viz.

For the Board of Domestic Missions on the first Sabbath of November.

For the Board of Foreign Missions on the first Sabbath of January.

For the Board of Education, on the first Sabbath of March.

For the Colportage Fund of the Board of Publication on the first Sabbath of May.

For the Board of Church Extension on the first Sabbath of July.

For the Disabled Ministers' Fund on the first Sabbath of September.

Resolved, 2. That when the annual collections cannot be taken up on the days above designated, it be recommended to take them up as soon thereafter as possible.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST TO ANY OF THE BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of —— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in —— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

TO THE PRESBYTERIES.

The time is at hand when our Presbyteries will hold their semi-annual meetings—when you gather in Christian fellowship and greetings, not merely to perform the ordinary routine of duty, but to cheer one another with a review of the past half year, and to inquire what more can be done for the blessed work of our Lord. It is in Presbytery that the key-note is given—the impulse imparted, which goes forth on the churches; and therefore deeply into all our efficiency as a church does your action enter. Amid the matters which will rightly claim attention, none are more important than the cause of missions in our own land, and never did its importance loom so largely as now. I need not refer to the extraordinary state of the times as leading to perplexity and hesitancy on the part of the Board. I need not speak of our diminished resources, causing retrenchment most painful. These things you know—many of you feel, or will feel them. I call your thoughts to the great work before our church—to supply destitute fields with the gospel—to those whom the providence of God has thrown upon our love and Christian sympathy. Ignorant of Christ and his salvation, so must they continue unless we furnish the gospel. If we fail to meet our duty, who will meet it? What a field opens before us! Where else on the globe is there a work so august and so grand! Look north and west; the fields are white to the harvest, and the toiling labourers are few. Look on those grand States and Territories into which population rushes with a rate in history before unknown—the seat of empire, to send forth an influence to bless or to curse the world; the great North-west with its teeming millions spreading over its huge fields, and astounding the world with the magnificence of its wants. Circumstances make the character of the population such as greatly to need the meliorating influence of the gospel Errors are rife there, and struggle for mastery in a population so mixed and so excited. Early action is needed. We have lost by delay. We are in greater danger now, in these times, of relinquishing points already secured in a measure. The inability of the Board to send men will occasion losses we may not overtake for years of after effort. There is a tide which, taken at the flood, leads to success and security. To miss it endangers much. We renew the fable of the Sybil, who brought the nine books, big with the fate of Rome, to the king. We may have to pay for the unburned three as much as for the whole. Delay is dangerous. Extravagantly may we be compelled to pay in future to recover fields lost by negligence, or the oscitancy of a slumbering church.

Even in times prosperous, when we were congratulating ourselves in the hope of wide expansion, the church was never alive to her sublime mission in this land. Eminent British Christians have thought the work before us so great at home, that we might be excused from labours abroad. But, thanks be to God, we can do both. We can act vigorously abroad, and yet fill our land with churches and ministers. The intense energy of this young nation, sanctified, is equal, under God, to the emergency. We all admit this. But, alas, few of us act with vigour proportionate. To overtake our losses, we must arise. Action, prompt, energetic action, is our necessity. Can we be inactive, when our Lord points to these harvest fields, and bids us enter with all the joy of harvesters? Can believers hold back when souls are in danger of death? We bespeak for our cause a prominent place in the deliberations of your approaching sessions. Let each Presbytery adopt measures to bring home missions before each church. Let no church fail because of the expected scantiness of its collections; let each only do what they can. The rivulet which falls from its rocky ledge in some unbroken wilderness, has its part in God's government as it mingles with others as humble as itself, on their roll to join the Mississippi or the Amazon. It is the aggregate of the littles we want. The princely donations of the wealthy come to the treasury with the mite of the widow—the all she possessed. We may be compelled to look mostly to the rural districts. The revulsions in the cities have prostrated some of our most beneficent donors. The untouched country—comparatively unscathed by the storms—with exuberant harvests and joyous seasons, to them we turn for the bread which is to feed our beloved missionaries. Bring, dear brethren, influences to operate on every church, however humble, and God may graciously grant us deliverance.

The September meeting of the Board gave some gleams of light. We had reduced our indebtedness, and all present felt that united effort would carry the vessel from the shoals of danger. Let the churches be told, those who have not yet contributed, of the recommendations of the Assembly (Minutes, p. 349,) to make simultaneous collections in November. A union of intelligent effort would soon relieve our apprehensions, and enable us to send joy and gladness to many a heart.

In the present crippled state of the Board, it is submitted, that diligent inquiry be made to see that churches asking aid claim the minimum. It is extremely painful for us to reduce the figures of the Presbyteries. We would esteem it a favour, if the Presbyteries and the churches in sympathy with our difficulties would themselves make the needed reductions. Are there no churches in your bounds receiving aid, especially in the older portions of the church, and amid the appliances of established Christianity, which might, by Presbyterial visitations, judiciously managed, be stimulated to do more at home, and become self-sustaining?—aye, church-giving and not church-receiving. To withdraw from the funds of the Board, is equivalent to contributing, and thus enables us to do more for the regions beyond. Are there no churches which have received aid for years, and are as feeble now as ever? Will not Presbytery inquire into these cases, and ascertain whether it is right to carry the burden so long, or whether they might not profitably be united to some other church, in accordance to the repeated injunction of the General Assembly? Dear brethren, the times require candid dealing. The solemnity of our situation will justify all our earnestness; and may the God of the covenant be with you, and give you a year of mercy and of increase; and when you meet in your next stated meeting, may you gather in joyous gratulations over a delivered church, and a reunited country.

THOMAS L. JANEWAY,
Corresponding Secretary.

P. S. Will each Stated Clerk, without further request, present this paper from the Record in his respective Presbytery.

THE TRUE SPIRIT.

An esteemed missionary in the eastern section of our country, writes:

"My first year expired with the beginning of the present month. I have, therefore, no further claims upon you. At the last meeting of Presbytery, our church was again recommended to the Board for an additional appropriation of $100 for the year ending September, 1862; but believing the position of the Board at this time to be peculiarly and painfully embarrassing, I have, therefore, deferred to urge the claims of our own little church, whose needs, though great indeed, are far less than many other feebler ones on the frontier." Then he adds, that a whole-hearted man has paid the sum due to September 1st, and thus relieved the Board still further. Nor is this all. Collections, though small, are taken up by this dear brother, in addition to the generous relinquishment of the usual appropriation.

We are persuaded there are many in the older and more settled portions of our church, who could "go and do likewise." The effect is blessed in a double sense. First, to the church itself, to which the act imparts independence, and the rapid growth of benevolent feelings. Second, it enables the Board to send the gospel to the regions beyond, where the necessities are so urgent, and the wants of the missionaries so cumulative. May we not commend this to eastern Presbyteries, and ask whether inquiries might not develope cases, where an increase could be made at home, and thus aid the Board by increasing the number of the self-sustaining churches. The pulse will beat the stronger, and the flow through the body will be more vigorous, where the riches of their liberality abound in their deep poverty. "He which soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully." Such measures make a healthful church, as the exercise of the muscles makes the vigorous man. Growth physical and moral depends on exercise.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS.

Wisconsin, July 1861.

Dear Brother—We poor shortsighted missionaries, encompassed with manifold discouragements and temptations, until faith grows very weak, do often underrate what the Lord does by us and for us, and therefore our reports are tinged with the sombre hues reflected from our own unbelief. The success of Christ's gospel may not always be proportioned to the number admitted to the sealing ordinances of the church. There is often a blessed leaven of truth, and a savour of Christ, which radiates with warming influence to remote and unnoticed cabins, and works silently in souls whose rough exterior would seem to forbid all access to the gospel's melting rays. Here then are fruits which we cannot gather up or measure. They defy all statistics. From these the missionary will often get that encouragement for which he looks in vain to crowded audiences, or flocking converts. During the past year, the gospel has sifted the many who, for different reasons, gathered to hear the word. When the novelty wore off, some ceased to attend, and some became irregular; but our congregation has grown uniform, and our own adherents and friends have been more united, and have learned to know one another, while upon some of these the truth has fastened, and they have fled to Christ. Others are almost persuaded, and we trust will soon decide the great question, if God withhold not the precious Spirit. Evidences of his quickening presence I have had at all three of my preaching stations, and some half-dozen have been called of God, and have obeyed. God's praying ones have also been strengthened and comforted in the regular ordinances of his house, and the feeding of this little flock in the wilderness has repaid me for all the sacrifice of leaving home and enduring the occasional hardness of a missionary life.

Yours, in the gospel, J. F.

THINGS IN NEBRASKA.

These are trying times to every church and missionary on these frontiers. Our church here struggles hard to keep along, but times are so hard, and money so scarce, that it is impossible to meet the contingent expenses of worship, and meet their agreement with myself. Three-fourths of the year is now past, and they have not paid one-half promised me, though they still hope to to do better. An excellent wheat crop was harvested here, but there is no market. Wheat has been selling at 25 cents per bushel, which is less than it cost to raise it. What is to become of this entire country, I cannot tell. Our best men —those who do the most to sustain the gospel, for the most part, are just now on the eve of bankruptcy.

Dear brother, I assure you that our missionaries have the hardest time to get along of any other class of men in this whole region. I know one who cannot afford any longer to purchase groceries for his family. Sugar, coffee, and tea, are luxuries he dare not hope for—could not pay a respectable butcher's bill for meat. Another, and I will mention his name—our good German brother—is in great distress for clothing for his family. A missionary box of clothing would send a thrill of joy to the heart of every member of his family. He is a worthy brother, and is doing a noble work. Dear brethren, if you possibly can, do send him something soon.

I could write much. My heart is full, my hands full. I hardly know which way to turn, but the Lord direct and keep us. I deeply sympathize with the Board in their present embarrassments. May the troubles in our land cease, and peace be restored.

Yours in Christian bonds,

H. M. G.

A CHURCH FINISHED.

On last Sabbath, we had our new church dedicated to the worship of God, and we then had renewed tokens of God's presence among us, in the interest manifested by all, young and old. The erection of this house of worship will give us an influence in this neighbourhood which we had not before, and will show to the community that the Presbyterian church here is not a mere experiment. Besides, it will secure a much larger attendance on the means of grace, and thus assist us much in the support of the gospel. A number of persons have already come forward and taken pews, who never attended any church. We feel now as if a great work has been accomplished here, which will be a blessing, not only to this generation, but to generations yet unborn.

Our Sabbath-school is still on the increase, and very frequently adds a stone to that spiritual building, which ere long will be completed with "shoutings of grace, grace unto it."

We trust, dear brother, that the Lord will bless and prosper you in your work, and that the Board of Missions will this year do more to glorify God, and build up Zion, than it has ever done yet; and that every church, large and small, will do what they can to sustain the Board. We will do so. J. H. C.

A VOICE FROM THE NORTHWEST.

I am aware that the rate of giving to these Boards in the country churches east of the mountains, and indeed west, is greatly below what it might and ought to be. Can nothing be done to arouse them to more proportionate efforts? In most cases their own pastor's salaries are kept at the lowest possible scale; and very likely this is one reason why they give so little to the schemes of the church at large. They give little, and hoard up all they can for themselves. Is not the Lord punishing this spirit by making so large a draught now for war expenses? They who give niggardly for the support of the gospel at home, will do little or nothing for those at a distance, whether in their own or other lands.

The whole work of the Domestic Board never was more urgent than at present. Feeble churches need to be sustained, more now than before the troublous times of the country. New churches need to be formed and encouraged. Our development is entirely too slow, and wholly disproportioned to the necessities of the country. Here in the Northwest much must be done now, or it never can be done. When will the church awake to the importance of this great work, and consecrate her gifts and substance without stint, to her own enlargement? Oh! that she were wise.

Yours, very truly, A. H.

RESIGNATION OF THE SECRETARY OF THE SOUTHWESTERN ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

Hampton, N. H., June 1, 1861.

Rev. and Dear Brother—The present unhappy condition of our country, and the evident and inevitable drifting of the southern portion of our beloved church towards secession and irreconcilable separation, constrains me to tender to the Board, through you, my resignation as Secretary for the South-Western Advisory Committee, located at New Orleans. Deeply lamenting the sad causes which compel me to leave the field and work of Missions in the Southwest, so endeared to me by the attachments of labour and fraternal associations, I return to you, and all the officers and members of the Board, my grateful thanks for uniform courtesy and kindness.

Fraternally and truly, &c.,

RANDOLPH A. DELANCEY.

September 10, 1861.

P. S. My resignation dates back to May 31, as I have declined to draw any salary since that time. R. A. DELANCEY.

We lament deeply the cause which deprives the work of Home Missions of the services of so valuable and efficient a labourer.

THE DECLINATURE OF DR. HAPPERSETT.

At the late meeting of the Board, the following communication was received.

Philadelphia, Pa., August 19, 1861.

To the Board of Domestic Missions.

Dear Brethren—For satisfactory reasons, I respectfully decline the appointment of Superintendent of Missions on the Pacific Coast.

Yours, &c. R. HAPPERSETT.

THE MISSIONARY'S FIRST BEREAVEMENT.

A heavy affliction has been laid upon us. Our youngest child—our little "blue-eyed Mary," aged seventeen months, has been taken from us, and laid in the dust. She was truly the light of our household, the joy of our missionary home, and the centre around which revolved much of our social happiness. But that centre is removed, the revolutions around it have ceased for ever; and that light is lifted from earth, and placed as a luminary upon the shores of immortality. Earth has less attractions, while heaven has more. Our deep sorrow is not without its mingling of mercy. There is no unpleasant reflection connected with it, so far as the dear little one is concerned. She is at rest in the bosom of eternal love. We try to say and feel: "Thy will, O God! be done," but it is often with a struggle, and the words choke in our throats as we utter them. I never knew before how to sympathize with those parents whose children I have been called to bury. I verily thought I could sympathize with them, but I knew nothing about it; God has been teaching me in the only possible way the lesson I so much needed to learn.

HOW IT IS IN PRESBYTERIAN SCOTLAND.

"As to the instruction of the people, it is much more generally diffused in Scotland than in England. The Bible and the Catechism are familiar to every Scottish child. I have entered a poor hut in the Highlands, built of a few rough stones, scarcely rising above the ground, and roofed with turf; and I have found in it a people of pleasing manners, and of a remarkable cultivation, which formed a striking contrast with their poverty. A pure and living Christian church is the greatest blessing that can be granted to a people. It is the only instrument fitted to civilize nations."

D'AUBIGNE.

How much important truth is contained in the above extract? What a valuable lesson does it teach to Americans, and especially to Christians in this land? "A pure and living Christian church is the greatest blessing that can be granted to a people." Of the truth of this remark there can be no question. The Bible sustains it, and all history confirms it. A pure, living Christian church, with its ministry and ordinances, secures intelligence, industry, order, peace, and harmony, while at the same time it is the great and divinely-appointed instrument for the sanctification and salvation of men. And in a country like ours, where men are at liberty to think and act for themselves, where the people govern, and where all is progress, what boon to be compared with this? Plant such a church in every neighbourhood, and let it be supplied with an intelligent, devoted ministry, and the traveller would find, even in our humblest log cabins, intelligence, neatness, order, temporal and spiritual enjoyment. What a view does this give us of the importance of Domestic Missions? To accomplish this great end, to plant a pure, living Christian church in every neighbourhood, and give the living teacher with the life-giving, and life-sustaining ordinances of the gospel, is the high and holy object of all our missionary efforts. Nor will our work be done until this is accomplished. What a noble enterprise! What patriot, what Christian, can refuse to help in such a work? Is there an individual, in whose heart is found the love of country, or love to souls, who will not rejoice to lend his aid, in giving a pure living Christian church, and an evangelical ministry to our whole population, and thus do his part in blessing our land and perpetuating our invaluable civil and religious privileges?—Dom. Miss. Chronicle.

EXTRACTS.

"How little do the rich ever think what the aggregate even of their squandered shillings would do in the way of charity, were they systematically applied to it."—Hannah More.

John Wesley lived upon £28 the first year of his married life; the next year his salary was doubled, but he still lived on £28. So every year was he the same plain, frugal, simple man, and at the end of his honoured life, he was found to have expended in charitable benefactions £30,000, or $150,000 of our money.

Chrysostom supported, at his own expense, missionaries among the heathen. Serapion, to win converts to Christ, sold himself as a slave to an actor; and never ceased till the poor actor and his family were baptized into Christ. He then sold himself to a leading professor, who had become a Manichean, and never rested till he had won him back to the truth in Jesus.

"One says, I will give to-morrow. Alas! do you know whether you shall be alive to-morrow? Another says, I am poor. Yes, you are poor and destitute, but it is of faith, of love, and of mercy. A third, Whom do I wrong? I keep only my own. From whom did you receive these riches? and whence did you bring them? Did not you come naked from your mother's womb, and naked shall you return to your dead? When you appropriate to thyself that wealth which belongs to many, and of which you are the steward, you are a robber."—St. Basil.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Domestic Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Our leading institutions, both collegiate and theological, are öpening with large numbers of students. In many of them there will be no falling off in attendance, whilst in some of them there are prospects of a large increase. These encouraging tidings, which must cheer the lovers of Zion and the friends of Christian education, excite feelings of painful anxiety in the minds of the members of the Board of Education. In the presence of this encouraging fact, the Board have to mourn over a sad and an alarming decrease in the receipt of remittances from our churches. They feel bound not to desert these young men, and they cannot abandon those glorious institutions of learning and piety, which have nourished and blessed both the country and the church. The Board have resolved to stand by the young men, and the institutions with which they are connected. This they have done, however, in reliance upon the coöperation of the churches. If the churches do not furnish the funds, the Board are utterly powerless. But why should the churches not furnish the needed funds? Is it because of the present national distress? We trow not. There is nothing in the calamities of the present hour to justify any church within the boundaries of our Zion in withholding from this cause the aid they have been wont to extend. Let any man examine the Minutes of Assembly for 1861, on this point, and he will say that our conclusion is a warrantable one. Here are three churches, numbering, in their respective rolls, 127, 57, and 55 members, which churches contributed, respectively, during last year, to the cause of Education, $5, $6, and $1. Now we would ask, could any financial panic, or national distress, short of absolute and utter bankruptcy in purse and scrip, bring down the scale of benevolence to a lower grade? No matter what any man may say to the contrary, we believe that the church which mustered up the sum of one dollar for the Board of Education in 1860–61, can, notwithstanding the devastations of war, manage to raise at least one dollar in 1861–2. Brethren, we ask no great thing at your hands. We simply ask you to repeat even the scanty beneficence of last year. Even this will sustain our young men, and prevent our institutions of learning from being closed.

THE GOOD PASTOR.

A pastor is a shepherd, whose sheep are the sheep of Christ, the people of God. To be a good pastor of such a flock implies very high attainments and qualities. Our Saviour, who is himself the Chief Shepherd, describes, in the tenth chapter of the Gospel by John, a good shepherd, and distinguishes him from the hireling who fleeth when the wolf approaches. In its highest reference, this description must be regarded as intended to apply to Christ himself; yet we are persuaded that we ought to regard it as generic, and the application as specific, even in the case of Christ. He first describes the good shepherd—gives the true idea of a good shepherd, and then establishes his claims to the title. In himself the conditions and qualifications embraced in the description are found in perfection, but this is not to be considered as sufficient proof that they are not to be sought in the case of those who are merely under-shepherds. This description, in the main, must apply to every shepherd who holds a pastoral staff, or leads forth a flock, under the Chief Shepherd. Let us then, beloved young men, ye who are candidates for the holy office of the holy ministry, consider this description of a good shepherd, given by the Son of God himself.

1. The good shepherd is one who enters by the door into the sheepfold. Now this door is Christ. A good pastor, then, must meet this condition, which lies at his very entrance upon the office. He must enter by Christ. What are we to understand by this? To enter by Christ, is to enter by Christ's appointment. No other than Christ can grant permission to a shepherd to pass into the fold, and take charge of his sheep. In former articles we have spoken at large upon this preliminary to the assumption of the pastorate. No matter who appoints, if Christ appoints not, the shepherd has no right to enter the fold, or assume the functions of this most sacred office.

The Scriptures abundantly confirm this position. The first shepherds, under the new dispensation, entered the fold, and took charge of the sheep, by Christ's appointment. What he said to Peter, in restoring him to the office from which he had fallen, he said to the other apostles—"feed my sheep, feed my lambs." During his humiliation he illustrated the truth in question, by calling men with the lips of his humanity, and setting them apart to this office. And surely that transaction, between the ascended Saviour and Saul of Tarsus, must ever stand out illustrious, not only for the power and grace of the Lord Jesus, but also as a proof that he is the fountain-head of all official authority in his church. An appointment which brought Christ from heaven to earth must rank high in the estimation of the church's Head.

Nor are we to regard these primary appointments as singular and exceptional, as if the condition in question was restricted to the days of Christ's flesh, or to the apostolic period. The ascension of Christ to the throne had direct reference to the appointment of shepherds. He ascended that he might fill all things, and the filling referred to, is immediately described as the furnishing of gifts to men, for the work of the ministry. And this ministry, with its heaven-bestowed qualifications—this ministry appointed and qualified by the enthroned Mediator, we are informed, is to continue until we all come unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. A ministry of Christ's own qualification and appointment is, therefore, the only ministry recognized in the word of God. He who enters not in by this door is a thief and a robber, no matter how he may have entered. It makes no matter what other way he may have effected an entrance, and assumed the office of a shepherd; it makes no matter what ladder he may have employed in scaling the wall; it matters not whether the ladder was episcopal, or presbyterial, or laical, if he have entered by climbing, instead of entering by the door, he is, in the estimation of Christ, a thief and a robber.

Dear young brethren, what say you as to this fundamental condition? Have you entered by the door? Are you of Christ's own appointment? Has he given to you the pastoral gifts? These we shall consider at another time, but delay not the consideration of this primary question—'Have you entered into the sheepfold by the door?' Confound not this question with such as these, 'Have you passed the scrutiny of the church session? have you been regularly examined and recommended by the Presbytery?' You may have passed through these ordeals, and given satisfaction to your examinators; but oh, if the Omniscient Saviour, who is himself the door, have not approved and appointed you, you are, after all, in his estimation, but thieves and robbers!

PRESBYTERIAL SUPERVISION.

On the faithful exercise of Presbyterial supervision, in the reception of candidates, so far as instrumentalities are concerned, depends the purity of our ministry. The candidates of the present decade will be the ministers of the next. As they are now, so will be our future ministry. With what solemnity does this consideration invest Presbyterial action in the reception of candidates! Can men engage in a more sacred, or more solemn, or more important transaction? The bearing of the action upon the candidate himself, upon the cause of education, upon the character and style of the piety of his fellow-students, upon the particular charge to which he may be afterwards appointed, upon the future ministry which may be raised under his preaching and appointed by his act as a presbyter, is so far-reaching, and is related to so many sacred relationships, that no tongue can tell, or mind enumerate, the evil or the good which may result from the reception of one candidate. He may be a son of consolation, or an angel of death, to thousands in his own generation, and, through others moulded under his influence, to tens of thousands in generations yet to be. Who can estimate the issues of good which hung upon the appointment of Knox, or the issues of evil which hung upon the appointment of Pelagius? Did any body of men ever engage in a transaction which was to exercise so momentous an influence over the interests of the church of Christ in this, and in other lands, as that Presbytery which examined and licensed Archibald Alexander? Other examples, illustrative of the connection between Presbyterial action in the admission of candidates, and the prosperity of the church, will occur to the minds of almost all our readers. What we wish, in the present remarks, is to draw the attention of all concerned, and especially of the Presbyteries, to this all-important subject.

We trust that our brethren will not regard the Board of Education as intruding upon the sphere, or assuming any of the prerogatives, of Presbytery, when they venture to stir up their minds on this subject, by way of remembrance. We wish it to be distinctly understood, that the business of supervision belongs to the Presbyteries, and not, except in a secondary and very limited sense, to the Board of Education. The Board can do much, and have done much, to aid Presbyteries in the performance of this solemn duty; but after all, the entire responsibility of receiving, suspending, or dismissing candidates, rests upon the Presbyteries, and not upon the Board. The only exceptions to this are embraced in the following rule of the Board, adopted by the General Assembly:

"If, at any time, there be discovered in any student such defect in capacity, diligence, prudence, and especially in piety, as would render his introduction into the ministry a doubtful measure, it shall be considered the sacred duty of the Board to withdraw their appropriations. Students shall also cease to receive the assistance of the Board when their health shall become so bad as to unfit them for study, and for the work of the ministry; when they are manifestly improvident, and contract debts without reasonable prospects of payment; when they marry; when they receive the assistance of any other Educational Board or Society; when they fail to make regular returns, or cease, by a change of circumstances, to need aid."

Here is the sphere within which the Board have power, that is, power to withdraw their appropriations. Within this sphere, and to this extent only, can the Board take action. They are not an ecclesiastical court. They can neither receive, nor discipline candidates. They never go behind the action of a Presbytery. They never refuse to aid a young man recommended by a Presbytery, nor do they ever continue their aid when the Presbyterial recommendation is withdrawn.

It is, therefore, with you, dear brethren of the ministry, ultimately and primarily with you, to guard the entrance to the sacred office. Bear with us, then, in respectfully, yet earnestly reminding you of the sacredness of the trust committed to your keeping, of the awful responsibility which rests upon you. As you are admonished to lay hands suddenly upon no man, so you are, by implication, admonished to point out, or designate no man suddenly, as a candidate for the imposition of hands. We would counsel you, as the venerable Dr. Archibald Alexander was wont, in his lectures on Pastoral Theology, to counsel his students—"Take heed that you be not hasty in naming certain young men in your congregations, as suitable persons for the holy ministry. By doing so, you may tempt some who are not called of God to become candidates, and when the first step is taken, the fear of disgrace may prevent them from turning back, or entering other professions for which they may be qualified, and which they might adorn." There is much of the wisdom of a master in Israel in this counsel. Let the pastor remark in his intercourse with his people, that John, or Andrew, or Thomas, has talents, &c., for the ministry, and there is a strong probability that the youth thus singled out and marked, in his neighbourhood, as a candidate, will eventually enter upon the sacred office. Here, then, brethren, is just the point where great caution is required on your part. The fact is, that it is here the matter is generally determined. Our fellow-presbyters, for the most part, depend upon the opinion of a young man's pastor. If he recommends, the Presbytery will hesitate before they refuse to endorse his recommendation. This brings the responsibility home to the understanding and conscience of every pastor in his own pastorate, as well as to the heart and conscience of every presbyter in his capacity as a member of a court of the Lord Jesus Christ. To every minister of the blood-bought church of Christ, whether he move in the social circle, or sit as a ruler in Christ's house, our counsel is, "lay hands suddenly on no man." The purity of the church, the salvation of souls, the glory of the Redeemer, conspire to enforce the injunction of Paul to Timothy, "Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partakers of other men's sins."

From the Presbyterian.

STUDY AND SPIRITUALITY.

The Theological Seminaries of our church are about to open for the reception of students; and in a short time, numbers of young men will be gathered together for the great work of preparation for the greater work of the ministry of the gospel. Nothing appeals to the heart of the church more directly and powerfully, than the spectacle of these groups of consecrated youth engaged in the serious and difficult studies which are to fit them in after years for the service of the church; and nothing excites more earnest prayer in those who know best what are the true and lasting interests of Zion, than the desire that this season of preparation may be wisely and fully employed. The painful regret with which many look back upon its lost hours and vanished opportunities, quickens their hope that those to whom they are now present, may not heedlessly let them slip. In the spirit of this hope, we would utter a few words to this most interesting class of our readers.

The immediate task before all such is, to make study and spirituality agree together, or better, to make study minister to growth in spirituality. It is not, by any means, true that the mere study of sacred things will give increase to spirituality. It is true that here, as elsewhere, "the letter killeth." Absorption in the acquisition of the Hebrew language, or in the history of the church, will operate as all absorbing pursuits confessedly do. Unless watched, and resisted, it will lead the heart from God by filling it with cares concerning those things which are external; concerning things which must be known, but which may be known without exerting any sanctifying influence upon the soul. We can conceive of a devotion to sacred studies, which will be as powerless in its tendency to bring men near to God, as devotion to the most ordinary pursuits of life.

This danger has not been unnoticed by those who have been made wise to discern the arts of the adversary, and who have been watchful concerning the approaches of all seductive influences. When David Sandeman wrote down in his journal, under date of January 2, 1851, the words, "Study, even the most close and effective, did not estrange me from God," he gave proof that he understood the danger we are speaking of, and had been enabled, by the grace of God, to escape from it. If one who so narrowly watched his own heart, and was so careful to avoid everything which would mar the purifying work of the Spirit of God in him, saw this peril, surely no one is justified in being indifferent to it, or in carelessly denying its existence. Let all rather watch and pray, lest we enter into this temptation.

It will assist those who recognize this danger, and are striving to avoid it, to know how the devout young student we have just referred to, was able so to study, that it did "not estrange him from God." It was, as his biographer Bonar tells us, by making it his rule "to study all day in the presence of Jesus." A rare attainment, surely, if it was granted him to observe always his rule. The breeze from off the mountain top could not give a more elastic vigour to the body than this Divine presence must have given to the mind. Toil would be a pleasure, when sweetened by a consciousness that the lonely room was filled by one so gracious and kind; and while the mind was employed in severe and exhausting labour, the heart might go out ever and anon, towards a Saviour, known to be merciful, and felt to be near. Surrounded by this presence, and conscious of dwelling in it, there would be small risk that study would deaden spirituality, or that the most vigorous and continuous working of the intellect, would have any influence in restraining the upward soaring of the soul towards Christ, and heavenly things.

We earnestly beg our young brethren to think of these things. The power of every minister of the gospel is largely dependent on the depth and vigour of the spiritual life which is in him. This cannot be the product of a day. It must come from the daily and careful nurture of years. It will not be given by licensure or ordination. It is to be cultivated, in all the preparation for the ministry, as assiduously as intellectual culture, and the utmost watchfulness is to be observed, lest the latter should interfere with the former, and the result be "light without love"—an intellect, keen and brilliant, but a heart which is not burning with the love of Christ, or the love of souls.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

The following was selected for the Record by Dr. Van Rensselaer, and given by him, together with other scraps, to the present editor of the Educational department, shortly before his death. We have inserted it, not only because he gave it, but because of the portrait of himself which is mirrored in it. We have here the true image of as tender a heart as ever beat in the breast of man, and a key to that household love which still renders that home in Burlington, even now that he is gone, a paradise on earth.

From "Thoughts on the Death of Little Children."

THE CHILD IS DEAD.

It is hard to believe it; that we shall no more hear the glad voice, nor meet the merry laugh, that burst so often from its glad heart.

Child as it was, it was a pleasant child; and to the partial parent there are traits of loveliness that no other eye may see. It was a wise ordering of Providence that we should love our own children, as no one else loves them, and as we love the children of none besides. And ours was a lovely child.

But the child is dead! You may put away its playthings. Put them where they will be safe. I would not like to have them broken or lost; and you need not lend them to other children when they come to see us. It would pain me to see them in other hands, much as I love to see children happy with their toys.

Its clothes you may lay aside; I shall often look them over, and each of the colours that he wore will remind me of him as he looked when he was here. I shall weep often when I think of him; but there is a luxury in thinking of the one that is gone, which I would not part with for the world. I think of my child now, always, though an angel among angels.

The child is dead. The eye has lost its lustre. The hand is still and cold. The little heart is not beating now. How pale it looks! Yet the very form is dear to me. Every lock of its hair, every feature of the face, is a treasure that I shall prize the more, as the months of my sorrow come and go.

Lay the little one in its coffin. He never was in so cold and hard a bed, but he will feel it not. He would not know it, if he had been laid in his cradle, or his mother's arms. Throw a flower or two by his side; like them he withereth.

Carry him out to the grave gently. It is a hard road to the grave. Every jar seems to disturb the infant sleeper. Here we are, at the brink of the sepulchre. Oh, how damp, and dark, and cold. But the dead do not feel it. There is no pain, no fear, no weeping there. Sleep on now, and take your rest!

Fill it up! Ashes to ashes, dust to dust. Every clod seems to fall on my heart. Every smothered sound from the grave is saying, Gone, gone, gone! It is full now. Lay the turf gently over the dear child. Plant a myrtle among the sods, and let the little one sleep among the trees and flowers. Our child is not there. His dust, precious dust, indeed, is there, but our child is in heaven. He is not here; he is risen.

I shall think of the form that is mouldering here among the dead; and it will be a mournful comfort to come at times, and think of the child that was once the light of our house, and the idol —ah! that I must own the secret of this sorrow! —the idol of my heart.

And it is beyond all language to express the joy in the midst of tears, I feel that my sin, in making an idol of the child, has not made that infant less dear to Jesus. Nay, there is even something that tells me the Saviour called the darling from me, that I might love the Saviour more when I had one child less to love. He knoweth our frame; he knoweth the way to win and bind us. Dear Saviour, as thou hast my lamb, give me, too, a place in thy bosom. Set me as a seal on thy heart.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

In this department, the Board of Education are absolutely at a stand. They have been enabled, through the beneficence of one whose praise is in all the churches, to pay the salary of one professor, and, through means of a legacy left by a dying student, who has, more than a year ago, entered upon his reward, to make small appropriations to two parochial schools; but beyond this, little or nothing has been done in this important department.

Brethren of the ministry, what are we to say to these things? Are our schools and colleges to be closed? Brethren of the eldership, we beseech you, lay these things to heart. The sum of $2 from each of our churches would enable the Board, not only to carry on all her operations in this branch of her labours, but would put her on a higher footing than she has ever yet occupied. Will the church on whose banner the watchword Education has been displayed, throughout her entire history, withhold from her institutions, because of any national embarrassment or distress, the needed aid, when that aid can be furnished at so small a sacrifice? Can the churches not furnish to this fundamental cause an average contribution of $2 each?

Let no man seek in the calamities of war an apology for refusing the needed aid. These calamities are the strongest argument that can be found, and the loudest that can be uttered, on behalf of the cause we advocate. What has brought all these evils upon our once happy country?—What but the lack of moral and religious training? Men have not been taught to reverence magistracy as an ordinance of God. They have not been taught the sacredness and the binding moralities of the oath. They have not been taught that covenant-breaking is a sin against God. They have not been duly impressed with the sinfulness of covetousness. Our whole distress may be traced to a defective education. The men who were trained in the Shorter Catechism, and grounded in the great truths of the Christian religion—the men who laid the foundations of our government have slept with their fathers, and in their stead there has arisen a generation too wise to walk in their fathers' footsteps, and too knowing to be taught by the word of God. Is it with the evils of this retrogression before our eyes—a retrogression originating in the abandonment of the Bible as the great national text-book for school and college, that we are concluding to give up our religious educational efforts? No, God forbid! With these evils, as so many pillars of salt to warn us, let us turn to the school and the college as, instrumentally and under God, the ark of our national safety, the palladium of our country's hope.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America the sum of ——— dollars to and for the uses of the said Board of Education.

[When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.]

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.
September 12th, 1861.

Recent Intelligence.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

Three of the teachers among the Choctaws, we are glad to mention, have safely reached their homes in the North—Miss Culbertson, Miss Downing, and Miss Long. They left Stockbridge on the 7th of August. Many of the Indians were going as soldiers to join the "Confederate" troops.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Letters have reached us from Mr. McLaren at Bogota, to July 24th. They report the complete success of the Liberal army. General Mosquera entered Bogota on the 18th of July; on the 22d, the Pope's Internuncio and the Jesuits were ordered to leave the country; on the 24th, a decree was issued, which restricts the license of the bishops and the monastic orders. The effect of this revolution on our missionary work will probably be most happy. Mr. McLaren is anxious that another missionary should join him without delay, and we are glad to mention that one is under appointment who, we hope, will be able to go out at an early day. It is a reason for thankfulness that our missionary friends in Bogota were kept in safety during the siege, and the violent excitement which often prevailed. Battles were fought within sight of the city, and afterwards the city itself was taken by assault, but they were protected from harm, and their minds were kept in peace.

AFRICA.

Letters have been received from Liberia to July 3d; Niffau, April 6th; and Corisco, June 19th. The brethren at Corisco have had to mourn over the unworthy conduct of some of the members of the church, the diminished attention of the people to religious things, and the going back to heathenish practices of some of their scholars. Spanish and French war vessels were in the Bay of Corisco. Mr. De Heer gives an account of a visit which some of the church-members of his station had made to the Balingi tribe, on the main land, during which praiseworthy efforts were made to give them some knowledge of the gospel. See his letter in another column.

From Niffau, Mr. T. H. Amos's letter is not of recent date. He speaks of great indifference on the part of the people to the instructions of the missionaries, and the tone of his letter is far from encouraging.

INDIA.

Our letters are dated at Lahor, June 19th; Futtehgurh, June 18th; Futtehpore, May 31st; and Allahabad, June 19th. Mr. Wikoff mentions the admission of two converts to the church at Allahabad, and Mr. Walsh reports the death of the venerable Maulavi, Mohammed Taki, who was baptized a few years ago. His Mohammedan friends stole his body, and buried him as a Mussalman. Mr. and Mrs. Walsh had both been severely attacked by sickness, but we are glad to learn they were nearly well.

SIAM.

We have received letters from Bangkok, June 5th, and from Petchaburi, June 15th. The arrival of Messrs. McGilvary and McFarland, and their wives, at the new station at Petchaburi is mentioned. This is the first station in Siam that has been occupied at any distance from the capital. It is a small city of 15,000 inhabitants, about one hundred miles southwest of Bangkok, and it gives ready access to a population estimated at from 500,000 to 1,000,000. The brethren begin their work there under favourable circumstances, and they are anxious to be assisted in it by the prayers of the churches.

CHINA.

Our advices from this country are dated at Canton, June 10th; Ningpo, June 26th; Shanghai, June 18th; and Tangchow, in the northern province of Shantung, May 21st. Messrs. Gayley and Danforth, and their wives, reached Tangchow early in May, and Mr. and Mrs. Nevius were on the eve of going to the same province. The health of Mr. Gayley, Mrs. Danforth, and Mrs. Nevius required this change of climate. It is not unlikely that it may be considered expedient to form a permanent station in that part of the country. Dr. McCartee had returned to Ningpo. The members of the Ningpo church who live in the Sanpoh district, had been organized as a separate church, by the direction of the Presbytery. Messrs. Rankin and Morrison took part in the services, which were of much interest. The new church has thirty-two communicants, and two elders. An aged blind woman was baptized at Bao-ko-tah, near Ningpo. The dispensary at Fat-shan was going on well, and the brethren at Canton were still anxious to have two more men sent out to help them.

Mrs. Henry V. Rankin and her children arrived at New York, August 20th, after a long but pleasant voyage, which was of service to her health.

CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. Loomis, after a short visit in the country, was again at his post in San Francisco. See his letter in another column.

OVERLAND POSTAGE.

We would call attention to the standing Notice in our last column, which has been changed so as to conform to the new rates of postage.

SPECIAL FUNDS AND NEW MISSIONARIES.

It is with sincere pleasure we mention that the Committee hope to send out, in a few weeks, a missionary to Siam, another to New Granada, and a third to Brazil—special funds having been received for this purpose. These three countries contain over 12,000,000 of inhabitants, and the number of missionaries amongst them does not exceed one to each million of souls. The door for missionary labour in these countries is probably more open now than at any former time.

It is worthy of grateful remark that this is the third donation for sending out new labourers—all of these gifts being additional to the usual contributions of the respected donors. We have reason to know, also, that additional or enlarged gifts have been received from other friends, for the general support of the missions. It is the Spirit of God, we believe, who has inclined and enabled his servants thus to come forward with timely aid. We regard these gifts as answers to many prayers. They will call forth many thanksgivings to God. We trust they will encourage others to do likewise.

We may add, as another cause of thankfulness, that no missionary, who is able to go out, is now likely to be kept at home. Owing to various causes, but not, we believe, to diminished interest in the work of missions, some of the brethren under appointment on the first of May as missionaries, will not be able to go out. Two have gone, however, and one has returned to his field of labour; the passages of two others are engaged; and several others will be ready to go out this fall. In this, we see the hand of God for good on this work of his people.

Some might, perhaps, stand in doubt of the policy of enlarging the missions in these times, if they did not consider the special circumstances under which these new men are sent forth; and in these, as well as in the loud calls for more men, they will see reasons for going forward. The ability of our churches can certainly not be regarded as exhausted, seeing that more than half of them gave nothing at all last year in aid of this cause. May we not hope that the events now in progress will teach many of our Christian brethren new lessons as to laying up treasures in heaven, and as to self-denial for Christ? Most of us may be able to reach a higher standard of devotedness. Even if our means are diminished, it will still be the case probably that for single articles in common use our people will expend more than our missions cost—many-fold more. Those who can afford the expense may properly enjoy the good gifts of God's bounty, but some of these are not such articles of necessity as to be weighed against the need of the bread of life by the heathen. Moreover, we trust these sad times will come to an end, at no distant day; but whatever may be the will of God as to this, it is certain that his cause must go forward. There is a bright day before us. The church will arise and shine. This cause of missions will be greatly extended. Let us have faith, heart, and hope. Does not the word of God assure us of success?

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

THE WORK IN PROGRESS.

The Rev. A. W. Loomis writes from San Francisco, July 23d, as follows.

I have not written much lately; we have been very busily employed. Many immigrants have been coming in this spring, and we have been doing all we could for them. We have been going from caravansary to caravansary, from lodging-house to lodging-house to deliver that message which our Master charged us with.

Visits to newly-arrived Chinamen—First attendance at church of 50 or 60 of them.

Last Saturday afternoon, while calling at the shops and visiting the people in the city, I learned that a ship had arrived with more strangers—about 200. I visited some of them immediately. Sabbath morning I went to two of the caravansaries—had a pleasant time at one, and talked a long time to quiet and attentive people; at the other the crowd was so great, and so many resident Chinese coming to meet, or to look up their friends, and their salutations were so boisterous, that my voice was drowned many times; however, a few who kept close to me and listened attentively heard the outlines of the news which Christ sent us to publish. Leaving at each place a few books, I returned home to rest for the afternoon service. By and by I heard the steps of the teacher. He seemed more tired than myself, (he is rather a fleshy person, and upwards of fifty years of age, and recently he was laid up for two or three weeks with a lame back.) Without any instruction from me, he had been calling on the strangers, distributing books, and describing to them the situation of the chapel, and inviting them to come. At one o'clock, I went down to open the chapel, and to be there to receive and entertain any who might drop in; for our congregations are not so punctual to the minute as some others. Soon the teacher entered, leading half-a-dozen people, and started off for more; again he brought in a company of his newly-arrived countrymen, and so again the third time. Meantime I directed their attention to the scrolls on the wall, and we read and talked about them, and when Mrs. Loomis came down we sang a hymn or two. Other Chinese friends, to whom we had spoken, brought in some persons with them. At two o'clock the regular services began, but still there were some dropping in till we were nearly through.

A portion of Scripture (which we read in course) was read and explained; then a short tract; then I called their attention to the large letters on the cover of the book which all held in their hands—the "Glad Sound," joyful tidings, good news; and then I told them over again what the good news was; and every man of them listened to it. Here were between fifty and sixty souls listening to Christ's message; and was not Christ with us? did not he promise us he would be?—was he not preaching his own word through our lips, and why will we not believe that it will be a savour of life to some?

Visits at "Company-houses"—An encouraging incident.

Yesterday (Monday) we were employed all day in preaching to the newly-arrived Chinamen at their lodgings, and their lodgings are not such as our people are accustomed to take when they travel, viz. at the hotels. The Chinaman carries his own bed, his baggage, his provisions, and his cooking apparatus. When they come from the ship, all they want is an empty room, on the floor of which they spread every man his mat, and besides the mat, a cotton quilt or blanket. Boxes, baskets, bundles, buckets, skillets, and bowls, fill the space not occupied by mats.

At the company-house, which we first visited, lay a poor sick man, lately arrived from the mines, and from the one we last visited a corpse had just been borne to the cemetery; and the people were silent and serious while we talked to them about death, and the one way to be prepared for it. To witness the eagerness with which these strangers listen to these new doctrines in this strange land, makes our hearts ache sometimes—makes our hearts ache, we say, because of the anxiety expressed in their honest faces, and because we know how hard it is for them to comprehend the system we present, and to believe at once the truths we utter, and how hard it will be to unlearn the teachings of all their previous life, and to tear loose from the fetters of habit, the shackles of superstition, to escape from the bondage of fear, and to resist the devil on every hand.

We had finished our last discourse, and were leaving the caravansary, when we encountered a fresh arrival, each with bed and baggage slung from the ends of a pole balanced on the shoulder. Another ship had just arrived with 700 passengers.

This morning we start out on a new mission. It is as though we were taking a journey to a distant settlement of 700 souls, inhabiting five or six villages, for in so many different houses are they lodged. Instead, however, of travelling several hundred miles to speak to these heathen, God has gathered them out from many villages, led them to the port, and, putting them on board a ship, has brought them all the way across the great ocean, that they may receive our books and hear our words—words by which they may be saved. Surely it becomes us to be in earnest, for within a few days all of these will be gone again—gone to the mines. Now while we are talking and reading, explaining, arguing, and exhorting, how many are praying for us? While we are prophesying to the dry bones, will not the hosts of God's people be prophesying to the wind, saying, Come, O breath! and breathe upon the slain?

We went over only about half the field to-day, and, if alive and well, must go over the other half to-morrow; all, however, have been visited, and books have been distributed among them.

Asking, as I did just now, "How many are praying for us?" reminds me of an encouraging little incident of a few evenings ago. A friend ran in to sit a few minutes, and to inquire how we found ourselves after our short visit to the country in quest of health. His stay was short, for he is a man of business; but before leaving he says, "But how about your work? We have been so engaged in talking of other matters, I have not had time to speak of your mission; but be assured, sir, I think of it—think of it often; I am very much interested in your work here; and I pray for you, and for a blessing on all your labours."

Was not that comforting? "I think of you—think of you often, and I pray for you." Sir, there is hope; for he means what he says, and I believe him to be a man of prayer and of faith.

There are others who think of the poor Chinaman. The Rev. Mr. Finney, residing at Oakland, came to me recently to inquire if there was any way in which he could be useful to the Chinamen who are on his side of the bay; and last Sabbath Ha Chieu went over to interpret for him, and to assist in religious services. They gathered a few people, and will make another trial next Sabbath. Several persons in the mining towns have written, some for advice as to how they may be able to reach the Chinamen and benefit them, some begging me to go up and itinerate amongst them.

Visit to Chinamen at Oakland—The missionary not "a bogus tax-gatherer"—Chinese gamblers.

At Oakland there are large farms—farms I may call them—of strawberries, and other small fruits, and several hundred Chinamen are employed upon them during the "picking season." I spent a day on that side of the bay last week.

We went on Tuesday afternoon to San Antonio to spend the night at the house of the Rev. Mr. Wells. In the evening I started in search of Chinamen—found one house. The man produced from his table-drawer a tract which he had long ago received from me in the city. We had some conversation which I hope may be profitable to him and to others who were present.

San Antonio is above Oakland perhaps two miles. The next morning I walked towards Oakland. By a long bridge we cross an arm of the bay which is thrown out towards the hills. Casting my eye up this little inlet, I saw long black nets stretched out to dry upon the shore; next I criticised their fishing craft; they bore unmistakable marks of the nationality of their builders; next I descried the tops of their tents, and then the moving forms of men. These are the people I want to see, said I. And you may believe that they were a badly frightened company of people when they first heard my footsteps along on the bluff, and saw me descending that zigzag path right down upon their camp; for who could be after them but some bogus tax-gatherer, with his rough speech, his profanity, and revolvers. It took a little time to correct their impressions; but when they had become satisfied as to my errand, they seemed to be as much delighted as they had before been scared. They were picking over shrimps, the results of the previous night's toiling; and now they were gathering the good into vessels, and casting the bad away.

Leaving the fishermen whom we came upon thus accidentally, we went on to look for the strawberry-gatherers. Having called at different washing establishments in the little city, (and it is a straggling little town, flat down in the deep sand, and dodging its head under the thick oaks—just such oaks as that which hung that rebellious son Absalom up by his hair,) one of the washermen volunteered to pilot me out to the encampment of his countrymen. We found their tents and board shanties in the outskirts of the town, though still amongst the oaks. Most of the men were away in the fields at work, but we left books in every house or tent, putting them on the table, or in some of the bunks, or leaving them in charge with the cook, who remains at the camp to prepare the meals for his mess.

There were, at the time of my visit, many unemployed people about the camp, as the berry season is now far advanced, and fewer hands are needed to gather the fruit; therefore we had people to hear all we had strength to tell them.

We found at the camp a little Chinese store. Chinese merchants in the city had followed their countrymen out here, to be ready to supply their wants for a small per centage.

We found, also, what pleased us less, too many signs of opium smoking; but the signs of gambling were still more painful. Within the encampment are three or four gambling shops; the men who keep them I found nearly all asleep. Like other beasts of prey, they crawl inside their dens when the sun arises, and come out when it is dark. The poor labouring men sweat in the fields all day for seventy-five or ninety cents, and come home to be stripped of their earnings at night. As the men do not work on the Sabbath, that day is wholly devoted to gambling by the people who follow that business.

Ha Chieu, who went to Oakland last Sabbath to assist in a religious service amongst these people, (of which I have spoken before in this letter,) says that the gamblers were much displeased when they came with the books, and proposed having a meeting near their cabins. They said, "Go away with your preaching, and take away your books, it will spoil our luck; we shall lose every time, so long as you stay near us."

Such are Chinese gamblers; and a pity it is there are any but them; but we have not to travel far to find greater iniquity than they practice.

When we were in the country we met with a few Chinamen at Napa, a few at Petatuma, a half dozen on a large ranche several miles east of Santa Rosa. Those on the ranche were employed in the garden and vineyard. Some of them recognized me, and we had quite a talk as we sat together in the tool-house.

Wednesday evening.—Again to-day we have been itinerating.

I was going on to tell you many other things, but the paper is not long enough.

I remain yours affectionately,

A. W. Loomis.

NINGPO MISSION, CHINA.

BAPTISM OF AN AGED BLIND WOMAN.

The Rev. J. L. Nevius sends us the following narrative from Ningpo, under date of April 30, 1861. It will be regarded as one of singular interest; seldom have we met with a more striking example, to show the sovereignty and power of divine grace in the work of conversion.

Dear Sir—I wish you could have been present with us to-day, to witness an incident which was a very pleasant one to us, and one which I am sure you would have been much interested in. This morning, Mr. Green, Mrs. Nevius, and myself, left Ningpo to visit the station at Bao-kô-táh, about six miles distant. The native elders, Lu and Zia, accompanied us, it being our principal object to examine an old blind woman, with reference to her admission to the church. We reached the place before noon, and there being a lady in the party, an unusually large crowd soon gathered to see us, composed principally of women and children, the men being very busy, some in ploughing the fields, and some in making preparations to go out to sea, to engage in the fisheries. After exchanging salutations with the church-members, and speaking a few words to the people, we were introduced to the old woman who was desirous of being baptised. It was not a little difficult to find a quiet place where we might hold a session meeting. We persuaded the people, however, to retire for a while, and chose for our place of meeting the sleeping-room of the Christian school teacher, which, by the way, is a model of neatness and cleanliness. Mr. Green and Mrs. Nevius were also present at the session meeting.

The first appearance of this applicant for church-membership excited our deepest interest and sympathy. She is seventy years old, perfectly blind, and almost deaf. After asking God's blessing and direction, I commenced questioning her, which I did by drawing my chair close to hers, and speaking very loud. I asked her whether she was in the habit of secret prayer, and what she prayed for. She commenced by saying that she was old, and had a very poor memory, and could not express well in words what she clearly understood and felt in her heart. She then went on to enumerate the objects of her prayers, including the enlightening influences of the Spirit, the forgiveness of her sins, assistance to live a godly life, and more particularly a participation in the blessings and enjoyments of heaven. She spoke of her delight in prayer, of the amazing love of God to such a poor, worthless creature as she; and seemed to have a sense of the nearness of God through Christ, and to be filled with gratitude. As she spoke, the tears rolled down her cheeks from her sightless eyes; and could she have seen, she too would have witnessed tears in the eyes of others.

She spoke at length of the sin of having disregarded God for so many years, and worshipped idols; but said, as if she felt that it was some extenuation of her guilt: "It was because I did not know of God and his love." She also spoke of the many sins of the heart and the tongue. I asked her whether she felt that she had got rid of her propensity to sin, and whether she was ever conscious of a feeling of resentment when others treated her with unkindness and neglect? She answered with earnestness, "I will tell you the truth—I will keep back nothing. My daughter-in-law sometimes abuses and curses me, and I say to her, how dare you speak so to me, when I am your superior, and you are my daughter-in-law? I sometimes reprove her harshly, but I do not now curse her in return."

I asked her if she had ever procured and laid up paper money for use in a future state? (an idolatrous practice common among women;) she said, "I will deny nothing; I did procure a great deal of this money; but I have destroyed it—I have the greatest aversion to it—I have given up everything, and my trust is in Christ and Christ alone."

I questioned her on the Trinity, and she gave evidence of more clear and just views on this subject, than I would have thought it possible for one in her circumstances to have acquired. I asked her if she had no fears that her feelings might change, and she revert back to the old idolatrous practices of her people? She answered promptly and earnestly, "Never—I am old, my mind is fixed on heaven, and earth has no attractions for me." "But," said I, "do you think you can depend upon yourself?" She said, "No; but I will never cease to pray, and Christ will never forsake me." Such were all her answers; clear, prompt, and full of earnestness and fervour. The native elders asked her a few questions, after which there was a slight pause. She improved the opportunity to address us much as follows: "I trust you will allow me to be baptized. I am now seventy years old, and I cannot stay here much longer. I want to be numbered among God's people. O receive me, for my heart is fixed on God and heaven." This appeal, with the manner in which it was uttered, was most touching, and went to our hearts. We all felt like saying, "Who shall forbid water, that she should not be baptized."

The notice was soon circulated through the village that Siao Ah-m was about to be baptized. After dinner, a large company assembled to witness the first baptismal service in Bao-kô-táh, the other church-members having been baptized in Ningpo. The audience was most attentive and solemn. Siao Ah-m responded in a loud and decided voice to the questions proposed, and all present seemed deeply interested and impressed. The occasion was improved to exhort those present to flee from the wrath to come, and lay hold of eternal life. After a few parting words, we left the village for our boat, thanking God for what he had permitted us to see and hear.

Yours, most truly, JOHN L. NEVIUS.

MISSION IN INDIA.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT FUTTEHPORE.

We insert here the last report of his labours by our native missionary, the late Rev. Gopeenath Nundy. A few months after this report was written, he was called, as we trust, to a better world. See Mr. Walsh's obituary sketch on another page.

Blessed be the name of the Lord, for enabling me once more to write the Report of this Mission; but before I do so, I give my humble thanks to Almighty God, who has not only preserved our unprofitable lives, but blessed our feeble labours with abundant success. To His great and holy name be all the praise.

Schools for boys and girls.

The present location of the School-House, being in the central part of the town, has been partly the means of increasing the number in attendance in the boys' school. There are at present, I am happy to mention, upwards of one hundred and fifty scholars, and most of them are of respectable families. Amongst their studies, the Bible and Catechism are taught daily, and the school is opened and closed every day with prayer. In November last, when His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor, passed through this place, he very kindly visited our school, and though he had not time to examine all the boys, yet, from what little he saw, he was greatly pleased with the progress they had made, and, as a mark of his approbation, he made over to the Mission, [not absolutely given, but] for the use of the school, a confiscated house, worth about 8000 rupees, and where we at present hold our school. To him our best thanks are due.

I am sorry to state that I have had a complete failure in the girls' school. I tried my utmost to establish one similar to what we had before the mutiny in the town, but failed. I have not yet found out the real cause why the girls in the town do not like to attend the school; it may be partly from fear, and partly from prejudice. But we have a small school on our premises. There are at present sixteen girls. Of these, nine are of Christian families, and the rest heathen. They are not making any great progress, as most of them are very young.

Preaching and the church.

Preaching is carried on more or less every day in the town and the neighbouring villages. The people, on the whole, listen to the gospel news with interest and attention. There was a great demand for books, and as the Bible Depository of the N. W. Provinces, had none to give, I had to apply to the Baptist Mission in Calcutta, who, without any charge, have kindly sent me up a large collection of Bibles and Testaments. The freight on the box itself cost 20 rupees. My special thanks are due to them. In last cold weather we visited several villages, and preached the gospel and distributed Bibles and Tracts. The people, generally, heard us with attention and received books with apparent interest. We have also preached at almost all the melas which have been held near this place on the river side. European soldiers also, when passing through Futtehpore, were furnished with Bibles and religious books. A few friends gave me some money especially for this purpose.

"Church service is performed every Sabbath, both morning and evening; also on Thursday evenings. On Sabbath mornings we have a Bible class with heathen and Christian boys, and in the afternoons with all the Christian men. The Lord has very graciously blessed our labours abundantly last year. Twenty adults from Heathenism and Mohammedanism, were baptized and received into the church. Of these, sixteen were Hindús, and four Mohammedans We are very thankful to record this his infinite mercy and love towards us, in making us instruments in bringing so many precious souls from the darkness of heathenism into the glorious light of his Gospel. To his great and holy name we ascribe all the praise and glory. Five infants were also baptized and admitted into the church. The total present number of our congregation, and those who live on the Mission premises, is forty-eight adults and thirty-four infants; of these thirty-six are communicants. I have here to record, with heartfelt grief, that one of our number is very indifferent; he neither attends the ordinances of the church, nor comes near us. Two have left us, and gone away. May God, of his infinite mercy, send down his grace, and bring them back to Christ, is our earnest prayer. The congregation I am happy to mention, still continues to subscribe part of the support for their pastor, and though the amount collected is very small, yet it shows a willingness on the part of those who subscribe, and leaves a hope of a larger amount as the congregation increases. The money thus collected has been credited to the Mission account.

CORISCO MISSION, AFRICA.

VISIT TO THE BALINGIS—THINGS TO "THE GRIEF OF A MISSIONARY."

Mr. De Heer writes as follows from Corisco, under date of June 18th. As to the discouraging things mentioned in this letter, they are such as must be expected. The Apostles had to mourn over some things in the conduct of their converts, which have seldom been exceeded in the mission churches of later days.

"Those of our converts belonging to this station, who are employed as native assistants, have just returned from a visit to the mainland. The object of their visit was to hold religious services and conversations with the people, the result of which I think to be rather encouraging. They started in company with the chief Imunga, who offered them his boat, and who went on business to the same place. In the evening they reached the Balingi people, who live on the north and north-east of the Corisco Bay. They have been but little visited by missionaries as yet; they are a more powerful tribe than the Benga, and, according to their account, number more than five thousand people. Here our visitors were asked what the object was of their coming, and having answered that they did not come for the sake of trading with them, but simply to talk to them about the word of God, they were kindly entertained. The language spoken among the Balingi people has much analogy to the Benga, consequently our visitors found no difficulty in conversing with them. They remained with them about five days, during which time they held eleven religious meetings, numbering about two hundred people in all. On one occasion, as they informed me, the house was filled, and several of the people remained outside for the sake of hearing. Besides these meetings, which were held morning and evening, they had personal conversations with the people during the day, in which they had an opportunity to express themselves more freely on the subject of religion. The people showed great willingness everywhere to hear the word of God, and seemed to give attention to what was spoken. In the course of their conversation with the people, they learned that there was a strong desire to have missionaries among them. Some said, "we are convinced that the things you tell us are true, but what can we do without missionaries." Others said, "we know that we do many wrong things, but let us have missionaries, and let our children be instructed, and we will do better." Again, others said, "you tell us that the wicked must go to hell; we are wicked, we fight and kill people; unless missionaries come here to save us, we must all be lost." Such is the simple account of the people that sit in darkness in the land of the shadow of death, and what Christian heart should not feel for these their fellow-men, on knowing their wretched condition, and that they are daily sinking into perdition?

"On Corisco, I am sorry to say, things seem to begin to assume rather a different appearance, —far different from what it used to be. It seems that the people have become careless from the fact that they attend less upon public worship, and some have returned to their heathen customs. Our house, in the evening, is no longer filled with people, and few attend our services on the Sabbath. No less than thirteen of the members of the church have fallen in open sin, and have been suspended from church-communion; and as some of them persist in sin, we will probably be called to the painful duty of excommunicating them. Besides the above-mentioned, there are several others who have gone astray from the path of duty, whose case will doubtless come up at our next session. The conduct of all these has, no doubt, a bad effect upon the mass of the people, not a little to the grief of a missionary."

OBITUARY.

A SKETCH OF THE REV. GOPEENATH NUNDY'S LIFE, BY THE REV. J. J. WALSH.

Gopeenath Nundy, having for nearly a quarter of a century laboured in our mission, and been ordained by our Presbytery to the holy ministry, it is due to his memory that some notice be taken of his early life, and the relation he sustained to the infant church of India.

He was born in Calcutta, about the year 1807, of respectable parents belonging to the Kayath caste. At an early age he received at home instruction in Bengalee, his own vernacular language, and when perfected in this, he was sent to the School Society's institution, (then recently established under the auspices of David Hare,) for the acquisition of the English language, the study of which was considered the sure road to wealth and distinction.

This was a very critical period of his life, as, if the writer remembers correctly a recent conversation relating to his educational course in Calcutta, all the influences brought to bear upon him were of an infidel character. These influences were the more pernicious, as his teachers expressed a deep interest in their pupil, inviting him to their houses, and furthering his worldly interests, whilst, at the same time, they were ridiculing and sneering at everything pure and sacred. To a young Bengalee, trained up from early life in an atmosphere, to say the least, not very pure, the influence produced on Gopeenath's mind was a fearful one: but its boldness was his safety, as it enabled him to see that it made shipwreck of every hope, and thus brought conscience to act and assert her rights. A native minister of Calcutta thus refers to Gopeenath, whilst under these trying circumstances:—"While he was quietly carrying on his studies, the beginnings of what threatened to be a mighty moral revolution were perceptible in native society. The study of European literature and science disclosed to not a few young men the absurdity of the prevailing religion of the country. The spirits hitherto bound by the fetters of superstition indignantly knocked them off. The godless system of education pursued in the Hindu college produced its inevitable fruit. Free-thinking was the order of the day. In debating societies, and in newspapers conducted by educated natives, the national faith was declaimed against in no measured terms, and all faith in religion was proscribed. In order to check this licentiousness of opinion, and to give a right direction to the newly roused native mind, four ministers of the gospel proposed the delivery of a course of lectures on the Evidences and Doctrines of Christianity. These four gentlemen were the Rev. Dr. Duff, the Rev. Mr. Adam, the Rev. Mr Hill, and the Rev. Mr. Dealtry, the late lamented bishop of Madras. The delivery of these lectures began in August of 1830, in Dr. Duff's house, which was not far from the Hindu college. The effect which these lectures, and especially the lectures of Dr. Duff, produced in the newly-awakened minds of the then rising generation of Bengal, is well known. They arrested attention, roused the spirit of inquiry; and one and another embraced the truth as it is in Jesus. Gopeenath was not unaffected by these stirring events. He had long been convinced of the falsehood of Hinduism. A lecture, delivered by Dr. Duff, on the gospel method of salvation, roused his spiritual being, and he determined to become a Christian. "Early one morning," says Dr. Duff in the Appendix to his celebrated work on 'India and India Missions,' "about the beginning of December, 1832, another of the young men entered my study. After the ordinary salutation, he sat down; and, for a quarter of an hour, opened not his lips. From the expression of his countenance, I perceived that he was labouring under some great mental conflict, but could not ascertain its nature or cause. At last, bursting into tears, he suddenly broke silence in these words:—'Can I be saved? Shall I have the privilege of being called a son of God, and a servant of Jesus Christ? Shall I be admitted into his holy family?'" It is superfluous to add that Gopeenath was soon afterwards admitted by Dr. Duff into the visible church of Christ by the rite of baptism. In the year 1833 Gopeenath accompanied Archdeacon Corrie, afterwards Bishop of Madras, to the North-west, and took charge of an English school at Futtehpore, largely supported by Dr. Madden, the civil surgeon of that station. Gopeenath went to Futtehpore only for a season."

During the years 1837–38 a fearful famine prevailed in the North-west provinces of India, and a large number of orphans were collected by Dr. Madden. Gopeenath was very active in procuring orphan children, and afterwards diligent in training them for future usefulness. Dr. Madden, in consequence of the ill-health and death of Mrs. Madden, was unable to continue the orphan institution under their care, and divided them between the Church Mission at Benares and our Mission at Futtehgurh. The orphans for the latter place were sent on under the care of Gopeenath, who was employed by the mission as an assistant. His services at this time were invaluable to the mission, not only in consequence of his previous employment and training, but also as he was enabled to act as interpreter to the Rev. Mr. Wilson, in preaching and distributing books among the natives. From November, 1838, to the time of his death, he was in the employment of the mission, with the exception of about a year in 1848 or '49. In 1844 he was ordained to the holy ministry, and misconceiving his rights as an ordained minister, made demands which could not be granted, and consequently left the mission. He was, however, enabled to see the error he had committed, and rejoined the mission. After his return, he was stationed in the cantonment of Futtehgurh, where he opened a school for boys, and also established a flourishing school for girls, which is still in existence. The superintendence of these schools, with almost daily preaching, gave him constant employment, and made his labours very useful.

Futtehpore having become vacant, he was, at the request of the Allahabad mission, transferred to that station in 1853, where he remained until his death. Gopeenath was never so happy, or developed his character so fully, as when placed in charge of this station at Futtehpore. He was abundant in labours, and established schools for boys and girls in the city and the jail, besides giving instruction for a time to fifty Patwarees, or village record keepers. In June of 1857, his labours were interrupted by the mutiny, and he was obliged to fly to Allahabad. What he suffered during the mutiny is known to the religious public in America, and therefore need not be particularly mentioned here. In that trying period, according to the statement which he has published, he evinced a spirit not unlike that which animated the martyrs and confessors of the primitive Christians. On the 14th of March he died, leaving a widow and five children to bewail his loss. The writer, on the evening of the 12th, received a telegraph message that he was dying, and urging him to come immediately. On the morning of the 13th he arrived, and finding that an operation was to be performed for hernia, he asked Gopeenath if anything was necessary to be done, as the doctor said the operation was a very delicate one, and in most cases proved fatal. The writer was requested to draw a codicil to his will. Prayer was proposed, when Gopeenath said, "I am not afraid to die—I can trust that Jesus whom I have so often preached to others." The operation proved fatal, and Gopeenath expired early on the morning of the 14th of March. His friend, the native minister in Calcutta, thus speaks of his character.

"In his person Gopeenath was tall, and had a commanding appearance, and his complexion inclined to fair. Though, owing to circumstances, his English education, when judged by the standard of the present day, was somewhat deficient, he had fine parts. His acquaintance with the Urdu language, in which he usually preached, though not critical, was intimate, and amply served all the purposes of his vocation. He had great energy and decision of character. As a man, he was pleasing in his manners, amiable in disposition, cheerful and even gay in society, hospitable, and benevolent. As a Christian, he was sincerely pious, fervent in spirit, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. As a missionary, he was in labours most abundant, feeding his flock diligently, preaching in season and out of season, full of zeal for promoting the honour of his Divine Master. Failings he had—and what man has not his peculiar failings?—but these failings leaned to virtue's side. He was truly one of the excellent of the earth. Let our countrymen note the fact that it was only Christianity that made Gopeenath what he was."

To this let me add, that he possessed the esteem and respect of all the Europeans at Futtehpore. They all united in saying that he was a good man, and abundant in labours of love. They attended his funeral, and accompanied his corpse to the burial ground, a distance of more than a mile. A funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. J. J. Walsh, from the text—"He, being dead, yet speaketh," and remarks by the Rev. W. F. Johnson were made at the grave.

MISCELLANY.

Extracts from Missionary Addresses.

GOD IS FOR US.

It is a grand thought that God is for us. I remember going down, a little time ago, to the seashore. It was a time of storm, and I had often had a wish to look at the ocean when it was tossed with tempest—mind, I did not wish the storm to rise for my pleasure, but, being there, I thought I would go and look at it. When I had got to the top of the cliff, and looked at the wide waste of waters, it seemed a sort of chaos, without any sort of government whatever; and as I looked at those waters, I bethought me that the time was fast approaching when the tide would come in, and I wondered, amid all this apparent confusion, whether those wild waters would obey this celestial influence. Well, there I stood and watched, and, true to the time, the big billows of the tide came rolling in, amidst all that wild confusion. I then perceived that there was a celestial power ruling the ocean amidst that confusion. The case is somewhat similar in the field of missions. We have these China rebellions, and these Italian revolutions, and these Sepoy revolts, and we have all sorts of great events transpiring; and what a grand thing it is to know that there is One who sits above the waters who is King; that all these great events are controlled by him who, the Head over all things, makes them subservient to the great interests of the gospel; so that, when we put ourselves in connection with his power, we may go forth with the greatest confidence. Our missionary boldness is very much based on three great facts—the cross, the throne, and the Pentecost. We look at the cross, and we have confidence; we think of Jesus, and our fears disappear; we look at the throne of the Mediator, and we know that He rules. We see that all things are under his control. It happens not unfrequently that this platform is crowded with musicians and singers, and these sons and daughters of song have each of them their own book before them, and they sing and pause as it directs; and yet, though there are so many of them, though the books vary so much, the result is a sweet harmony and coalescence of sound. Now, do you imagine that that united volume of sound which runs over the audience, and moves and sways it, do you suppose that that united harmony of sound was the result of mere casualty? Not at all. It is a masterpiece of skill that has all been arranged beforehand. There was a mighty master of song; there was one who composed the oratorio, and the different voices were all intended to be harmonious. So is it also with the missionary work. You see generals and statesmen, and they have all got their own books before them, and they are going along in their own line and track; and you see missionaries belonging to different sects of the church, and they are going along in their own line and track, and yet, strange to say, the issue is, that there is harmony throughout the whole. Not merely are their labours cotemporaneous, but they are actually coincident. All this is the result of Divine rule.

I do not recollect any report moving me so much as that which has been read this morning. I do not know that I ever wept before on listening to a report, but I certainly wept as I listened to what was said respecting those dear servants of God who have recently fallen in the cause. I soon, however, put away that feeling from my mind. Oh, I do not think your Society will suffer because you are enabled now to write other names by the side of the name of Williams; I do not think it will suffer because you have got fresh martyrs to add to your list. We go to the Lord and offer to him our lives, and if it pleases him to accept of them, who shall say that he has no right to do it? The fall of a few makes heroes of all. Why, if none ever fell, you could not hear of those appeals which have been made to-day to the valour and heroism of others to go forth to take their place. When Leonidas and his noble Spartans occupied the pass of Thermopylæ, and kept back the mighty host of Persia until the last man of them had fallen, grateful Greece, after the tide of invasion had been rolled back, built upon that spot a monument, and inscribed upon it, "Go to Sparta, and tell her that we fell obeying her laws." Now it seems to me as if I could see a monument built upon those solitary graves in the African wilds, and could read inscribed upon that monument, "Go to the church, and tell her that we fell obeying her Lord." I hold that the influence of the deaths of many who have fallen in the cause of missions will be more valuable than their lives would have been. Who, for instance, would be likely to forget Persia, when he thought of Henry Martyn? Who would ever forget those islands of the South Sea, when he thought of John Williams? You hear the names of missionaries whose death has consecrated the soil, whose graves have taken possession as if for Christ. I say that the very deaths of these missionaries will be an advantage both to your Society and to those fields of labour. When one of the Indian missionaries was asked the question, "What do you think of the position about India? do not you think that your prospects are very dark, and that your hopes are very feeble?" He replied, "My hope is as strong as the arm of God, and our prospects are as bright as his promise." Once get a firm conviction that you have the power of God on your side, and God's providence marching with you, and nothing will dismay you.—Rev. S. Coley: London Miss. Soc. Mag. 1861.

TRUE CONVERTS—NATIVE TEACHERS.

We have thousands of actual converts, persons who are partakers of our Saviour's broken body and of his shed blood. We are asked at times what is the character of those converts. There are many, no doubt, who are weak, and many who are poor in this world, but they are not all poor, and they are not all weak. We have persons of the higher caste, as well as the lower. We can point to the Brahmin, as well as the Sudra and Pariah. And oh, if you knew what they had to pass through, if you had witnessed what they have to endure in becoming Christians, you would not wonder, I believe, that we have had so few converts, but that we have had so many. You will, I am sure, pardon one illustration. It is not long since we were visited by a young Brahmin, who wished to be a Christian. We spoke to him earnestly. We said: "You know the consequence. If you become a Christian and do not stand the test, it will be worse for you and worse for us." "I know it," he said; "but I trust in God." "Well," we said, "here is a place for you, if you are willing to become a Christian." We sent for his friends. There came his aged father and mother. The old woman would not enter the house; she cast herself on the ground in an agony of grief, saying: "You have taken away my son, you have taken away my son!" He was an only son. The aged father sat in my room shedding bitter and burning tears. Calmly did that youth speak with him. Oh! there was deep feeling in his heart. Still, in the strength of God he acted calmly. He wiped the burning tears from the eyes of his aged father, and said to him, "I will not leave as you suppose; now that I have found Christ, I will love you more than ever, and I will more than ever seek to help you." A sister pleaded with all the earnestness of a sister's affection. Oh! it was a hard struggle. He stood the test, and they left him; left him in deep bitterness of soul. Oh, my Christian friends, these are scenes which can never fade from my memory. When a native becomes a Christian, his relatives make an effigy of him, and that effigy is burned, and he is not to be known, or thought of, or recognized again for ever. This is the law of the Shaster. True it is, that that natural feeling which the God of nature has planted in man will rise against all the laws of the Shaster at times: and a mother steals in the darkness of night to see a son, and a sister to see a brother. But it must not be known. And there are not a few in India who have passed through the struggle, and from the hour when they became Christians have not known the sympathies of relatives and friends. If that test were brought to bear on Christians in this land, how many are there who would sign their recantation, and go back to walk no more with Jesus Christ!

I must say one word about native teachers. I do think that it is upon them that we must depend in a great degree, for the success of our work. It is a blessed thing that we have been enabled to train eight hundred native teachers in India; and I can bear testimony that they are devoted and earnest men in their work. Some have passed to their rest, and my mind recalls some who, I rejoice to think, finished their course with joy. One only I must allude to; one who, on his dying couch, amid deep suffering, manifested the greatest calmness, serenity, and peace. There were heathen looking on, and wondering at the calmness of his spirit as he passed through the dark valley, for they knew not who it was that was with him, what rod and staff were comforting him. Amongst his last words were, "Oh, how many prayers have I made at the feet of Jesus; when will these prayers be heard and answered?" Saying this, he passed away to receive the crown of life that fadeth not away. That man could count his converts by scores. Many a European, too, had received benefit from him, for he could speak English well. On one occasion two English officers came up to him and said, "Well, old fellow, how is Jesus Christ to-day?" He looked upon them with that happy smile which was ever on his countenance, and said, "How is it that you, who come from a Christian land, ask me such a question as that? But," he added, "I think I can answer it. Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." I believe the issue of that conversation was, that one of those officers was brought to the faith and love of Christ. There are others who are pursuing the same course, and we rejoice over it. May the Lord keep them steadfast to the end of their career. We rejoice over those native Christians who have passed into glory; many, many, have gone up thither. The missionary, when he looks at the grave-yard and says, "There sleeps one, and there sleeps another, till the morning of the resurrection"—that thought fills his heart with joy. Yes, while he looks upon the thousands who are living, he can also think of the thousands who are lying under the soil of India, to rise up at the last day, when the corruptible shall put on incorruption, and the mortal shall put on immortality. I will now draw to a conclusion. All things are aiding the great missionary work: India shall yet be brought to the feet of Jesus. She must be brought there, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

"O, doomed victorious from thy wounds to rise,
Dejected India, lift thy drooping eyes:
And mark the hour, whose faithful steps for thee,
Through time's press'd ranks, brings on thy jubilee."

—Rev. John S. Wardlaw, A. M. Missionary from Vizagapatam.

SIGNS OF THE END.

The signs of the times are expressive; there are indications that we are not so far from some grand revolution in the state of the civilized world. The fact we have this day so often reiterated and insisted upon is, that the gospel is being preached in every nation for a witness, and He that uttered that prediction said, "Then the end cometh." Is not the gospel being preached in every nation? Where is the country under heaven where it is not sounded: what the language in which it is not heard: where the people to whom it has not gone forth? If, then, it is being preached to all nations for a witness, lo! "the end cometh." And are there not other signs? The world is arming. Look at Italy. Hear the tocsin of terror sounding in the affrighted ears of the boasted successor of Peter, the Antichrist of Rome. See the noble bearing of the oppressed and scattered nationalities; see what scenes there are everywhere; all are arming for the battle. Is not all Europe resounding with the din of arms? Is not every country resounding with the anvil, beating the sword-blade, and forming the musket? Do we not find every nation in a state of uncertainty and disquietude? Are we not every day seeing strange and eventful circumstances? And what is the voice that God is addressing to us, but "Blessed is he that watcheth, and blessed is he that worketh:" "Blessed is the servant that his King when he cometh shall find so doing;" diligent, not disturbed, courageous, not disquieted.—Canon Stowell.

TO THE MINISTERS AND ELDERS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Dear Brethren—Your attention is earnestly invited to a brief statement respecting the condition and necessities of the colportage work of our church, conducted by the Board of Publication.

THE WORK PERFORMED LAST YEAR.

The colportage enterprise was commenced by the Board, under the direction of the General Assembly, in the year 1849, twelve years ago. In that year about 20 colporteurs were sent out. This little band yearly increased in number until, in May last, the Board reported to the Assembly that 242 had been in commission during the year previous. These 242 colporteurs had sold, within that year, 154,522 volumes; had distributed gratuitously 23,733 volumes and 2,372,016 pages of tracts; and had visited 184,810 families. Their labours had been extended over 34 States, Territories, and British Provinces. They had been everywhere received with the utmost kindness. The Spirit Gof od seemed to attend and bless their labours greatly. And still greater extension and usefulness was hoped for in the year now passing over us.

PRESENT AND URGENT NEED OF FUNDS.

Within the last six months, nearly one-half of our former field has wholly ceased to furnish any contributions. From the remainder of the field our contributions, within that time, owing to our national troubles, the consequent absorption of men's minds, the scarcity of money, and the urgency of other calls, have been diminished, and rendered inadequate to meet the expenses of the colportage department. Several legacies of considerable amount, on which confident reliance was placed, and which seemed secure to the Board, events have made it impossible to collect. Many warm friends of our colportage work, and generous contributors to it, in our large cities, find it impossible to give as largely this year as in former ones.

From these and other causes, it results that the balance against the Colportage Fund at the beginning of the present fiscal year is now (October) increased to $13,500.

For some months past the Board has declined to add to the number of its colporteurs by issuing commissions to new applicants. But it has recently, with great sadness and reluctance, felt compelled to allow useful, valued, and experienced labourers to retire from the work. How long, or to what extent, it may be necessary to do this, will depend on the receipts of the next few months.

THE FIELD INVITING.

While this sad necessity grows out of the want of funds, the field for colportage labours was never more inviting than it is at this very time. Although the colporteur may not be able to sell as many books as heretofore, owing to the scarcity of money, he finds everywhere an increased readiness to receive the words of truth, whether spoken or printed.

Our camps and our armies open a most important field for the colporteur. Some of the Board's colporteurs have placed a vast amount of divine truth in the hands of soldiers. Tens of thousands of men away from their homes, and with much leisure for reading, have gladly received our books and tracts.

COLPORTAGE WHOLLY DEPENDENT ON CHURCH CONTRIBUTIONS.

The work of publishing books and tracts is carried forward upon a capital contributed, several years ago, for that specific purpose, to which it is wholly and sacredly devoted. As this capital is at present sufficient for that purpose, the churches are not called on to contribute anything for the publishing department of the Board. But as nothing can be drawn away from the publishing department for other uses, the Board is obliged to depend wholly on the contributions of the churches for the supply of its Colportage Funds. These contributions therefore, are indispensable for the following uses, viz.

1. To pay the salaries and expenses of colporteurs.

2. To pay for the large amounts of books and tracts gratuitously distributed by the colporteurs.

Only in proportion as the churches contribute to the Colportage Fund is the Board able to meet these expenses.

NO COLLECTING AGENTS ARE EMPLOYED.

The Board now employs not a single Agent for the purpose of making collections. It is fully satisfied that if each Pastor can be induced to state this cause fully and plainly to his congregation, and furnish them a regular opportunity to contribute to it annually, no other agency will be needed. Expense may thus be saved, and every dollar contributed be applied directly to the advancement of the work.

WHAT IS ASKED OF PASTORS, ELDERS, AND CHURCHES.

The financial year of the Board of Publication begins with the first day of March annually. What is now respectfully and very earnestly asked, is that every Pastor and church, which has not yet done so this year, would, in accordance with the urgent recommendations of the last General Assembly (see its resolutions on colportage,) secure in such way as may be deemed wisest a contribution to the Colportage Fund, and forward it to James Dunlap, Esq., Treasurer of the Board, so that it may be received before the first of March next.

An Appendix will be added to the next Annual Report (as there was to the last,) containing a list of all the churches with the sums given by them respectively to this cause up to the day above-mentioned. It is very desirable that contributions should be remitted early enough for acknowledgment in this Appendix.

After the above statement respecting this colportage branch of our church's efforts for the glory of God in the salvation of men, we leave it with you, in the humble hope and confidence that it will receive your prayers, your sympathy, and your pecuniary aid.

Praying that God may abundantly bless all your efforts to do good,

I am, very fraternally and respectfully yours,

WILLIAM E. SCHENCK,

Cor. Sec. of the Board of Publication.

PRAYER FOR THE BOARDS.

We some months ago received a letter from a brother, giving an account of the meeting of a Presbytery in the far North-west. It contained the following paragraph.

"This Presbytery gave most commendable attention to the several Boards of our church. Each Board was assigned as a subject of prayer for one of the hours set apart for religious exercises, which were quite frequent during the entire sessions. If some of the brethren who visit this lake for health, or merely for recreation, would only be at pains to attend the meetings of the Presbytery, they would return praising God that he had permitted them to enjoy the Christian fellowship of such noble, humble, toilsome, self-denying men as he there would find."

These words were as a precious balm to our hearts. Nothing can be more encouraging to those who are labouring for Christ and his church in connection with the Boards, whether as secretaries, missionaries, colporteurs, or what you will, than to know that they are remembered by their brethren at the throne of grace.

We do earnestly commend the above quotation to the attention of all our ministers. Dear brethren, when your Presbyteries and Synods come together this fall, let the Boards of the church have a frequent and prominent place in your prayers. The present is a time of severe trial for all these Boards. In nearly one-half of our land their work is totally arrested, and their contributions have ceased. In the remainder of the country, the troubles of the times, the scarcity of money, the numerous unusual and urgent claims, the powerful diversion of men's minds, all tend to curtail their resources and to cripple their work. Every officer of your Boards has his mind pressed and almost overwhelmed with unusual and excessive anxieties. It is sad, very, very sad, to see the work of the Lord, both in our home and foreign fields, hindered and apparently retrograding. It is a time to pray for Zion, and for all her schemes of Christian benevolence, if there ever was such a time.

We beseech you then, brethren, to imitate the example of that North-western Presbytery. Remember the Boards, not only in private, but in your pulpits on the Lord's day. And at your approaching meetings of Presbytery and Synod, let times be set apart to pray for these great interests of Zion.

AN INTERESTING COLPORTEUR.

The Presbytery of Louisville recently met in Bloomfield, Kentucky, when the following action was taken in the case of a colporteur. We copy the facts from the Presbyterian Herald.

Mr. Joseph B. McDonnal, a ruling elder of the church at Bardstown, who has been blind for some years past, was taken under the care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry. As Mr. McDonnal's is a peculiar case, the Presbytery appointed a committee to prescribe a course of study for him, which was done. He was authorized by the Presbytery, some months since, to hold religious services in destitute neighbourhoods, and expound the Scriptures to the people. His services have been attended upon by crowds wherever he has gone as a colporteur of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, selling their books. Before he became blind, he studied Latin and Greek, and became a very good general scholar. He possesses an active, sprightly, vigorous mind, and is deeply pious, and anxious to do good. He submitted his whole case modestly and with deference to the Presbytery, which resolved to admit him as a candidate for the ministry, it being understood that he is to be considered an exceptional case if licensed.

BOOKS FOR THE CAMP.

We have, in former numbers of the Record, published statements in regard to the wide-spread usefulness of the colporteurs of the Board among the soldiers. We wish now to indicate to those who desire to do good to soldiers, an additional means of doing so.

Very recently a gentleman in New Hampshire wrote to the Board, inclosing a sum of money, and requesting that books and tracts might be sent to that value to the chaplain of a New Hampshire regiment, then quartered at Bladensburg, Maryland. The package was accordingly sent, and the following response was speedily received.

Bladensburg, Md., September 4th, 1861.

Dear Sir—I have received from you a package of books and tracts. Please accept my cordial thanks for the same, and the assurance that whatever you send, of a similar character, will be very gratefully welcomed It puts a means of usefulness into my hands which I can employ most hopefully on my own part, and always most acceptably to the soldiers.

I had previously begged from a chaplain of one of your Philadelphia regiments a quantity of your tracts, and I am glad now to have, not only more of these, but other of your inestimable publications. I only wish I had more of them.

I remain yours very respectfully,

H. E. P.

Chaplain 2d Reg't N. H. V.

Are there not other readers of the Record who will send us remittances to be used in a similar manner?

DEATH OF A COLPORTEUR.

It gives us pain to announce the death of Rev. Abel Caldwell, one of the oldest and most faithful colporteurs of the Board of Publication. This sad event took place at Black Creek, New York, on the first day of August last. For a long course of years he had been engaged in the service of the Board, sometimes in western New York, but principally in Canada West, his head quarters being at Hamilton, C. W. While thus engaged he has distributed an immense quantity of the publications of the Board, and has carried divine truth to the homes of thousands, who had else, in all probability, never received it by any human messenger.

Mr. Caldwell returned to his house from Canada about the first of June last, very unwell and weak. For several weeks he appeared to be improving in health, but at the end of that time there was a change for the worse, and he died on the day above-mentioned without a struggle. His disease appears to have been brought on by exposure to the wet and cold. Mr. Caldwell was a member of the Presbytery of Buffalo City.

A truly good man has gone to his reward. Many will have occasion throughout eternity to bless him for his work and labour of love as a colporteur. May those who yet remain in the field emulate his zeal and assiduity. And may they be reminded by this providence that the day is short, and that the night is at hand in which no man can work.

BLESSED RESULTS FROM A SINGLE TRACT.

"The tract entitled 'The Heavenly Way,'" said Dr. Scudder, of Madras, "was given to a young man at one of the public markets. He read it; was convinced of the folly of idolatry; came to me for the purpose of obtaining a more full knowledge of Christianity; received instruction; and became, as I hope, a true follower of the Redeemer. But this is not all the good which this tract has been the means of doing. Through it the little brother of this young man became connected with one of my schools, and also attended church. After he had attended preaching for some time, he begged me to admit him to a profession of his faith. As he was quite young, not eleven years old, I hesitated to receive him. In this, perhaps, I did wrong. He never openly joined the church on earth. He, however, soon went to join the church in heaven. He was attacked with the cholera, and died. In India, when children are very ill, the father or mother take up a cocoa-nut, or a few plantains, and run to the temple, and say, 'Swammie, (the name given to the idol,) if you will cure my little boy, or little girl, I will give you this cocoa-nut, or these plantains.' The mother of this little boy saw that he was in great danger, and she told him that she wished to go and make offerings to one of her idols, in order that he might get well. But he requested her not to go. 'I do not worship idols,' said he; 'I worship Christ, my Saviour. If he is pleased to spare me a little longer in the world, it will be well; if not, I shall go to him.' The last words which he uttered were, 'I am going to Christ the Lord,' and then he died. Through the instrumentality of the same tract also, the young woman who afterwards married the brother, (the original receiver of the tract,) was converted; and, to crown all, the hoary-headed father, after having bowed his knees for half a century before idols, was through its means brought to yield his heart to the Saviour."

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I. A Little Book for Little Folks, about the Book of books. 24mo. pp. 72. Price 15 cents. Postage 3 cents.

This little volume will not fail to interest the "Little Folks," for whom it was written. It is strange how many wonderful things can be told about the Bible, and how inexhaustible is the variety of wonderful truths to be drawn out of it. Many of these are here set forth in a very novel and pleasing manner by the author, so as to furnish both entertainment and important instruction to his little readers.

II. Self-Sacrifice, or, the Pioneers of Fuegia. Compiled for the Board of Publication. By Sarah A. Myers. 12mo. pp. 300. Price 60 cents. Postage 12 cents.

No reader who opens this volume will be ready to lay it down without first giving it a thorough perusal. It is well entitled "Self-Sacrifice," for it contains a record of brave adventure and self-denial rarely equalled, even in the history of Christian missions. Every pious heart will glow with admiration and sympathy while the eye traces on these pages the story of Christian zeal and daring, exhibiting itself in wild and inhospitable Patagonia and the islands adjacent. We hope the book will have a wide circulation. It cannot fail to develop and increase a missionary enthusiasm in the bosom of every pious reader. A fine likeness of the devoted Captain Allen F. Gardiner forms a frontispiece to the volume.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. H. I. Coe.

Treasurer—Archibald Gamble, Esq.

No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Communications on the subject of Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, No. 88 Market Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Donations should be sent to Archibald Gamble, Esq., St Louis, Mo.; or, if more convenient, to J. D. Thorpe, Esq., Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Davidson, Esq., Louisville, Ky.; S. D. Powel, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Domestic Missions, No. 910 Arch Street, Philadelphia; T. H. Nevin, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. J. B. Kirtland, Memphis, Tennessee; or to William Rankin, Esq., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, 23 Centre St., New York.

THE TIMES AND THE BOARDS.

In the last number of the Record, we remarked that our two hundred thousand church members outside of Maryland, Kentucky, Missouri, and the eleven seceded States, must probably furnish this year $385,000, or important interests of our Zion must suffer. In the territory occupied by these two hundred thousand church members, and in the fields (other than the South-western Indian territory) cultivated by our Board of Foreign Missions, the benevolent organizations of the General Assembly expended about $370,000. If to this sum be added the increased amount required this year by the Board of Foreign Missions beyond the saving consequent on the breaking up of the Indian missions in the South-west, it will be seen that our estimate varies but little from the actual expenditures last year in the same fields. It should, however, be noted, that the Board of Domestic Missions closed its fiscal year, March 1, 1861, with a debt to its missionaries, outside of the New Orleans field, of $25,368; that the Colportage Fund of the Board of Publication was overdrawn, at the same date, $12,984; and that the appropriations of the Board of Church Extension, at the close of its fiscal year, April 1, 1861, were $2241 in advance of the means in its possession. While, therefore, our estimate may seem to allow an expenditure equal to last year on the home fields yet fully open to effort, it really contemplates a reduction of more than $40,000 in that expenditure. When it is remembered that the general prostration of the country must increase the wants of our suffering domestic missionaries—that the Board of Education reports a considerable advance in the number of the candidates for the ministry over the first quarter of last year—and that the Board of Church Extension, after all it has done in various ways to diminish its list of applications, has still on that list requests from eighty-five churches, calling for nearly $30,000—we are persuaded that all who are competent to judge will regard our estimate as a very low one.

CAN $385,000 BE OBTAINED THIS YEAR?

The great question then is, can $385,000 be raised this year, by the portion of the Church in a position to contribute? If we answer in the light of what was given last year, the reply must be discouraging. From the territory occupied by these two hundred thousand church members, the benevolent agencies of the General Assembly received last year about $261,000. Of this sum only $185,000 was from church collections, while nearly $24,000 was from legacies, and the remaining $52,000 chiefly from individual contributors. The prospect is the more discouraging, as both legacies and individual gifts fluctuate greatly, and in times such as the present, are likely to diminish rather than increase. Even on the unsafe supposition that these sources of income will be undiminished, our churches must increase their gifts sixty-six per cent., or two-thirds beyond last year, or the necessary sum will not be obtained.

ABUNDANT ABILITY.

If, however, the above question be examined in the light of the ability of the church, an affirmative answer seems easy. Even if the twenty thousand members reported in the Minutes for 1861 as belonging to vacant churches be left out of view, two dollars a year from each of the remaining one hundred and eighty thousand church members would, with the gifts already received from other sources, assure the necessary sum. Nay, even half a cent a day from each of the members in our communion will give the desired result. Have we a single flock that cannot average half a cent a day for each member, to carry on the whole missionary work of the Church? Is there a destitute widow or a hard-pressed child of poverty that cannot lay aside half a cent a day for the cause of Christ? Yet, small as this sum appears when apportioned to each, nothing but the most vigorous care and fidelity on the part of all our ministers and sessions will secure it. We have, as a Church, too much neglected the Divine command to gather up the fragments that nothing be lost. The pennies and the dimes of poverty have not been carefully sought from all who profess to have been redeemed with a great price. May not the present crisis, so full of disaster to many who have hitherto given largely of their abundance, be God's plan to teach us the blessedness of self-denying and universal contributions? Surely a new spirit must baptize our ministers and our churches, or we must sadly confess the smallness of our measure of faith. If the Lord give us not more of his self-sacrificing love to the souls of men, half our churches will continue to do nothing for his cause, and hundreds of our ministers, with careless or fearful hearts, will continue to withhold from their people suitable instruction in the duty and blessedness of Christian beneficence.

HOW THE WESLEYANS DO IT:

Or, How they raise at the rate of $700,000 missionary money in a year. A secretary of the society says:

"The ministers make the missionary cause their own; and all, children as well as adults, and the poor as well as wealthy, are invited to contribute."

"This reply states the rationale of this wonderful success. Let us analyze it, after a homiletic fashion:

"I. The ministers make the cause their own.

"1. They study it. 2. They enter into it heartily. 3. They faithfully present it.

"II. All are invited to contribute.

"1. 'All.' (1) Children; (2) Adults; (3) Poor; (4) The wealthy. The classification is exhaustive.

"2. 'Are invited to contribute.'

"(1) They are 'invited' in due season.

"(2) They are 'invited' to give according to the measure of ability.

"(3) They are 'invited' earnestly.

"(4) They are 'invited' successfully."—Ch. Advocate.

It was reported that the Rev. William J. Hoge, D. D., late colleague of Dr. Spring, had died at Richmond, Va., shortly after his return, but the report is now contradicted.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN REGARD TO COLLECTIONS.

Whereas, Many of our churches do not contribute to our benevolent enterprises, and whereas, it is desirable to test the power of simultaneous effort; and whereas, an emergency has arisen, requiring the coöperation of all our churches to save our Boards from serious embarrassment, therefore,

Resolved, 1. That this Assembly earnestly request all our churches that have no fixed times for the purpose, to take up annual collections as follows, viz.

For the Board of Domestic Missions on the first Sabbath of November.

For the Board of Foreign Missions on the first Sabbath of January.

For the Board of Education on the first Sabbath of March.

For the Colportage Fund of the Board of Publication on the first Sabbath of May.

For the Board of Church Extension on the first Sabbath of July.

For the Disabled Ministers' Fund on the first Sabbath of September.

Resolved, 2. That when the annual collections cannot be taken up on the days above designated, it be recommended to take them up as soon thereafter as possible.

Treasurer Trustees of General Assembly,
Office, No. 320 Walnut Street.

Philadelphia, September 14th, 1861.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST
TO ANY OF THE
BOARDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The State Laws differ so much that no one form will answer in all the States, but in every case it is essential to give the RIGHT CORPORATE NAME.

The oldest Board was originally called the Board of Missions, but is now incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the title of "The Trustees of the Board of Domestic Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Of the Board of Education the corporate name is, "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Foreign Missions is incorporated under the laws of New York, under the style of "The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

The Board of Publication is incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania under the style of "The Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly is not incorporated, but the following form of bequest, it is supposed, would be valid.

I bequeath to my executors the sum of ——— dollars, in trust, to pay over the same in ——— after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Church Extension of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, located in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its directions, and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said executors for the same.

When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.

SYSTEMATIC BENEVOLENCE.

That every believer is expected to contribute to the cause of Christ and suffering humanity, according as the Lord has prospered him, is among the plainest disclosures of the New Testament, and so was it received by the early, as well as by the apostolic church. It was in their creed, and it was part of their joyful practice. The corruptions of Christianity only gave the matter a wrong direction, but did not remove the impression from the heart of the church. The chill which fell upon her in the stormy periods which succeeded the Reformation, the perpetual struggles of the people of the reformed churches for existence, diverted her from her aggressive movements; and the decay of vital godliness, the fearful outpouring of infidelity on the continent of Europe, completed the deadness of effort. Later years, through God's mercy, have witnessed a gradual return to exertions tending to the evangelizing of the world. But sad and slow have been the steps. Thousands—tens of thousands have lived and died in the fellowship of the church, and given next to nothing. Whatever be the causes, such are the facts. Our own country, excited by the more generous efforts of English Christians, has, during the half century which has passed, been moving in this direction. The different causes have taken hold on the heart of the church. Contributions, comparatively generous, have been yielded. For this we bless God and take courage. But the annual reports of our Boards disclose the sad fact that multitudes do nothing. There is no way of understanding the meagre collections of some churches—meagre compared with a reported membership—but on the admission that many go from year to year without the exercise of this grace.

That we never shall reach the gospel measure until each one is so approached as to bring his contribution, is too manifest for argument. Now the question of practical interest is, how can this be done? Our system, with its gradation of courts, is the beau ideal on which to try the efficiency of the system. We can dispense with a hired agency if we will. We can accomplish all by the simple working of a machinery, so simple in its adjusted relations, that every part is open and manifest to the eye of the beholder. We have ministers—called of God to gather the harvest. Twenty-seven hundred and more of these—almost one-third of them connected with the Domestic Missions of our church. May we not depend on these? In education, in piety, in zeal for God, and in ability for every good work, they will fall behind no other order of Christian ministers. They have power, and with the blessing of God could exert an influence for good beyond all calculation.

We have an army of elders—seven or eight thousand picked men—sound in the faith, ruling in the churches over which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers, and taking pleasure in her very dust, and favouring the stones thereof.

We have three hundred thousand members; trained to love, and to maintain, and to aid in the faith and order of the gospel, as we hold it, in its primitive simplicity and purity; and perhaps one hundred thousand of these on missionary ground; and then add to these our congregations, counting in numbers by hundreds of thousands, many bearing the seal of the covenant, trained in our doctrines, true to the hereditary faith of the church, and willing to labour for this holy service. Is there no power in these masses? What might they not accomplish, brought under the power of the spirit of missions, which is the Spirit of the Redeemer, for the regeneration, not only of the land, but of the world? This sacramental host of God's elect are his means to accomplish all the glowing prophecies which tell, in utmost beauty, of a renovated and millennial earth.

The system is complete, the order is divine. Where lies the fault? Why slumbers the latent, and, as we have seen, the mighty energy of our church? The motive power is lacking. Personal, individual responsibility is not felt. Every minister, elder, and member has his proper and personal work to do for God in redeeming our land. The awakening, the turning must begin at home—in each heart. How much zeal is languid; how much faith is dead; how much love is feeble; how inactive our lives; how meagre our contributions; how absent our self-denial; how hypocritical our sacrifices. When we behold our pride, covetousness, worldliness, and vanity, alas, we need wear sackcloth, and confess that we are most truly unprofitable servants.

The sentiment of the church is against a paid agency. We have no hope, therefore, in anything else than in a united and voluntary effort on the part of these God-appointed agents of whom we have spoken. They are competent, we know. Each man has a work to perform. None are too obscure. The servant girl who loves Christ can be a collector among the humble ones with whom she labours. It is neither above nor beneath any in God's church. Every man is expected to do his duty—the man with the one talent, as well as the more favoured brother with the five talents. If only our church could be impressed with this sense of personal responsibility, the labour would be accomplished, and our system, moving as some great machinery in noiseless motion, accomplishing the grandest results. Let each arise. Let the system be organized and then watched. The fire must be kept up, or the steam-engine will cease its ponderous revolutions. Our failures have been this want of continued watchings. The life of the church is to be fed by constant spiritual aliment. This grace of which we speak is to be kept in active life by continued appeal. In these days of trial we can gather, amid the gleanings a blessed harvest. The harvest is great—the labourers are few. The gold and silver are with us—the collectors are not at hand. Sit down, dear brother—elder—member, and deal honestly with thyself. Survey the magnificence of the field, the solemn greatness of the work to be done. Know that through His existing church God will carry on his work of redeeming the world to himself, and then inquire, whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this.

THE TRUE SPIRIT.

Dear Brother—I received your very kind note, with the welcome draft for $17.50. We thank you most sincerely for the favour. It seemed a large sum for us to have at one time, and it went a great way towards supplying our wants.

To-day closes another quarter's labour under commission from the Board; and I feel called upon to record my thanks to a kind Providence who has given me strength to serve him in my poor weak way another three months. I have no special matters to report. All our meetings have been kept up, and with the usual interest.

This report closes another year's labour in connection with the Board. The question of applying for a renewal of the commission has come up with considerable force. I felt that I could not ask it in the present straitened condition of the funds of the Board. My churches can scarcely do as much as they did the year just closed.

My wife and I figured up what would probably be our expenses for six months to come, leaving out some clothes, &c., which we had thought we needed, and economizing in some other directions, and we concluded we would get along without asking the Board for anything, for six months at least. That is, we take that portion upon ourselves; and in doing so, I feel that I can pray with much more faith for the relief of the Board. We will miss the quarterly remittances very much; that amount, coming together, was always a great help. But the Lord has already proved himself better than our faith, therefore we will trust him with our necessities.

I sincerely pray you may have wisdom from above, for this time of thick darkness.

Very truly, your brother, J. C. B.

FROM THE DISTANT LAKE REGION.

The Presbytery of Lake Superior, at its late meeting in Ontonagon, directed its Committee on Missions to lay before the Board a statement of the present condition of the domestic missionary work within its bounds.

This work was commenced eight years ago, by the appointment of a labourer to Ontonagon. He was accompanied by another minister of our church, unconnected with the Board, who organized a church at the foot of the lake, which was afterwards supplied by a missionary of our Board for a few months. But in consequence of our continued inability to supply it with a suitable man, that church went over to the New-school. We afterwards lost to our church a most promising field of usefulness and growth at Marquette, in the Iron District, by our failure to obtain a suitable man to occupy it.

Six years ago, however, another missionary was commissioned to Superior, at the head of the lake, who has continued to labour indefatigably, and with considerable success, in the face of unusual difficulties, till the present time. And four years ago, a third labourer was obtained, and arrived at Bayfield; and shortly after the Presbytery of Lake Superior was organized, with but three ministers and three churches. Our joy in this event was crushed by the death of one of its members within a week.

Still again, in 1858, five years from the commencement of our work, another minister was found to take his place, and the Presbytery was reorganized. Since that time, these three brethren have continued to labour on; all of them under trying discouragements, and some of them under the most painful embarrassments. Two years ago, they hoped to be strengthened by the accession of another labourer to an important post; but he left it almost as soon as he reached it, and it was taken by others. Still, last year, in compliance with our wishes, the Board commissioned another, who spent a few months, and relinquished the field as too hard.

Now some of these brethren are driven to an extremity more trying than any before. After having expended all their own means, laboured as long as possible for their own support, overburdened with a debt which they dare no longer augment, they are compelled to withdraw from the field for want of means to live. One has already gone. Another separated himself from his family, leaving them a thousand miles away, in order that he might live more cheaply. But yet he feels that it is impossible, and he must yield, forsaking the work which has engaged the prime of his days and the strongest affections of his heart.

We offer no complaint through these statements. We have learned to endure hardness, and murmur at nothing so long as we can be permitted to work. Our church has cheered and sympathized with us in our lonely and important field. The Board of Domestic Missions has done for this field all it has been able to do, and generally all that we have asked; sustaining us as much by their lively interest as by their liberal appropriations. Our difficulties are from several causes. We have hesitated to press the wants of this field, compassed by so many discouragements, and while so many urgent cries were heard from other regions for more men than the Board could furnish. The inability to find such labourers as were adapted to this field, and the aversion to a region so remote, so uncultivated, and so forbidding as they thought it, has been a most formidable occasion of our failure; and commercial crises and pecuniary embarrassments have wrought most disastrously in some portions of our field.

Let it not be alleged that our missionaries have been faint-hearted or fickle. They have been the first of Protestant churches to enter this field, next to our Methodist brethren. Not one of our missionaries located in the field has left it till now. Our New-school brethren have made the most strenuous exertions to hold the field, but they have not a single labourer left. The Episcopalians, more strongly supported than any others, have but two left. The Baptists have none. The Congregationalists have never ventured to undertake any labours here.

Nor does the state or prospects of this country warrant any suspension of our labours as a Church; for though some portions, once rife with speculation, have borne disastrous reverse, the great leading interest of iron and copper never has been more flourishing than at present. This, the development of its great wealth, grows from year to year.

The purpose of our Presbytery in giving this summary review, was to lay the state and wants of these missions before the Board; that they may aid the Board in its statements of our need; and that the Board may be able to estimate our present pressing need of aid. You will appreciate, without our lingering on so sad reflections, our heart-sickening case. So lonely, to go forward in our work, without such coöperation as we can have only through Presbyterial organizations; so impossible to maintain such connection with churches anywhere off Lake Superior; so difficult to obtain a reorganization if ours is lost; so sadly, persuading those in this field that Presbyterianism is hopeless, and those all over the land that our labours here are a failure—we have hope left only in God. But while we trust on him in our extremity, may we not turn to his people, and appeal to them to give us help through the Board? Brethren, for the sinking honour of Jesus' cause amongst us, for the love of souls, can you not maintain those who are willing to labour on here through every possible extremity.

By order of the Committee.

WHAT THE TIMES BRING FORTH.

Kansas, September, 1861.

I had been almost doubting whether to send a report for this last quarter, owing to the state of the country, supposing that the Board would not be able to send any money to her missionaries. But I was rejoiced the last mail, to receive the check that was due me the 1st of June. I began to think if that did not come, I would be compelled to go to days' labour to support my family this winter; but as that has come, I may hope that you will be able to send me the check for my past three months labour, and if so, I will be able to get my family through the winter without suffering, if we do not get any more. I feel that I need the direction and guidance of the Lord, and advice from the Board now, more than ever I did before.

The political state of affairs here and in the immediate vicinity, is exceedingly unpleasant. Our little church was very weak before, and now all but one or two are secessionists, and some have quit attending church entirely; so that I am left as destitute of a church and any support from the people as I was when we first commenced here four years ago.

We are here so close to Missouri that we are living in constant dread, for reports come to us constantly that we will soon be surrounded by secession forces. Still I do not think that we are in much danger; at least I hope and trust we are not. I do not know what I had better think of doing this winter, for if the secessionists are successful in Missouri, a Union man cannot do anything in the church at this place.

We have a good little brick church here, finished and comfortable, thirty by forty feet, and paid for, all but a small payment that I am responsible for myself, and the church property is deeded and secured to the Presbyterian Church (Old-school), so that our church property cannot be lost unless it should be destroyed. I have some property of my own, and a house of my own, so that I do not have to pay rent—and my own firewood; so that I can live much cheaper here than any place else that I could go to now.

I have been preaching here two Sabbaths a month for more than two years, and the congregations have always been very respectable; but the congregation is considerably diminished now, especially the male portion; and I feel that if I stay here, all I can do is to continue preaching, without any hope of doing any good. I have avoided ever saying anything, either publicly or privately, on politics, that any one could take exception to; yet the feeling with the majority of our citizens here is such, that if they find out in any way a minister's private sentiments, if he is for the Union they will not hear him preach. One year ago I was considerably encouraged by having some additions to our church, and a hope of some more then; but that work is all gone now, so far as we can see, at least for the present.

I have preached at two or three other places this summer, where there has been but little interest manifested in the cause of Christ; but with so much political excitement, we could not expect to see much good accomplished in the church.

I have been preaching since last May once a month at ———, just in the edge of Nebraska Territory, where is a very interesting field of labour, and where I hope much good may be done. There are a good many Presbyterian families in that county, and a fine country where Presbyterians will be very likely to seek a home when they come to a new country; and there is a fair promise of soon gathering a large church there, if some faithful missionary were settled in that county, and would labour entirely in it, as the field is large enough for one man to labour all the time; and I think a faithful, devoted man, could soon be supported entirely by the people on that field.

I will labour on here as long as I can have any hope of doing the least good. I suppose at least I had better try to remain here this winter, and by spring we may have a great change in the population, as there have been a good many changes in the last two or three weeks. I will trust in the Lord, and do all I can in the service of our blessed Master.

A HARD CASE.

Kansas, September 4, 1861.

Yours of August 15th was received in due time, and I must say that its contents made me gloomy and sad. I came to this new field of labour in June, and when I arrived here I had but two three cent pieces in my purse. Besides all this, we were out of provisions nearly. I have been labouring ever since, and have received nothing for my labours. Now five of my children are sick—two of them threatened with typhoid fever—no medicine, and no money to get any. We have not now two quarts of flour or meal in our house, and I do not see how I am to get it, only by regular day labour to earn it. My two eldest sons are both sick, who would otherwise be of valuable service to us. You see by the above that we have not only "watchings," but also "fastings," and may God sanctify them.

This is an important and promising field, though our efforts will be much crippled by the state of the country. I came near losing my life in Missouri, and other ministers are in straitened circumstances there. There is one thing I would direct your attention to, and that is this: Many congregations who have been receiving aid from the Board, are much more able to do without aid than the new fields in the West. At least this was the case formerly. Retrenchment is necessary, and I suppose the time has come when it must commence. How beautifully and effectually did our Board work before the difficulty in our government arose! But now it is inefficient.

I think I had better have gone to Dakota. There is better prospect for a support now there than here, though the future may not be any more promising. This county has suffered so much from the drought of last year, that it will be hard work to get along for a time.

The church at Nebraska City can and ought to support their minister. This is also true of Brownsville. Surely those men can better get along on what their churches can give, than I can labour for nothing, and support a family of a wife and eight children. But I do not complain of the Board if they have nothing to give. May God sustain you by his grace, and direct you by his Spirit. If a box of clothing could be sent to us, it would greatly assist us.

"THE REGIONS BEYOND."

When the apostle had planted a church, and furnished it with the ordinances of the gospel, he calculated upon its being his efficient auxiliary in extending the knowledge of Christ. The measure of the rule by which he was guided in the great work to which he was called, reached always beyond the field of his former labours; and according to this rule, he hoped to be enlarged by the Corinthians, that he might bear to others, in regions more remote, the blessing of salvation. But their aid in this cause was predicated upon the increase of their faith. "When your faith is increased, we hope," says the apostle, "that we shall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly, to preach the gospel to the regions beyond you."

From this example, we infer, first, that the primary object of every minister should be, to build up those who are under his particular charge, in the faith of the gospel. This is to be done by preaching the word with fidelity, and by the employment of such other means as are implied in the labours of the faithful steward, who gives every one, young and old, his portion in due season.

We infer, secondly, that the co-operation of the members of the church is required. If it be the minister's duty to preach, it is also the people's duty to receive the word at his mouth, and profit by it. And there are a thousand ways in which they can be stimulated, and stimulate each other, to every good word and work. Every one has his appropriate sphere within which he may labour—his circle of influence where he may let his light shine; and this is a talent entrusted to him, for which he is accountable.

Our third inference is, that none should rest satisfied with present attainments. Have we a knowledge of God's will? We should continually strive to know more of him, and of the way of salvation through the cross of Christ! Have we a comfortable evidence of our adoption into the family of God? We should diligently labour to make our calling and election sure. Have we been instrumental in winning souls? Oh, how precious are those souls which are yet to be won! Have we abounded in prayers, in labours, and in alms? After all, we are but unprofitable servants, and if saved ourselves, we shall have to attribute it, not to works of righteousness which we have done, but to the abounding grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich. We should, then, think more of what is to be done, than of what has been done, for his sake; and as we ask, "What wouldst thou have me to do?" we should be ready to perform it with alacrity, at the slightest intimation of his will.

We infer, fourthly, that every church should regard itself as occupying a central position, around which its light shines—the light which she reflects from the Sun of Righteousness. It should be remembered that the same gospel which has been effectual in the redemption of souls in one place, can be effectual in another; and as the word of God is the sword of the Spirit, it should be employed for the purpose of making conquests to the King of Zion. Had our churches that enlargedness of which the apostle speaks, they would not only think of the regions beyond them, but they would deny themselves, and use every effort to bring them under religious culture. One way of doing it, in which the humblest member of the church may be a messenger for good, is by visiting for the purpose of religious conversation, and by distributing religious tracts.

We infer, finally, that every member of the church has a personal concern in the regions beyond him. No matter how far beyond; if it be a missionary field, missionaries should there be sent, and there aided in preaching the gospel. And if a member of the church be too poor to give anything—and few there are who, by the practice of a little self-denial, cannot have something to give—he can, at least, if he has a heart to pray, give his prayers for the enlargement and prosperity of Zion. When, therefore, we think of our privileges as a church of Christ, we should remember also the regions beyond us, where no such privileges are enjoyed—where there are no Sabbaths.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THE GOOD PASTOR.

In the former article on this subject, appointment by Christ to the office of a shepherd was urged as an indispensable pre-requisite to an entrance upon the exercise of its functions. He who is not called of Christ, and appointed by him to this office, is, in his estimation, a thief and a robber, and must receive a robber's doom when the Chief Shepherd shall call the under shepherds to their account.

In the present number, we propose to consider other points specified by the same high authority. Our Saviour, in describing the good shepherd, characterizes him as one whose voice the sheep hear. This may be regarded as a test rather than a qualification—as evidence that certain qualifications are possessed, rather than a description of the qualifications themselves. The test is an infallible one. The Chief Shepherd himself was willing to stake his claims to his high office upon the verdict of the sheep. The recognition of his voice was to serve the twofold purpose of testing his claims to the title of Shepherd, and their claims to the title of sheep. If the true sheep did not hear his voice, he must be regarded as a stranger; if professed sheep did not hear his voice, they must be regarded as not of his fold.

Now the question very naturally arises, are we warranted in applying this test to the under shepherds? Is the verdict of the sheep to be taken into account in determining the question of a call to the pastoral office? Yes, verily; and where this verdict is not taken and duly considered, in the introduction of a man to the oversight of the blood-bought flock, the people of Christ have been so far disfranchised. If the sheep are not permitted to judge whether the voice of the candidate is the voice of a stranger, or the voice of a divinely called pastor, they are denied a right implied in the indwelling of the Holy Ghost in the hearts of God's people; a right implied in duties which are positively enjoined upon them; a right essential to the purity both of the Church and her ministry. If Christ himself, and his apostles, submitted their credentials, not simply to the chief priests, and scribes, and elders, but also to the professed people of God, why should we for a moment hesitate as to whether any of Christ's professed servants should not be subjected to the test of an audience of Christ's sheep? This doctrine, which we are now urging, was evidently held by the Apostle of the Gentiles, when, in writing to the Galatians, he pronounced an anathema upon any apostle, or any angel, who should preach any other gospel than that which they had already heard. What use in warning them against false doctrines, if they were not to judge of the teacher and his teachings? It is with reference to teachers our Saviour was speaking, when he said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." In the admonition to beware of false prophets, he proceeded upon the assumption that it was the right and the duty of the people of God to judge whether the prophet was called of God.

And this doctrine agrees with facts. Who ever heard of one who was truly called of God to preach the gospel, being rejected by the truly pious? He may be despised and rejected by some professing Christians, but if he bears a commission from Christ, the sheep will recognize the shepherd; they will hear his voice, and recognizing in it the voice of the Master, they will follow him. In the long run, and by the body of believers, he will be acknowledged as an ambassador of Christ.

And, as already intimated, this test may be employed to ascertain the state of the Church. Where a true shepherd is not recognized, as such, by professing Christians, the inference is that they are not of Christ's sheep. This is the reason Christ assigns for the rejection of himself by the Jews: "Ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep." "He that is of God heareth God's words; ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God." The church, therefore, as well as the candidate, is on trial, when, during the vacancy of the pulpit, they are engaged in the selection of their future pastor.

But our present object is to present this test in its reference to candidates for the ministry, as a means whereby a young man may ascertain whether he is called of God to the office of a shepherd. It is all-important that the test should be applied in the case of a candidate for an existing vacancy; but it is for the interest of all concerned that the test in question should be applied from the very outset of the candidate's career. It ought to be in operation in the family, in the social circle, in prayer-meetings, in the school, and in the college and seminary, as well as in the Presbytery. Where household piety marks one of the family circle as the future preacher, where this verdict is confirmed by the piety of the neighbourhood and the church, and is afterwards recognized by pious school and college companions, whose decision receives additional confirmation as the young man advances toward the goal of an actual ambassadorship, the evidence that there is a call from God placed in his hands, becomes too strong to be gainsayed or questioned. If in all these cases, and under all these varying circumstances, and by all these classes of judges, the verdict is uniformly in favour of the candidate, the inference is unavoidable that his voice is not the voice of a stranger.

It may be objected that the application of this test in the family sphere cannot be relied upon—that parental affection may blind the judge, and lead to a false estimate of the piety and talents of the supposed candidate—that the voice of the son may have a charm for parental ears, which may cause its accents to sound like the voice of a shepherd, when in reality it is the voice of a stranger. The force of this objection is diminished in those cases in which, out of several sons, there is one whose parts and piety mark him out as the future minister. Where this conclusion is reached by a whole family, and their verdict is confirmed by the surrounding community, whose opportunities for close observation are second only to those of the family, there is a very strong probability, if not an absolute certainty, that there is a sound basis, both of piety and talent, which has given rise and currency to the prevalent persuasion.

The Apostle Paul set very great value upon this species of testimony. It was on just this kind of evidence that he received Timothy as a candidate for the ministry. This young man was brought to the notice of the Apostle by his own neighbours. He lived at Lystra, "and he was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium." He had been nursed on the lap of a pious mother and grandmother; he had from a child known the Scriptures, and had made such an impression upon the pious people of his own neighbourhood, that they recommended him to the Apostle. In proof of Paul's estimate of their opinion, he took Timothy with him, in company with Silas, as an helper in the work of the ministry. And when the Apostle counsels Timothy about the appointment of others to the office of the ministry, whether to the diaconate or to the episcopate, he enjoins it upon him to consider how those who desire the office stand in their respective households and their respective communities. They must rule their own houses well, and must have a good report, even of them that are without.

Dear young brethren, candidates for the holy ministry, ye who desire the office of a bishop, who hold out your hands for the pastoral crook, have you the confidence of the sheep? Do they like to hear your voice in prayer, in exhortation, in conversation? Can you say that, so far as you have had access to them, the sheep hear your voice?

BE NOT MANY MASTERS.

These words are found James iii. 1, and form the introduction to a series of counsels upon the duty of governing the tongue. The introductory words, and the entire sequel, have a reference which the unhappy rendering adopted by our translators has placed beyond the discovery of the English reader. The proper translation is, be not many teachers, πολλοὶ διδάσκαλοι, and the counsel, whilst it applies, in its general truths and principles, to all Christians, is addressed, in the first instance, and especially, to aspirants after the office of teaching in the church of God. The counsel was needed in the days of the apostles, even though the gift of prophecy was then largely poured out upon the church, and cannot, we might reasonably infer, be out of place in these days, when both prophecy and tongues have ceased.

But we are not left to mere inference. The necessity for the counsel—"be not many teachers," is becoming daily more and more apparent, as the church enlarges, and emerges from the shackles of an intolerant hierarchy under whose mortal shadow her life was well nigh extinguished. We are in danger of ignoring the fact that there is such a thing as a ministry ordained and set apart for the edification of the body of Christ. In our first ecstasy of freedom from the thraldom that would enslave the entire man, and silence his glory, we are in danger of running into the opposite extreme, throwing aside all restraint, and rushing unbridled into an anarchy of tongues, forgetting the admonition—"be not many masters."

In order that the admonition may exercise its legitimate force in deterring young men whose lips have not been touched with fire from the altar, from invading the office of the ministry, we would invite the attention of all who contemplate an entrance upon the sacred office, to consider the following points embraced in it.

1. The condemnation which awaits those who usurp the office of teacher. "Brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation." Such is the current testimony of God's word against those who employ an uncommissioned tongue in the service of the Lord. "Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues, and say, He saith . . . Therefore, thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not, yet they say, sword and famine shall not be in this land; by sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed."

As you would avoid this condemnation, tarry at the threshold and inquire whether you have received, from the ascended Saviour, the gifts necessary to the exercise of the office of a master in Israel.

2. The second consideration presented by the apostle, as a dissuasive against hastening to take the office of master, is the high attainments necessary to the using of the office so as not to cast a stumbling-block in the way of others. "In many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." So great is the danger of offending others, in the use of our tongues as teachers, in the church of God, that it almost argues perfection to be able to avoid giving offence. This truth is often illustrated. With what anxiety does a pastor enter upon the conducting of a meeting in which some of the membership are expected to take part in exhortation or in prayer! Why is this? Simply because he knows how easy it is to give offence, and how rare is the grace of speaking to edification, without casting stumbling-blocks in the way of the brethren. The exercise of pastoral supervision and authority in this matter, is one of the most delicate and trying duties of the ministry; and the difficulty arises altogether from the fact, that there are aspirations after the office of teaching, where there may not be the grace necessary to govern the tongue, and speak without giving offence. Where this desire prevails in a church, without the grace referred to, we have just such a state of discord, and envying, and strife, as the apostle would rebuke in this admonition. And when the desire for pre-eminence in the particular congregation strengthens into a desire for pre-eminence as a public office-bearer and teacher in the church of Christ, the rebuke is all the more requisite, and the application of the principle all the more pertinent. If it requires attainments bordering upon perfection, a control of one's own spirit bordering upon absolute mastery, to teach under the presidency of another, what standard can be too high for him who is to assume the highest seat as a teacher, and thus be raised above the restraints of such supervision? Brethren, consider this qualification, and remember the admonition of the apostle—"Be not many masters."

3. The apostle would deter unqualified aspirants, in the next place, by a consideration of the acknowledged difficulty of bridling the tongue. His figures are pertinent and powerful. Horses can be turned with a bit, ships can be controlled even under the impulse of fierce winds, the beasts of the field, the fowls of heaven, serpents, and even the very monsters of the deep, are, and have been tamed; but the tongue can no man tame. It is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. This, however, is the chief instrument to be used in the exercise of the office of a teacher in the church of God. With what fear and trembling should a man put forth his hand to employ it in this sacred service! Take heed, dear young brethren, to the admonition of the apostle, and "be not many masters."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE SCHOOL AND THE NATION.

The school is the nation in embryo. What food for thought there is in this brief sentence! All that is to constitute the nation, and mould her character, and shape her destiny, is there. There is the nation's intellect; there are her emotional fires; there is her will. Look at these boys and girls! Consider them well, for, when a few brief summers have fled, they will crowd from the stage of time and the theatre of action the entire host of living, acting men and women of the present day! There are the future farmers, mechanics, clerks, merchants, doctors, lawyers, counsellors, judges, mayors, governors, presidents, of the nation. There are the men who are to plow and reap, the men who are to make and administer our laws, the men who are to have charge of interests which take hold of life and death. There are the men who are to be the instructors and the defenders of the nation—the men into whose custody the entire heritage of civil and religious liberty bequeathed by our fathers—a heritage now trembling in the balances of war—is to be committed. And, oh solemn thought! there too are the future ambassadors of Christ—the men who are to proclaim the unsearchable riches of his grace, and lead sinners to the Lamb of God, or who are to pervert the truth, and lead captive the souls of men. And last, not least, there are the fathers and mothers of the future America! What a scene is this! Who can contemplate it and remain unmoved?

Is the church looking in upon this nursery of the nation? What are her thoughts and purposes concerning it? Has she concluded that her work is so well performed by the educational appliances of the several States that there is nothing left for her to do in this great national vineyard? So it would seem if we are to judge from facts. She is not putting forth her ability to reach, by a Christian education, the youth of the nation. What she is doing in a few parochial schools, and in some academies and colleges, does not invalidate this charge. The church is living in gross neglect of her duty to the rising generation. Sent by her Divine Head to disciple all nations, and consequently this nation, as well as any other, she is contenting herself, as if she were really discharging her commission, by giving religious instruction in a few parochial schools, and in a few select schools, academies, and colleges! Is this discipling the nation? What answer, dear brethren of the Presbyterian church, can we give to this question? Are we putting forth our strength to disciple this nation? In view of the fact that there has not been one dollar for this purpose given to the Board of Education for almost two months, what answer can be given? Brethren, remember that the hopes of the nation and the church are shut up within the walls of the nation's schools, and that our commission is, that we disciple this nation.

THE SCHOOL THE GREAT ARM OF DENOMINATIONAL POWER.

The denominational type of a man's Christianity is determined, in most cases, by the instructions of the school or academy. If the teacher is an Episcopalian, the pupil is likely to come forth imbued with the leaven of Episcopacy; if the teacher is a Baptist, the pupil is likely to be pervaded with Baptist sentiments; and if the teacher is a Romanist, the pupil will, in all probability, be infected with the errors of the papacy. Where these results are not reached, there will, most likely, be engendered a spirit of indifference, which may not only prove prejudicial to religion in any form, but may lead eventually to absolute scepticism.

In view of this fact—a fact established beyond doubt—it is passing strange how many Presbyterians commit their children to the tutelage of teachers who belong to denominations which have been the historic opponents of Presbyterianism. They have met a teacher at some watering-place, or in some social circle, whose literary qualifications, or personal accomplishments, or attention to their children, have won upon their heads or hearts, and, without ever considering the religious views of their new acquaintance, they decide upon placing their loved ones under his or her instruction. Presbyterians, we would ask, is this discharging the vows you took upon you, when, before God and his church, you promised to train those little ones in the doctrines of the Bible, as held by the Presbyterian church? Are these the doctrines they are learning now? Or, is it true, that you have placed them where they will never hear those doctrines at all, or hear of them only as "the horrible decrees?"

THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.

The Bible is, beyond all controversy, the best book of education in the world. It is the best book for the formation of children's minds; the best book for their acquisition and preservation of a pure idiomatic style in their native language; the best book to promote and secure the purposes of family government; the best book to make our children enlightened and good citizens of the Republic; the best book, in fine, to preserve them from all evil, and train them up in all good.

A powerful volume might be written on its excellence as a school book, and on the importance of still keeping it, where our forefathers laid it, as the corner stone of our invaluable system of public education. If you take it away, the system not only becomes worthless, but absolutely pernicious. Imbue a single rising generation with the various knowledges of our day, and leave out the knowledge and the fear of God in his word, and you have already made broad provision for your country's ruin. You have gathered fuel of ambition and irreligion, which any bold mind may set fire to. If Lord Bacon could not talk of knowledge alone, without the mingling of God's truth and love in it, as being a pernicious and dangerous aliment to older minds, much more is it dangerous and hurtful to the minds of children.

Our education needs a religious element; for it is not education alone that will save us, but will merely train a skilful race of gladiators for the arena of political strife. The only source of that element of safety is the word of God. And if you take the word of God from your common schools, you are teaching infidelity and practical atheism to the whole nation. You are filling the mind with elements that, without the safeguard of Divine truth, are sure to become fiery, bitter, and poisonous.

In its general influence over the minds of our children, and over the whole business of education, the Bible in our schools is invaluable. It is a constant habitual nourishment, an uninterrupted systematic influence over tender minds at the most susceptible age—as steady, as cheerful, as healthful as the light of the sun. In this way a great many children are blessed with the privilege of listening daily to the word of God, who, alas! would never hear it read in the family; and this is one highly important reason for maintaining it. It brings the children even of the abandoned, the vicious, the worthless—of families where no family altar was ever dreamed of—to the daily recognition of a Heavenly Father, and the daily table of that bread which he has provided for the soul. This seems acting somewhat in the spirit of the Bible itself. This is writing the characters of heaven upon the soul deeper than all succeeding impressions. How beneficent, how salutary in all its enlightened and elevating influences is the daily and appropriate use of the Bible in school! —Rev. Dr. Cheever.

"THAT IS A BOY I CAN TRUST."

I once visited a large public school. At recess a little fellow came up and spoke to the master; as he turned to go down the platform, the master said, "That is a boy I can trust. He never failed me." I followed him with my eye, and looked at him when he took his seat after recess. He had a fine, open, manly face. I thought a good deal about the master's remark. What a character had that little boy earned! He had already got what would be worth more to him than a fortune. It would be a passport into the best store in the city, and, what is better, into the confidence and respect of the whole community.

I wonder if the boys know how soon they are rated by older people. Every boy in the neighbourhood is known, and opinions are formed of him; he has a character, either favourable or unfavourable. A boy of whom the master can say, "I can trust him; he never failed me," will never want employment. The fidelity, promptness, and industry which he shows at school, are in demand everywhere, and are prized everywhere. He who is faithful in little, will be faithful also in much. Be sure, boys, that you earn a good reputation at school. Remember, you are just where God has placed you, and your duties are not so much given you by your teachers or your parents, as by God himself. You must render an account to them, and you also will be called to render an account to him. Be trusty—be true.—Child's Paper.

EARLY LESSONS.

It is probably true that, in every family where there is a family altar, it has been noticed that very young children are often seen going through the forms of worship. They imitate reading, singing, and prayer. This is one among a thousand illustrations of the susceptibility of the young mind to impressions for good or evil. Who can estimate the value of the morning and evening sacrifice, in its influence upon our children? They learn to talk in three years, and this is as soon as our missionaries can acquire a foreign language. They soon learn much of the worship of God. We should haste to fill the measure with wheat, and give no place to the chaff.

Recent Intelligence.

CHINA.

We have received letters from Canton, July 10th; Ningpo, June 27th; Shanghai, July 18th; and Tangchow, July 8th. The Dispensary of the London Missionary Society, at Canton, had been placed under the charge of the Rev. A. P. Happer, M. D., for the present, adding considerably to his labours, and also to his influence for good. Mr. Mills speaks of the services at Shanghai in encouraging terms: "We are glad to say, that the exercises here at the South Gate, on the Sabbath, are quite encouraging. The morning congregation usually fills the little chapel; in the afternoon we have an interesting Bible-class." Mr. and Mrs. Nevius had reached Tangchow, and the health of Mrs. Nevius had already received benefit from the change of climate. Mr. Gayley was also much better. The missionaries speak in warm terms of the prospect of missionary labour in the province of Shantang, of which Tangchow is one of the cities.

The Rev. E. B. Inslee and his family, formerly of the Ningpo mission, arrived in this country on the 11th of this month, after a tedious but safe voyage.

SIAM.

Letters have reached us from the new station at Petchaburi, under date of July 19th. The brethren had been greatly cheered in making the acquaintance of a man who appeared to be a true follower of our Saviour, and whose knowledge of the Christian religion had been derived solely from reading the religious publications of the mission press—having never before met with a missionary. See the particulars of this remarkable case in Mr. McFarland's letter, in another column.

INDIA.

Letters have been received from Allahabad, July 16th; Futtehgurh, July 19th; Dehra, August 16th; Landour, August 1st; Lodiana, July 4th; Lahor, August 17th; Peshawur, July 1st. We are glad to see that the terrible famine in the upper provinces was becoming less severe, but apprehensions of cholera were felt; at Lahor numerous cases had already occurred, and some cases at Saharunpur, Dehra, and Futtehgurh. The health of our brethren and their families, generally, was as good as usual. Mr. Scott had the pleasure of baptizing a young native doctor at Futtehgurh, and of receiving, also, to the communion of the church, another young man who had been baptized in infancy. Mr. Rudolph speaks of several inquirers at Lodiana, of some of whom he has good hopes. A number of orphan children had been thrown upon the hands of the missionaries by the famine; indeed they could not well be refused. Mr. Scott reports 15 boys and 12 girls thus received at Futtehgurh; at Lodiana the number of orphan girls had increased to 40; and at Saharunpur there was a considerable increase. The missionaries will endeavour to train up these poor children for Christ, and they may become useful labourers hereafter in his vineyard.

AFRICA.

Our letters are dated at Monrovia to August 27th, and at Corisco, July 18th. Mr. Mackey and his companions had safely arrived at Monrovia, on their way to Corisco. Mr. Clemens gives an interesting account of a communion service and a missionary meeting at one of the Corisco stations—see his letter in another column. Mrs. Clark, a sister of Mrs. Clemens, formerly Miss Jackson, of this mission, has lately arrived in this country on a visit for her health.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Our latest dates from Rio de Janeiro are August 7th, and Bogota, August 11th, mentioning the continued health of the missionaries, and their progress in their usual engagements. Public affairs in New Granada are spoken of as being still in an unsettled state.

INDIAN TRIBES.

We learn with much regret the death of Mrs. Young, wife of Mr. Robert Young, teacher at Spencer, on the 5th of September. She was supported to the last by Divine grace. Mr. Young will receive the sympathy of his Christian friends. He had succeeded with his child in returning to his home in the North; and Mr. W. S. Robertson, teacher among the Creeks, and his family, have also reached their friends in the North. In these and other cases, the journey has necessarily involved a considerable increase of expense as compared with travelling in ordinary times. Our letters from the Chippewa mission are dated to the 7th of September, and from the Orphan Institute, Iowa, September 13th, but they do not contain missionary news of special interest.

A LETTER OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The following Circular Letter was sent out about a month ago. We insert it here for the perusal of all our readers. It shows how the Board stands, financially; and how the Missions stand, in a general view of their work. It will call forth thanksgiving. We trust it will also have some good influence on the continued, and especially on the general, support of this cause by our churches. This is what we want. It is not any new plans. It is the warm, earnest, believing, praying coöperation of all our Christian brethren. God grant this! It will be borne in mind, we trust, that the far larger part of the collections of the churches is made in the remaining months of the year—which ends, as usual, on the 30th of April.

Mission House, 23 Centre Street,
New York, Sept. 19, 1861.

To the Ministers and Elders of the Presbyterian Church:

Dear Brethren—We ask your consideration of the following statements concerning the Foreign Missionary work of our Church. We make them under a deep conviction that this cause is now passing through a most critical year of its history.

With one great exception, the missions are in a condition not less encouraging and full of interest than they were when the Annual Report of the Board was prepared, nearly five months ago. The exception is that of the Indian missions in the territory lying between the States of Arkansas and Texas. These missions have been in a great measure broken up by the lamentable state of things in the Southern part of our country. We must humbly recognise the will of God, in permitting this destruction of precious interests by wicked men; but we may feel grateful that many lessons of gospel truth have been learned by hundreds of Indian youths, and that many souls have been led to the Saviour—almost the only signs of hope in the present condition of these tribes. In the other Indian missions; in Liberia and Corisco; in India, Siam, China, and Japan; in New Granada and Brazil; among the Chinese in California, and the Jews in our chief Atlantic city; and among the Roman Catholic populations of several countries in Europe—the work supported or aided by the Board still enjoys the favour of God;—doors of usefulness are still open by his providence, and tokens of the presence of the Holy Spirit are still afforded, to encourage our missionary brethren in their labours. We wish, dear brethren, to convey to your minds strongly our own impression, that this cause, viewed in its general aspects, is GOING FORWARD. It is not stationary, much less is it going backward, so far as we can judge. It is calling for continued and increased vigour in its support. It never before promised more blessed results to them that are ready to perish, nor greater glory to God. And this is only what our faith ought to expect, in the view of the prophecies and promises of sacred Scripture.

Keeping all this clearly in view, we next wish to state briefly the financial condition of the Board. And here we would first ask you to join with us in thanks to God, that some of his people have been inclined and enabled to add largely to their usual gifts to this cause, so as to enable the Committee to send out several new men to different fields of labour, where their services are greatly needed; and others among our friends have also been enabled to increase their usual donations, so as to supply in a good degree the unavoidable deficiencies, in this respect, of other Christian brethren, who have met with reverses in these sad times, but whose sympathies and prayers will still be enjoyed, and are most highly valued. We are glad to be able to state that, in the four months of the current year, ending on the 1st instant, there was a falling off in the receipts from the churches of but $728, in the parts of our country to which these missions must now look mainly for support;* the aggregate deficiency in all sources of income, including legacies, in these four months, was $7,244, of which $3,242 must be credited to Southern account.

The missions in all cases are placed under carefully restricted estimates, and, in some cases, under reduced allowances; the expenses of executive supervision are on a reduced scale; the smaller expense for the Southwestern Indian missions will partly offset the withdrawal of donations in the South; the new missionaries go out on the additional funds given for this purpose; and the general result is this—that the expenditures of the Board are carefully conducted, with reference at once to the state of the missions, the special leadings of Providence and of the Spirit of God, and the lamentable condition of our beloved country.

Standing on this ground, we think it may be stated confidently that, if our churches generally will do what they can for this cause, the financial year of the Board will end free from embarrassment. On the other hand, we think it is certain that a heavy debt will result from the neglect of the usual collections in our churches.

We desire earnestly to press this state of the case upon your attention, dear brethren, with reference to your own charge. We know the difficulty in many instances of making the usual collections, and we know also that some of our warmest friends are not now able to send their usual gifts to the treasury of the Lord. But in other instances the pecuniary means of our people are not diminished; in some, they are increased; and in the case of each and all, this clearly ought to be done—to ask each one to give as the Lord hath prospered him. We feel assured if this is done, in reference to the cause for whose interests we are set to watch, that we shall be enabled to call on you, and the church at large, to give thanks unto God for the safety and success of our cherished missions, so far as pecuniary support is concerned. If this is not done, we see before them the most gloomy prospects. The missionary labourers cannot turn to any other quarter for their own support, or for the support of their work. Further retrenchment would be only disastrous. A heavy debt at the end of the year would also be disastrous. But we will hope for better things, by the blessing of God.

We need not add, dear brethren, that we should all recognise our dependence on the favour of God in this missionary cause. In these times, as you will readily believe, the members of the Committee have felt deeply impressed by the peril to which the interests of the missions seem to be exposed, and we have felt most anxious to be guided by wisdom from on high. We would therefore ask your prayers for the Committee, as well as for our missionary brethren and for all the interests of this cause.

On behalf of the Executive Committee, yours very truly,

WILLIAM W. PHILLIPS, Chairman.

MISSION IN CHINA.

A VISIT TO NANKING, CHINA.

Dr. McCartee sends us the following narrative of a very interesting journey up the great river of China to the city of Nanking. It was written after his return to his station at Ningpo, June 27th, 1861.

Requested to act as Interpreter—A Chinese Viceroy.

Our Chargé des Affaires, Flag Officer Stribling, sent the United States steamer Saginaw to Ningpo, with a request to me to accompany him in the capacity of interpreter to the United States Legation, on an expedition to Nanking, Hankow, and other places upon the river Yangtsze, now opened to foreign trade by the recent treaties at Peking. The mission having formally expressed themselves satisfied as to the desirability of my consenting to act, I left Ningpo for Shanghai on the 19th of April. At the latter place we were detained eleven days, during which time I was busily employed in translating and copying documents to be sent to the Viceroy of the Two-Kiang, who is now the Imperial Commissioner for Foreign Affairs. Having occasion to call upon his Excellency with the documents in question, I found him living in the city of Shanghai, in quarters altogether destitute of any appearance of style or luxury, as both Nanking and Souchow were in possession of the insurgents. He was very courteous, but cold, and wore an anxious look, and was by no means as cordial or communicative as I found him upon my return from the Yangtsze. We left Shanghai on Tuesday, April 30th, and reached it on our return on May 26th, having in the meantime visited five provinces and six cities, and penetrated nearly one thousand miles into the interior of China.

The Yangtsze, the Mississippi of China—Chinkiang—Desolation of war.

The Yangtsze is certainly a noble river, comparing advantageously even with the "Father of Rivers," the Mississippi itself, according to the testimony of many of those in the squadron who had seen both. From Chinkiang (the first open port above Shanghai) all the way to the Tongting lake in Hunan province, it preserves a width never less than three-quarters of a mile, and although islands occasionally occur which render the channel narrow, the river again frequently spreads out into a lake, surrounded by hills well adorned with verdure; and the beauty of the scenery is so well sustained throughout its whole length, that it called forth constant expressions of admiration and pleasure from every one who had the least susceptibility to such things. I have never seen such an uninterrupted continuity of pleasing landscape and fertile soil in any part of the world that I have visited.

The city of Chinkiang, which we first visited, was in the hands of the Imperialists, who were then besieged by the insurgents. Ruined houses and heaps of rubbish remaining to mark the sites of former mansions and temples; miserable hovels, filled with squalid people, whose lives were all that remained to them for a prey after the devastation wrought first by insurgents, and then repeated by the Imperialist forces in their turn; coarse and brutal-looking soldiers passing to and fro; an occasional headless trunk, and anon a trunkless head, carried in the hands of the executioner, or hanging against a wall, with the fresh blood still dripping from it, and a label placarded beside it, to say that the poor wretch to whom it had belonged was executed as being (or suspected of being, which is the same) a spy; and the whole view of the desolation and misery inflicted by civil war soon satiated us with Chinkiang, and caused some of us, in heaviness of heart, to pray, God save our native land from such scenes as this.

Nanking visited—Dreadful destruction of life—A passport obtained.

Nanking, once a palatial city, a residence of mighty kings, but now looking like a desolation of many generations, was the next city we visited. If I should attempt to compare the situations of the people at these two places, I should say that those at Chinkiang were like persons in all the agonies of a shipwreck; while those at Nanking were like those left floating in silent despair upon the surface of the ocean, after the ship has gone down—when even the excitement of despair is past. Just opposite to Nanking, across the Yangtsze, was once a large and populous city called Kiang-yiu. We saw the city walls still standing, but perfect solitude reigns within. The inhabitants submitted to the insurgents after they took Nanking. They were compelled to deliver up their crops to the insurgents, and were put upon rations. These were served out scantily, and in insufficient quantities to support life. They murmured, and threatened to apply to the Imperialists. The insurgents heard of it, and one day the sun went down upon the corpses of seventeen thousand people, who the day before were in the midst of life. Some fifteen thousand escaped to the Imperialist camp, but the city has lain desolate ever since.

Nanking is situated upon a rising ground, a short distance from the bank of the river. A small low island lies off the city, and is separated from it by a narrow channel, with which is connected a creek running up toward the city, and joining the city moat. On the island, and at the mouth of the creek, fortifications have been erected to defend the city from any attack from the river. In one of these forts is the "Heavenly Custom House," where "His Excellency" Liang (with a long title and a military command of one hundred and seventy thousand troops, as they told me) resides, although in not much state. I went on shore and asked Mr. Liang to grant a passport, and provide horses and a sedan for a party of five officers, who wished to go to the "Heavenly City," to the palace of King Tsan, upon public business. "His Excellency" was not visible, but the man who seemed to act as his secretary promised that all should be in readiness as desired, at eight o'clock, A. M., on the morrow.

A Walk, and what was seen in it.
